"Such fines, in our opinion, would be more practical of enforcement than the jail penalties which have been proposed in the deportation bill introduced in the House at the last session. But whatever the means, it is particularly fitting at this time, when strenuous organized measures are being taken throughout the country to suppress crime, that no efforts be spared to deport every alien who enters this country surreptitiously and who by this very act violates the first law he encounters at our threshold."

Bryant Park Memory Garden Asked by Gold Star Mothers

The Gold Star Mothers' Association of America suggested yesterday through Mrs. Harmon A. Vedder, its President, that Bryant Park, in Sixth Avenue from Forty-second to Fortieth Street, be turned into a "Garden of Memory" for the 5,000 New Yorkers who died in the World War.

"It has been suggested," she said, "that a cloister might be built around the park with wide paths leading from Sixth Avenue and the side streets to a simple altar at the rear of the library. Double rows of shade trees on both sides of the main paths, pools, fountains and well-kept grass plots, would add beauty to the whole city, and every person passing would be reminded of the glorious sacrifice of our sons.

"It would be fitting to have the altar built of the city rock, with no emblem or decoration other than the text, 'Greater love hath no man than this that he lay down his life for his friends.'"

BLOODED CAT HERE IN SPECIAL CABIN

Mimi's Owner, Arriving From Italy, Forced to Prove It Was Born in This Country.

Mimi, a blue-ribbon, also a blue-blooded cat, which had a special compartment on the Lloyd Sabaudo liner, Conte Rosso, arriving f. Naples yesterday, was required by Government authorities to furnish proof that it was born in America. Its owner, Miss Matje Rossi, sensed trouble when an official of the Bureau of Animal Industric cast a doubtful look at the fastidious cat.

"I had to exhibit an affidavit that Mimi was born in the United States, before he was permitted to leave the ship," she said.

News of Mussolini was the first thing for which the officers and crew of the Conte Rosso asked after their ship was warped into her dock by six tugs. Chief Purser Arnaldo Vassalo said that the crew and passengers learned by wireless of the attempted assassination of the Italian Premier just after th: ship sailed. They hear' that the wound was only slight when they received a radio at mid night on April 7, and they straightway held a celebration. The attempt on the life of Mussolini had greatly depressed both crew and passengers, according to the Purser.

Miriam Saint, 20 years old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. R. Saint, 235 West 102d Street, who made her début as a singer in Naples last June, returned home on the Conte Rosso, and suggested that American singers should specialize in light opera.

Theron Strong, former Assistant District Attorney of New York, came home asserting that he had penetrated the furthest reaches of the Nile, and that he was surprised to find that even the dullest native was informed of the Egyptian Government's hesitation to accept the $10,000,000 gift of John D. Rockefeller to establish a great Egyptian museum.

The Conte Rosso brought 1,044 passengers, including 744 in the first and 278 in the second cabin.

Copenhagen Flier Reaches Canton.

CANTON, China, April 17 (AP).—Lieutenant Botved, Danish aviator, flying from Copenhagen to Tokio, arrived here today. He reported delays because of heavy rains. The plane of Lieutenant Herschend, who started from Copenhagen with Lieutenant Botved, was wrecked in a forced landing near Rangoon, Burma, on April 3.

'GODDESS' OF DOLLAR, PHILADELPHIAN, DIES

Miss Anna W. Williams Gave Profile of Liberty to American Coin.

TRIED TO HIDE HER IDENTITY

She Refused Theatrical Offers and Spent Her Life in Kindergarten Work.

PHILADELPHIA, April 17 (AP).—Miss Anna W. Williams, a retired public school teacher, whose profile as the "Goddess of Liberty" is stamped on the silver dollar, died at her home today.

She was 68 years old.

Miss Williams's hip was broken last December and she had been confined to her bed ever since. Death was due to apoplexy. She had lived with her niece, Miss Catherine C. Williams, since her retirement in 1924.

Miss Williams was principal of the Girls' School at the House of Refuge here when she was chosen, in 1876, to be the model for the goddess upon the silver dollar. Her profile was considered the most perfect that could be found at the time.

It was with great difficulty, however, that she was prevailed upon to give sittings to the artist. Only upon condition that her identity should not be revealed would Miss Williams consent to have her likeness stamped upon the new silver dollar the Treasury had decided to mint.

Remained Incognito Two Years.

For two years the incognito of "Miss Liberty," the woman's face on the dollar, remained a secret in the keeping of the Government and the artist.

A Philadelphia newspaper man revealed that Miss Williams was the "Silver Dollar Girl."

Then came offers of stage engagements, all of which Miss Williams rejected. She consented, for $60 a month, to teach at the House of Refuge until she accepted, in 1891, the position of teacher of kindergarten philosophy in the Girls' Normal School.

The story of how Miss Williams came to be the model has not been told often. She was besieged for the story many times, but in later years she smilingly referred to it as "an incident of my youth," and preferred to talk of her work in the kindergarten schools of the city which she supervised.

Miss Williams was born in Philadelphia. Her mother was a Southerner, the daughter of Dr. Arthur N. Willess of Maryland. His daughter married Henry Williams of Philadelphia and came with him to this city.

When she became the model, Miss Williams's complexion was fair, her eyes blue, her nose Grecian and her hair, which was almost her crowning glory, was of golden color, abundant in quantity and light of texture. It was worn in a becoming soft coil.

Was Suggested by Artist.

In 1876 George Morgan, an expert designer and engraver, was assigned to the duty of preparing the new design for a silver dollar that was to be minted at Philadelphia. Thomas Eakins, a Philadelphia artist, was a friend of both Mr. Morgan and Miss Williams's family, and he had been thrown into contact with the young girl often while she was an art student. It was at Mr. Eakins's suggestion that Mr. Morgan and Miss Williams's friends finally prevailed upon her to pose for the profile that was to go upon the face of the new dollar.

The sittings took place at the home of Mr. Eakins in November, 1876. It was some time later that the cap with its sheath was decided upon as the ornamentation for the head.

Then came the stories that the engraver had put so much of his own soul into his work that he fairly worshipped his ideal and that the romance would end as it always does. These stories proved to be the product of romantic imaginations, for Miss Williams continued at her work in the kindergartens, the work in which she found her greatest joy in life.

NOBLETT, SUSPECT IN SWINDLE, EVICTED

His Furniture Removed From Apartment on Drive as He Awaits Trial in Tombs.

More trouble developed yesterday for Edwin Arden Noblett, former convict, who was indicted last week for theft. Noblett, who lured some of his victims through fraudulent advertisements, is now in the Tombs in default of $35,000 bail, which was fixed by Judge Francis X. Mancuso in General Sessions when the alleged swindler was arraigned on an indictment charging theft as a second offender.

The new trouble for Noblett came when his household goods were evicted from the apartment he has maintained for eight years at 131 Riverside Drive. City Marshal Morris Lorea supervised the transfer of the household effects from the apartment to the sidewalk.

The warrant of eviction was obtained from Municipal Court Justice Thomas J. Whalen in the Fifth District Court, 3,563 Broadway, upon the application of Addison Bleign, representing Wood, Dolson Company, real estate dealers and directors of the Riverside Drive apartment. W. H. Dolson, through the attorney, told the Court that his firm had made repeated efforts to get Noblett out of the house, but that he had frustrated their efforts by refuge in the emergency rent laws.

Noblett, who had been convicted twice in the past as a fake stock salesman, also dealt in the subleasing of apartments. THE NEW YORK TIMES and The World cooperated with the authorities in running Noblett down.

The specific charge upon which Noblett was indicted was made by Stephen Bourne of 136 East Sixty-seventh Street, who charged that Noblett had duped him out of $550 which Bourne had paid as two months' rent on the Riverside Drive apartment. Chief Assistant District Attorney Pecora conducted an investigation and former Assistant District Attorney Richard Murphy put the evidence before the Grand Jury.

Noblett's trial is scheduled for Wednesday before Judge Morris Koenig in General Sessions. If convicted he may get a twenty-year sentence.

Walter Leaf Tells Germans 'Lesson Has Sunk In' Since Brussels Commerce Meeting.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ESSEN, Germany, April 17.—Walter Leaf, President of the International Chamber of Commerce, addressing an important group of German industrialists here today on the necessity of economic peace in Europe, declared that the best business minds are agreed that no nation can at once close its frontiers to the receipt of goods and at the same time obtain the payment of debts due to it on a large scale.

"Since the Brussels congress of the International Chamber public opinion has moved," said Mr. Leaf. "We made it our business to bring before the world at the Brussels meeting a fact familiar to all of us who have the conduct of international business, namely, that it is impossible to transfer large sums of money from one nation to the other except by an interchange of goods.

"This lesson is necessary, but to an ordinary man who has no knowledge of finance it is extremely disagreeable.

"If the first suggestion aroused much resentment, the lesson has since sunk in. It was a step in advance that the existence of the problem should be recognized and that the public should be forced to think about it."

The dangers of irresponsible overproduction in times of prosperity were also discussed by Mr. Leaf, who predicted that European business would soon have to establish an organization which would steady the output of all countries to the end that production may be controlled and something given up in times of boom in order to recover it in times of slump.

Declares It Is the Centre of a Great Deal of Our Trouble Today.

CRITICIZES WOMEN'S DRESS

Flood of Congratulatory Messages Received by the Retired Pastor on His Birthday.

Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, famous campaigner for civic welfare when he was pastor of the Madison Square Presbyterian Church, celebrated his eighty-fourth birthday yesterday. In his suite at Marbury Hall Hotel, 164 West Seventy-fourth Street, where congratulatory messages poured in all day, he told of how after a long life of activity, he was still keeping in touch with public affairs.

"There are so many matters of tremendous interest these days," said the former censor of things municipal, whose strictures years ago produced the Lexow investigation and the reforms that followed in its wake, "that one person cannot master them all. The thought that comes to me now, on my birthday, is that a man's friends are his best treasures. I don't think I have made many enemies in my time, because what I accomplished was for the interest of the public and not for myself.

"This leads me to the thought that the reason the young people of today do not develop better is because of too much introspection, too much thinking about themselves. A man does not grow except as he turns his vision outwardly and lets his interest loose on things about him. As a country we are suffering, I believe, from this introspection, limiting its thought to itself.

"There are thousands of young men who are going to colleges to benefit themselves without thinking of the benefit of the future that which he to the times that are coming after. Of course a man needs to look back to get the benefit of the men who lived before, but he must utilize for the benefit of the feature that which he has received from the past."

Home the Problem, He Says.

After touching on his recent statement in which he opposed the present prohibition law, and held that present excesses in drinking had much to do with the prevalence of crime, Dr. Parkhurst declared that New York's crime wave was simply a part of the greater problem that confronts the United States in the present and future of this country.

"This problem," he continued, "is the fact that the home has ceased to be the central point of America's child life. The modern home is the fountain of a great deal of trouble, from youthful and adult mischief to youthful and adult crime.

"The children of the present day lack the home sense, and this is due to the parents themselves. It was a human and spiritual attraction that formerly held children to the home, and through it an influence developed in their young years to remain through life. There was not only that moral and religious influence which used to constitute the reality of home, but the parents in many homes, especially New England homes, early embued the minds, the intelligence of their children with earnest and true thinking. In this way children were formerly protected from the intruding influences that were false, silly, unclean.

"The extent of crime among young people today is not so much due to the fact of an increase in the temptations that exist—there are more temptations for all than there used to be—but it is because young people, both boys and girls, have not been under the influence that fortifies them against the intrusion of temptations.

Cites Some Influences.

"Today's children are not becoming little men and women while still in the home circle; the seeds of young manhood and young womanhood are not being sown by the parents. Consequently, the young generation moves out into public life, full of temptations as outward life always is, lacking that intellectual, moral, spiritual guerdon that guarantees them against the contacts encountered outside the home.

"The distractions of outside life today tend to produce a quality of character that is unsettled, unestablished. Added to these factors are the impure and unclean forces that are to be found especially in such a city as New York. Our literature, our cheap magazines, our pictures that feed the animal side, the unclean presentations in many of our films and plays are influences that give a sense of sex that is not good for any of us, least of all for the younger generation."

Dr. Parkhurst then referred to the present style in dress, which he said was essentially debasing because it appealed to "elements in the male nature that cannot afford to be nursed by the constancy of presentation now prevailing. Uncleanliness," he continued, "no matter what form it takes, is a fatal enemy not only to purity but to strength and majesty of character."

He said the young people were not to blame, but rather to be pitied, as nothing would count effectively until we got more earnest, sincere homes and parents.

STUDENT RINGS FAKE ALARM

Columbia Man Fined—Caught as Fire Apparatus Comes Along.

Accused of sending in a false alarm of fire, William L. Story, 20 years old, a student at Columbia University, who gave his address as 727 Livingston Hall, was arrested at 2:30 o'clock yesterday morning at 116th Street and Broadway. He pleaded guilty when arraigned before Magistrate George W. Simpson and was fined $25.

A series of false alarms had been sent from fireboxes in the neighborhood of 116th Street and Broadway in the last few weeks and policemen were on the lookout for the guilty person. Story walked away from a firebox and was halted by Patrolman Quinn. A few minutes later fire apparatus rolled up.

HERRIN WITNESSES TESTIFY SECRETLY

Fear of Attack Forces Coroner to Close Inquest Into Election Killings.

Special to The New York Times.

HERRIN, Ill., April 17.—Witnesses called to testify at the inquest into last Tuesday's killings refused today to tell what they knew unless their names and the nature of their testimony be withheld from publication. They told Coroner George Bell they were afraid something might happen to them if what they testified became generally known.

The coroner asked newspaper men to leave the inquiry. He made the request after a short consultation with State's Attorney Arlie Boswell, who agreed that the press must be barred.

"We regret we are forced to close this inquiry to the newspapers," Coroner Bell said, "but if we are to get at the truth of these killings we must have witnesses who are unafraid. With conditions as they are in Williamson County we already have the question of prejudice on one side or the other to deal with and we must certainly avoid the element of fear as much as possible."

It is understood that the testimony was simply that of eyewitnesses of the shooting in which three Klansmen and three anti-Klansmen fell before the polling place here.

DISMISSES PETROVA'S SUIT.

Appellate Division Hold Service in Slander Charge Is Invalid.

Olga Petrova's $100,000 action for alleged slander against William Henry Roberts, a London playwright, was dismissed yesterday by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in Brooklyn, on the ground that service of the summons and complaint upon Roberts was invalid. Supreme Court Justice Edward Riegelmann in Brooklyn had ruled that the service was valid. The decision of the higher court was on the appeal by Roberts.

The Appellate Division agreed with the contention of Roberts that service of the complaint was not effective because it was made while he was attending court in the trial of his suit against Olga Petrova, charging plagiarism. In this suit Roberts recovered a jury verdict in New York County for $7,500 against the actress.

Mme. Petrova based her action on statements alleged to have been made by Roberts in connection with his suit against her, in which he charged she had taken material from his play of "La Rubia" and had included it in a play of her own.

MRS. GOLDREICH WINS SUIT.

Health Instructor Found Guilty of Misconduct—To Pay $50 a Month.

An interlocutory decree of divorce filed in the County Clerk's office yesterday in favor of Mrs. Marie J. Goldreich of New Zittau, Germany, against Armand J. Goldreich, also known as "Professor A. M. Sullivan," physical culture teacher with a studio at 667 Madison Avenue, finds Goldreich guilty of misconduct with Ella Dumke at 52 East Ninety-sixth Street between 1920 and 1924. The Court dismisses the divorce action by Goldreich against his wife on the ground of misconduct in Germany.

While the Goldreich case was pending, affidavits were filed asserting that Mrs. Beatrice W. Flagler, widow of John H. Flagler, capitalist, and Goldreich had gone to Europe together on the steamship Deutschland in the Summer of 1924, occuping adjoining rooms, and that they had returned together on the same vessel. It was also alleged that Goldreich had been an occupant of the apartment leased by Mrs. Flagler at 1,160 Fifth Avenue.

When the case was referred to Robert Lee Morrell as referee no testimony was offered by counsel for Mrs Goldreich involving Mrs. Flagler. Goldreich is directed to pay only $50 a month alimony because of testimony that his earnings have decreased of late, although at one time he earned more than $5,000 a year. He is said to have been athletic instructor of members of the German royal family at one time.

SCRIPPS'S YACHT HERE.

The Late Publisher, Who Died Aboard the Ohio, Was Buried at Sea.

The yacht Ohio arrived in New York yesterday, after her owner, the late Edward W. Scripps, head of the Scripps-Howard newspapers, had been buried at sea. Mr. Scripps died while the craft was cruising in Monrovia Bay, Liberia, several weeks ago. He had lived practically in seclusion aboard the Ohio.

So intent was he upon living quietly that the decks of his yacht were paddled and the motors made as nearly sound-proof as possible. His body was buried at sea in accordance with his expressed wish, explained in sealed orders he left for his secretary. His heirs and executors have not indicated what disposition they will make of the yacht.

CHINA'S PREMIER QUITS; TAKES BLAME FOR COUP

Cabinet Dismisses General Lu—Chang's Agents Enter Peking and Wait for Wu's Men.

PEKING, April 17 (AP).—Premier Chi Teh-yao has resigned, blaming himself for negligence in connection with the Kuominchun coup of last Saturday, when the National Armies deposed President Tuan Chi-jui.

The Cabinet has dismissed General Lu Chung-lin, the Nationalist commander, from all his posts.

Under the direction of a non-partisan committee of ten men, of whom six are former Premiers, the city is calmly awaiting the arrival here of Young Chang Hsueh-Liang, who represents Chang Tao-lin, his father, and Chang Tsung-chang, Governor of Shantung, the dominant factors since the Kuominchun (National Armies) evacuated the capital.

The "victors" are momentarily expected, as are representatives of Marshal Wu Pei-fu, the Chihli War Lord, to confer with the civilian committee on the future of the Government of China.

The Committee of Ten, represented by Dr. W. W. Yen, a former Premier, assert their only purpose is to maintain order until a Government of some sort has been organized, after which the committee will automatically dissolve.

President Tuan Chi-jui left his retreat in the legation quarter and returned to his former residence and issued a proclamation to the effect that he has resumed the interrupted régime and that the Cabinet is functioning as before the coup.

There are no troops inside the walls, although Fengtien and Wu Pei-fu's troops are encamped outside the gates.

There have been only minor clashes between the retreating Kuominchun armies and Fengtien cavalry. The Kuominchun are continuing to withdraw beyond Nankow Pass.

POLICE AID MRS. BROWNING.

Keep Back Crowds of the Curious Who Jostle Her In Street.

Mrs. Frances Heenan Browning, who came into this city yesterday for another shopping tour, attracted so much attention late in the afternoon when she entered a West Thirty-eighth Street hat shop that three policemen were called to keep back the crowd. The 15-year-old bride of Browning, who is 51 years old, was closely hemmed in when she came out of the store.

The policemen, called from traffic posts, managed to get her safely into her automobile. The bride was jostled as she stepped into the car. Browning spent the day at work in his office at 153 West Seventy-second Street.

Results of Milk Seizures.

In discussing the results of the investigation in cooperation with Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City during the last three weeks, Dr. Harris said:

"Of seventy-seven samples of loose milk purchased in retail establishments in various parts of Jersey City and examined by our laboratory prior to the raid which was conducted last Friday morning, sixteen, or nearly 21 per cent., were found adulterated.

"Two samples had been watered so badly that the specific gravity instrument, known as the lactometer, sank to the bottom and did not register. There were not enough solids in the milk to sustain it. Four samples showed that they had been adulterated by the addition of water, but not so badly as the first two samples. Eight samples not only had water added but showed that the cream had been skimmed off. Two additional samples showed skimming only. Of thirteen samples of bottled milk, only one showed adulteration by the addition of water. This shows that our story of the rarity with which bottled milk is adulterated is well founded.

"There were ten samples of cream examined, four of them sweet cream and six sour cream. Every sample of sour cream was found below standard. The sweet cream was satisfactory. So that a total of 23 out of 100 samples of milk and cream examined prior to the raid showed suspicious adulteration.

"Of the eighty-five samples obtained in yesterday's raid only one was bad, indicating that there had either been a discovery on the part of the dealers of what was going on, or that they had tightened up in the observance of the law because of the exposures that have been made with reference to the milk situation.

"Mayor Hague's staff, working under Police Inspector Underwood, together with five inspectors of our staff, conducted this raid. Evidence was found, as on previous occasions, that cans of milk and cream were being delivered at Jersey City railroad terminals which bore no tags whatever, a practice which is entirely at variance with the rules and regulations and which would seem to indicate that any tag or label could be later affixed to make it appear that milk or cream from unapproved sources came properly from approved ones.

"Mayor Hague is now conducting an investigation along lines parallel to those which we have been following in New York City. When these are completed they will indicate which dealers were responsible for adulterated milk or cream, whether or not they had official protection, and especially whether or not tags were changed on cans coming from unapproved and insanitary places for tags that bore the names of approved sources.

Accuses Railroad Employes.

"There has been evidence to show that dealers who have been interested in smuggling through milk from unapproved sources have had railroad yard employes on their payrolls. I am now engaged in investigating the illegal sources of supply that come in from various points on Long Island or across the northern boundary of the City of New York."

District Attorney McGeehan of the Bronx conferred yesterday with Supreme Court Justice Levy, who is to address the Grand Jury there on the milk situation Tuesday concerning a new plan for pursuing the investigation. Although its details were not given out, it is said to be framed with a view to making public the evidence that is accumulating against the four men now held chiefly responsible for the extortion practiced upon dishonest milk dealers by former Health Department officials and the "master mind" of the conspiracy, who is said to be a former Hylan office holder and member of the bar.

As the Queens County Grand Jury sits but one day each week, and it is expected that next Tuesday's session will be entirely occupied with the evidence against the radio burglar ring, District Attorney Richard S. Newcombe said yesterday that the presentation of the results of his milk investigation might be held over until the following week.

HYLAN WON'T DISCUSS MILK.

Mayor Walker, Also at Atlantic City, Refuses to Comment.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, April 17.—Neither former Mayor John F. Hylan of New York City nor Mayor James J. Walker would make any comment here this evening upon the alleged milk graft plot in New York and New Jersey.

"I do not care to make any statement at this time," said Mr. Hylan, who is stopping at the Shelburne Hotel with Mrs. Hylan. "I do not think I had better say anything now, unless, of course, I am called off early to do so."

Mayor Walker, accompanied by his Secretary, Edward L. Stanton, Mrs. Stanton and several personal friends, arrived at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel for the week-end late in the afternoon.

Mayor Walker left the city early in the afternoon yesterday to pass the week-end in Atlantic City.

The Mayor has accepted an invitation to act as toastmaster at a beefsteak dinner which is to be given to Peter J. Higgins, a lifelong friend and associate, next Saturday evening, Apr 24, at Healy's Chamberlain Restaurant 120 Chambers Street. It is expected that about 400 neighborhood friends will be present. John Eagleton is Chairman of the Committee on Arrangements, while the Entertainment Committee is made up of James J. Frawley and Commissioner of Records John F. Curry. The party will be composed mainly of residents of Greenwich Village and the lower west side, which is the Mayor's home locality.

C. C. Pettijohn Calls Screen Foes Assassins of Character and Reputation of Citizens.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 17.—Opponents of the Upshaw and Swope bills providing that produ s of motion pictures shall be barred from shipping their wares in interstate commerce unless they have first obtained a Federal license, appeared today before the House Committee on Education. The bill provides that incident to the issuance of such licenses, films shall be carefully scrutinized by a Government commission to determine whether they conform to strict moral standards.

C. C. Pettijonn, general counsel, and Jack Connolly, Washington agent, spoke for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. The American Federation of Labor was represented by Edwin F. McGrady. Charles A. McMahon of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, Wilton Barrett of the National Board of Review and Miss Ruth Rich of the National Committee for Better Films, registered the opposition of those organizations to the principle of censorship contained in the Upshaw and Swope bills.

Replying to the charges that have been made beefore the committee that present-day motion pictures are of a type that tend to degrade the youth of the country, Mr. Pettijohn declared that it was becoming "more and more prevalent for certain individuals to indulge in the assassination of character and reputation of respectable citizens who refuse to bow to their 'superiority complex.'

Says Board Would Be Supermen.

"This bill," said Mr. Pettijohn, "calls for the establishment of another political board or commission within the Government, to be administered by non-existent supermen, described in such terms that even Canon Chase himself has been unable to interpret to your committee, but which he did say 'required such qualifications that even the President of the United States could not measure up to.'

"Let me state now and here, plainly and positively, what I know to be the position on censorship of every branch of the motion picture business. We are unalterably opposed to any censorship of the press, pulpit, motion pictures, radio, free speech, of the individual or any other known form of human expression. We should be held accountable for the violation of any law, only if and when that law is violated—and we have such laws on the statute books of every one of the forty-eight States and in the Federal and penal code."

Commenting on suggestions made by the Rev. William S. Chase of Brooklyn that the tone of motion pictures furnished to the navy were indecent and salacious, Mr. Connolly filed a statement on the subject prepared by the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department. This was to the effect that in the opinion of Admiral Robinson pictures furnished the fleet were considered well above the average in quality.

"Based upon reports from all commanding officers in the fleet," said the statement, "the Bureau of Navigation estimates that as a factor contributing to the recreation and contentment of the men motion pictures have a value of 42.6 per cent., athletics 26.4 per cent., libraries 15 per cent. and other factors 16 per cent. It has been found that not one in fifty of the pictures passed upon in Washington have had to be clipped in any way because of questionable features."

Mr. Grady and Mr. McMahon insisted that motion-picture censorship was not necessary, and that when approached by organizations interested the industry itself cooperated with a view to the production of films that would not offend moral standards. Like testimony was given by Mr. Barrett.

Sees Great Industry Crippled.

Miss Rich submitted statements from persons of prominence criticising the purposes sought by the Upshaw and Swope bills. Among those whom she cited as opposing the principle of motion-picture censorship proposed were Lester F. Scott of the Camp Fire Girls, Everett Dean Martin of the People's Institute of New York and Dr. George Kirchwey of the Department of of Criminology, New York School of Social Work. Dr. Kirchwey wrote in part:

"As a device for stunting and crippling what is at one and the same time a great industry, and a new and brilliant form of dramatic art, nothing better could be conceived than the Upshaw bill. Its rate regulation feature is a crude violation of the most elementary principles of free competition in the marketing of intellectual wares, and its censorship feature raises this reactionary and un-American practice of standardizing literature and art from a local to a national insult to the intelligence of the American people."

GIRLS HELD AS AIDS OF KOERBER GANG

Three, Accused in the Hold-Up of a Chinese Restaurant, Are Refused Bail.

Despite the fact that witnesses failed to identify them as the girls who participated with members of the Koerber robber gang in the hold-up of a Chinese restaurant at Third Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street on the night of March 11 last, Mrs. Nora Green, 21 years old, and Kitty and Mary Kraus, sisters, 17 and 19 respectively, were held without bail for the action of the Grand Jury on arraignment yesterday before Magistrate Edward Weil in the Harlem Court. The girls waived examination when Detective Emil Mach of the East Sixty-seventh Street Station, who rounded up the Koerber band, told the Magistrate that they had confessed to an Assistant District Attorney and himself when they were being held as material witnesses in Queens in connection with the slaying of a Jamaica restaurant owner by Herbert Koerber, awaiting the execution of a death sentence in Sing Sing.

Mrs. Green is the wife of James Green, now serving a twenty-year term in Sing Sing for his part in the killing of the restaurant owner in a hold-up. Kitty Kraus is the sweetheart of John Koerber, brother of the convicted slayer, who is in the Tombs awaiting trial for the Chinese restaurant robbery. Her sister, at their first arraignment before Magistrate Weil, denied that she was the sweetheart of Herbert Koerber.

Wing Bo Sun and Sing Long Lo, proprietors of the Third Avenue restaurant, who had identified John Koerber as the youth who threatened them with a pistol while his confederates took $100 and a gold watch and chain from them, told the Magistrate that they could not identify the three girls as those who were with the robbers. Charles Stransky, a taxicab chauffeur, also failed to recognize them as the girls whom he drove away from the place as the robbery was in progress.

"The case against these girls is weak, in view of the failure of the victims to identify them," said Magistrate Weil, "but because of their statements to the detective I will have to hold them for the Grand Jury."

In asking that bail be denied the girls Assistant District Attorney Paul Hao said: "Women are getting off too frequently in cases like this. They should be placed on an equal footing with men. If it hadn't been for girls like these, most of the present-day robberies would not have been perpetrated."

To Give $65,000 Portrait to Italy.

The "Energetic Portrait of a Sicilian Patrician in Ecclesiastical Costume," by Antonella da Messina, a fifteenth century painter, which was sold on Friday evening at the American Art Galleries for $65,000 to David W. Walker, a private collector, is to be presented to the Italian Government as a permanent gift for one of its museums.

MILLS, ACCUSED, DROPS CLAIMS BILL

ner said that was one of the reasons why in yesterday's debate he had directed attention to the committee hearings.

Says 25 Members Are Interested.

"I especially called your attention to Sections 3 and 4 of the bill," said Mr. Garner. "I do not doubt that there are twenty-five members in the House who, under the rules, would not be permitted to vote on this particular bill.

"As quick as I found out from definite information that the gentleman from New York, Mr. Mills, was interested, I felt it my duty to call his attention to it. When I did he expressed surprise, and said he did not know that they had a claim or an award under the Mixed Claims Commission, and if that was true, he would not take any further action with reference to the bill.

"I want to commend the gentleman from New York and all other European of the House who will investigate and excuse themselves if they find they have a special interest in it.

"I do want to make this remark, however: The Secretary of the Treasury, so far as I can ascertain, and I think I have conclusive evidence, is a stockholder in five different firms which have had an award from the Mixed Claims Commission amounting to something over a million dollars. The Secretary of the Treasury, according to the record, is the gentleman who made up this bill. He says that the President has examined it and is anxious that it shall become a law.

"I mention this to illustrate the situation that I think is characteristic of some gentlemen who occupy seats on the majority side of the House—I do not want to make a partisan speech—and that this service of the Government must be used to make money. That is what the Secretary of the Treasury seems to think, that the Government is for the purpose of making money, and legalizing theft makes it honorable to take the money. I do not think so, and I do not think the minority side of the House will come to that conclusion when you examine the case."

Asks What the Bill Does.

"What does this bill do?" questioned Representative Martin B. Madden of Illinois, Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee.

"It is to pay the awards of the Mixed Claims Commission which found that Germany owes the firms involved certain sums of money, and this bill proposes to take the money out of the Treasury in payment," replied Mr. Garner. "We have an agreement that Germany shall pay her own debts, and I am in favor of her carrying it out."

Representative Frank R. Crowther of New York asked Mr. Garner what he meant by the use of the words "legalized theft."

"What is there to show that there is any theft here?" he inquired.

At this point Mr. Garner's time expired, and as the discussion then ended, Mr. Garner did not have an opportunity to reply to Mr. Crowther.

There was a good deal of comment here as to the probable effect of today's developments on the prospective candidacy of Representative Mills for the Republican nomination for Governor. His friends in the New York delegation contended that the affair would not injure him in the slightest. On the other hand, it was asserted by Democrats that Mr. Mills's advocacy of a bill in which he had an indirect personal interest could be used with telling effect, despite his action in acknowledging that he is a stockholder in one of the firms interested in a settlement with Germany, and in withdrawing his name from further consideration in connection with the measure.

Says Standard Oil Would Benefit.

According to a statement made by Mr. Garner after the House debate the Standard Oil Company would benefit to the extent of $12,000,000 under the Mills bill. Mr. Garner takes the position that this bill, if enacted, would cost American taxpayers about $190,000,000, with the probability of no reimbursement to the Treasury.

"The bill is dead, at least for the present," said Mr. Garner. "Even if reported by the Ways and Means Committee, I am satisfied it would be beaten in the House. The plan is a bad one from an American point of view and should never have been presented for our consideration."

Representative Mills had a short conference with Secretary Mellon late in the afternoon, following the attack made by Mr. Garner on the Administration's bill. No statement was authorized by Mr. Mellon, who, it is understood, did not know that any corporations with which he is connected had any claims against the German Government.

Mr. Mellon has an interest in the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, which had a plant destroyed in Belgium, and this corporation, and perhaps the Gulf Oil Company, may have been awarded damages by the Mixed Claims Commission. If these and other corporations in which Secretary Mellon has holdings were awarded damages by the commission, it is pointed out, they received the same treatment as did other American corporations.

MAN STOPPING AUTO IS HELD AS FRAUD

Charged With Posing as State Motor Vehicle Inspector and Trying "Shake-Down."

POLICEMAN THE ACCUSER

Tells Court Man Halted Brother, Who Telephoned Him — Prisoner Had Gun and License for It.

Frank Mastri, 40 years old, who said he was a licensed State detective and lived at 724 Myrtle Avenue, Brooklyn, was held in $1,000 bail for examination in the Essex Market Court next Friday, when he pleaded not guilty last night before Magistrate Richard F. McKiniry in the Night Court, to impersonating a State Motor Vehicle Inspector.

Mastri was arrested late yesterday afternoon at Second Avenue and Fourteenth Street by Traffic Patrolman Thomas A. Smith on the complaint of the patrolman's brother, James J. Smith of 244 East Twentieth Street. The patrolman said in court that Mastri tried to escape in an automobile, but was recaptured after a chase in which the patrolman used his brother's car.

The brother of the patrolman said he was driving on Second Avenue, when Mastri cut him off with his car, and ordered him to pull in to the curb. There, Smith continued, Mastri informed him that he was a motor vehicle inspector and that he would have to arrest Smith for having faulty license plates. Smith knew that his brother, the patrolman, was at home, and obtained Mastri's consent, he said, to telephone to "a friend."

The patrolman said in court that James, in telling him of the arrest, said that he suspected Mastri was an imposter. Patrolman Smith was about to report for duty and he hurried to the corner in uniform. He pretended not to know his brother as he approached Mastri and asked him, "what the trouble was about."

"This fellow has faulty license plates and I'm going to lock him up," the patrolman quoted Mastri as saying. The patrolman alleged that he asked the man by what authority he was making the arrest, and Mastri pulled a ogid badge out of his pocket with the word "detective" in raised letters. The ptarolman said he noticed, however, that it was not the kind of badge carried by motor vehicle inspectors and that Mastri kept his thumb over the top letters, which later proved to be "licensed by the State of New York."

"Why don't you serve a summons on him?" Patrolman Smith said he asked Mastri.

"Well, I just want to lock him up," was the reply.

The patrolman said that when he demanded that Mastri hand his badge over to him for inspection, the man grabbed him by the arm and took him aside. According to the patrolman, Mastri said, "I haven't got a summons with me, but maybe it won't be necessary to take him to the station; maybe we can get $5 out of him, and we'll divide it."

Patrolman Smith he slipped $5 to his brother, and told him to give it to Mastri if he demanded it. Mastri overheard the remark, the policeman said, and jumping into his automobile, drove off with the two Smiths in pursuit.

"This fellow had a pistol in his pocket," said the patrolman as he was leaving court," but he produced a license to carry it, which also revealed that he was a licensed private detective. Some fellow has been going around in an automobile shaking down motorists, and I'm going to investigate Mastri further."

J. A. MOORE QUITS HEARST.

President of New York American Silent on Reasons and Plans.

Joseph A. Moore announced yesterday his resignation from the office of President of the New York American, Inc., publishers of The New York American. At the same time Mr. Moore resigned as Treasurer of a number of other publications and organizations controlled by William Randolph Hearst.

It was reported that Mr. Moore would enter the magazine publishing business, but he would not make any comment on this statement, nor would he say the reason for severing his connection with the Hearst organization.

DJAMI MS. BRINGS $14,000 AT A SALE

H. Kevorkian Gets Rare Poetical Works From Chiesa Collection.

PLATE SOLD FOR $2,500

Receipts at Final Session Are $80,306, Making Total for Part II $124,166.

The final session yesterday of the sale of Part II of the Chiesa Collection at the American Art Galleries brought $80,306, making a grand total of $124,166 for Part II.

H. Kevorkian acquired one of the finest illuminated Persian manuscripts ever sold here, the poetical works of Djami, circa 1550-75, for $14,000, by far the highest price paid for a Part II offering. It contains the complete poetical works of Djami (Jami), seven poems entitled "Hwaft Awrang"—The Seven Stars, i. e., the stars of the Great Bear. The folio is in the original binding of lacquered paper. The manuscript is written in Persian characters on 304 leaves of white Samarkand text paper, each leaf inlaid in Dowletabad margin paper in various colors and shades, and contains twenty-seven full-page miniatures and nine headbands of elaborate mosaic in gold and colors.

Jacques Seligman & Co. bid in a sixteenth century Deruta majolica plate, with profile bust of a galeated warrior, the banderole inscribed Alesandero, M. S., paying $2,500. R. F. Armstrong paid $3,100 for a pair of 12½-inch Hispano-Moresque incurving cylindrical vases enameled in gold and blue with girali motifs. He also paid $2,100 for a sixteenth century Gubbio plate with the Lion of St. Mark molded in relief in the cavetto. The same buyer paid $1,500 for an important carved walnut and gold illuminated cassone and $1,300 for a Gubbio majolica plate simulating a concave wheel with alternate yellow and white spokes.

Clapp & Graham acquired for $2,600 a sixteenth century Florentine carved walnut stipo a bambocci, with drop front of burl walnut with the original wrought iron escutcheon and clasp. The moveable front and side pilasters are sculptured to portray Abraham's sacrifice.

An important sixteenth century Deruta plate with a beautifully painted profile bust of a woman, the name Bernardina inscribed on the banderole, went to William Rollins for $3,000, who also paid $1,200 for an Urbino plaque lustered at Gubbio, portraying an old nude schoolmaster pursued by school children with birches to belabor him.

W. D. Iselin paid $2,600 for a ninth century Carlingian carved ivory plaquette showing the crucifixion. The piece is less than five inches tall and less than three inches wide. F. Kleinberger paid $2,400 for a tenth to eleventh century Byzantine carved ivory casket having recessed panels in the sliding top and sides carved with grotesque dancing figures. William Wendle paid $1,500 for a sixteenth century Italian carved ivory statuette, an anthropophagus figure of Saturn. Arthur Arnold obtained a Gubbio majolica plate with a cupid on the gold cavetto for $1,800 and paid $1,400 for a Deruta majolica plate with the arms of the Medici and Fillcaia families.

SON LOSES APPEAL ON NICHOLAS WILL

Surrogate Upheld in Setting Aside Jury Verdict—Second Appeal Will Be Taken.

GROSVENOR HELD DISLOYAL

Father's Delusion About His Son's Hostility Is Not Proof of His Incapacity, Court Decides.

The decision of Surrogate Robert S. Pelletreau of Suffolk County, setting aside the verdict of a jury which decided in favor of Grosvenor Nicholas of 60 Broad Street, who contested the will of his father, the late George S. Nicholas, was upheld by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in Brooklyn yesterday.

The elder Nicholas, who died in September, 1922, leaving an estate valued at more than $3,000,000, disinherited his son, Grosvenor, and left his estate to his daughters, Elizabeth and Jennie, and his two other sons, George S. Jr. and Ridgley. Grosvenor contested the will on the ground that his father was mentally incompetent at the time the will was drawn up in October, 1922. The Suffolk County jury decided in his favor, but the verdict was set aside by Surrogate Pelletreau.

Grosvenor Nicholas said yesterday the case would be taken to the Court of Appeals.

The decision of the Appellate Division, written by Justice J. Addison Young, with Justice Isaac M. Kapper dissenting, said:

"It is admitted that the elder Nicholas was of strong mentality, but it was contended that he had an insane delusion that Grosvenor was disloyal to him and was endeavoring to destroy the business of the elder Nicholas and to kill him. A belief of that kind may be preposterous and illogical, yet it is not proof of lack of testamentary capacity if there are facts which explain it.

"In the litigation it was decided that Grosvenor's claim was false, and this would seem to be convincing evidence of the son's disloyalty.

"It seems to me that it clearly appears that from 1914 to 1921, Grosvenor was making unjust and unwarranted claims against his father in regard to the business. In 1914 he had his father examined as to his sanity by subterfuge."

In the dissenting opinion Justice Kapper expressed the belief that the jury had returned a just verdict in the son's action.

COOLIDGE APPROVES FOOD CONFERENCE

Writes Economy Is Based on Efficient Production and Wise Consumption.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 17.—A letter from President Coolidge, addressed to Mrs. William Brown Meloney, editor of The Delineator, at whose suggestion the conference on food habits was called, was read at the opening session of the conference at the Agricultural Department today. Dr. Louise Stanley, Chief of the Agricultural Department's Bureau of Home Economics, is presiding at the conference.

The President said in his letter:

"I wish to express my hearty approval of your suggestion that the United States Department of Agriculture call a conference on the food habits of the American people. The direct connection between food and health is universally recognized. An adequate supply of food of the right kinds and amounts is of fundamental importance to any nation.

"It is particularly fitting that this conference should be called by the Department of Agriculture, which is concerned with wise utilization of food as well as with its production. National economy is based upon a combination of efficient production and wise consumption. The home is the greatest consumer of agricultural products. If this consumption, is to be guided along lines that make for health and physical efficiency more detailed effects must be known about present food habits. I feel, therefore, that far-reaching effects on national economy and national health may come from the findings of this conference."

Twenty-five nutrition and dietary experts attended the conference.

WIN CORBELL ORATORICAL.

Civil Engineers Get First 3 Prizes in Fuertes Contest.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., April 17.—The thirteenth annual Fuertes Memorial Contest in public-speaking for engineers and architects at Cornell University was won by Warren R. Bentley of North Tonawanda, N. Y., a senior in the School of Civil Engineering, in a field of seven. Second and third prizes also went to students of the civil engineering school who competed with students of mechanical and electrical engineering and of the College of Architecture.

The School of Civil Engineering thus duplicated its victory in 1923 when all three prizes went to that school. Second honors went to John R. Zehner of Brooklyn, a senior, and the third to Mills N. Ripley of Buffalo, also a senior.

Bentley, who spoke on "Tidal Power of the Bay of Fundy," argued that the Fundy power project was superior to that at Muscle Shoals. Dean Frank H. Bosworth of the College of Architecture, presided, and the judges were Professor S. L. Boothroyd, Professor C. R. Evans, Professor J. G. Perisch, William Schuchardt and Robert Hannah, all of the Faculty, and C. Tracy Stagg, an Ithaca lawyer. Bentley received $125 for the first prize. Second and third prizes were $35 and $25.

26 PHYSICIANS QUIT COLUMBIA CLINIC

bia, it was said by one in authority that the resignations would in no way interfere with the operation of the College or of the Department of Dermatology. The staff of physicians attached to the Department of Dermatology, it was said, numbers about forty. The physicians attached to all departments of the College of Physicians and Surgeons number more than four hundred.

A spokesman for the twenty-six who resigned said that each man had acted individually and that the resignations had been sent at different times to avoid giving the effect of a "strike."

"We feel," he said, "that this post was not one which should be filled by a bacteriologist or a man of scientific attainments as against clinical experience. The work of the staff is to treat sick people and to teach others to treat sick people. The man who can teach this best is the man who knows most about it.

"By long experience, by the study of thousands and tens of thousands of patients, a talented practitioner acquires an instinctive power of diagnosis. As you enter the door of a clinic you can often tell instantaneously what is the matter with the first person that your eyes rest upon. You don't have to hear the history of the case. You know because your experience teaches you the meaning of a hundred small signs that you see in the patient's appearance and bearing.

"Unless you have had great experience, you may miss the meaning of these signs entirely. The able man, after long years of experience, acquires what is called the 'clinical eye.' He can see at a glance what a laboratory man might not be able to learn in weeks of study of a patient. The main work of the department is to use this instinctive personal skill that comes from long experience and to put younger men in the way of acquiring the same ability. The greatest bacteriologist in the world would be wasting his own time and that of his students here. His work in his own field might be of unlimited value, but he might be a poor hand to teach diagnosis.

"It is something like this: If you wanted to learn painting you would prefer to become the pupil of an artist rather than of the world's greatest authority on pigments and chemicals.

"There was no concerted action in our resignations. We held no meetings on the subject. The feeling was deep that the department was being injured, that personal injustice was being done, that the wrong theory was being followed. Many of those who resigned did so most regretfully. Dr. Hopkins is a man of undoubted ability in his own field, but of all the men in the department he is undoubtedly the man of least practical experience.

Staff Not Consulted.

"The members of the appointing body asked no opinions from any members of the staff. Their action was surprising and unintelligible. We don't know the reason for it. Their right to make their own selection is unquestionable, but in this case the abuse of discretion was so flagrant that we felt bound by self-respect and honor to resign. People have asked, 'Why didn't you protest?' In a matter of this kind you cannot protest with dignity. All that you can do is resign. Since the resignations started to come in efforts have been made by those in authority to conciliate the staff and cause them to reconsider, but they would not retrace their steps."

An unsigned statement, that was sent out last night purporting to describe the position of those who resigned, read as follows:

"With the exception of two or three physicians, the entire staff of the Department of Dermatology and Syphilis, of the Vanderbilt Clinic and the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University, over thirty physicians, have resigned from the institution.

"This action was taken as a protest against the policy of the university authorities. This policy consists of placing physicians whose training has been obtained in laboratories—with test tubes and guineapigs instead of human beings with diseases—at the absolute head of large clinical departments. It is the opinion that this policy is ruthless and arrogant in that it disregards obligations and consequences. The policy has been tried in other departments of the Medical College, as well as in other institutions, and has been found wanting.

"It is the consensus of opinion among the best minds in American medical circles that the policy is opposed to the best interests of medical education and that it is especially detrimental in the specialty embracing dermatology and syphilology, in which clinical training and clinical teaching are paramount. Knowledge of laboratory technic is a relatively unimportant feature in the teaching of these subjects, and in the treatment of patients afflicted with skin diseases and syphilis. Doctors in this field must be clinicians first and last, not laboratory experts."

Professor MacKee, on whose account the resignations were made, is at Dallas, Texas, attending the convention of the American Medical Association.

The announcement of the resignation of Professor MacKee and the twenty-five others was made simultaneously yesterday with the announcement by Columbia University that Professor MacKee, who had been an assistant professor, had been raised to a full professorship in the Department of Dermatology. This honor that was conferred on Professor MacKee, however, left him under the orders of his own former subordinate, Dr. Hopkins.

The announcement of the promotion of Professor MacKee was made, although his resignation was at hand, because the Faculty desired to give him the benefit of the title and honor, in spite of his decision to sever his connection with the institution.

Others Who Resigned.

The others who resigned were Professors Fred Wise and Isadore Rosen and Doctors J. J. Eller, E. C. Jagle, Max Scheer, E. W. Abramowitz, David Bloom, Harry Saunders, D. Ballin, D. Satenstein, Charles Lerner, S. Strumwasser, M. Standish, E. D. Newman, B. Berkowitz, H. Norton, Frederick Amshel, F. X. Wilhelm, Lotta Myers, J. P. Thornley, S. Littenberg, John Harris, Van Alstyn Cornell, Louis Tulipan and John Remer.

Dr. Hopkins was born in Brooklyn on June 30, 1882, receiving his A. B. degree in Columbia in 1902 and his medical degree from Johns Hopkins in 1907. He was for two years the resident pathologist at St. Luke's Hospital, and for three years after that bacteriologist and assistant attending physician for several years at the same place. He then joined Dr. Hans Zinsser's staff in the Columbia department of bacteriology, being made Assistant Professor in 1915.

For a time during the war he was bacteriologist with the Red Cross Commission in Serbia. He served during the war in the Medical Corps, being in charge of Base Laboratory 3 in Winchester, England, in 1918 and 1919.

On his return he became associated with Columbia dermatology department, both at Presbyterian Hospital and Vanderbilt Clinic, in which he has since continued. For the last six years he has also been affiliated as Associate in Roentgenology with the Crocker Laboratory.

Dr. MacKee was born in Jersey City Sept. 19, 1878. He received the degree of M. D. from New York University and Bellevue Hospital Medical College in 1899.

After an extensive post-graduate training in New York and New Jersey he entered the service of Dr. John A. Fordyce in the Bellevue Medical College as assistant in 1903, being later promoted to attending dermatologist and syphilologist and instructor. In 1911 he was transferred to the Columbia Medical School as chief of clinic and instructor, subsequently becoming Associate Professor of Dermatology and Syphilology.

From 1905 to 1907 he was Professor of Roentgenology in the Angle School of Orthodentia. He has been Roentgenologist at numerous hospitals, including St. Vincent's. He is now consulting dermatologists and syphilologist at St. Vincent's, Sea View Hospital New York Nose, Throat and Lung Hospital and many other smaller hospitals.

Dr. MacKee is a fellow of the New York Academy of Medicine, of numerous societies, including the American Medical Association, American Dermatological Association, Congress of Physicians and Surgeons, American Roentgen Society, American Radiological Society, American College of Roentgenologists and New York Dermatological Society.

Appointment of Dr. Benjamin P. Watson of the University of Edinburgh as head of the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology in the Medical School of Columbia University was announced yesterday. Dr. Watson has held posts of distinction in his specialty in Toronto and Edinburgh. When the Edinburgh chair became vacant in 1915 he was selected as the most outstanding man in his line in the British field.

A Cape Coat of lovely lines

The Tailored Woman fashions a cape coat along gallant, swinging lines and cuts it so cleverly that the cape and sleeves are one, yet not inseparable. The soft and supple fabrics, the hand tailoring, the lovely lines and the low prices make this model an outstanding example of the value one finds at The Tailored Woman. In kashatoil and in satin.

This Business of Gardening?

FROM THE FIRST glorious plans over a seed catalog, to the last row of asters late in the fall, it's all fun! And work! And heartbreaks and backbreaks and moments of ecstacy! For what if you do plant trillium here and it comes up several rows away? What if you do nurture carefully a plant which proves to be the rankest of weeds? What if your whole garden plays you false and flaunts but a single bloom the day you entertain your garden club? This business of gardening — no gardener will deny it — is the most uncertain, yet withal, the most absorbing and satisfying of outdoor sports!

Canadians Say Their Bootleggers Vie With Government-Controlled Traffic

of that kind we ought to ascertain what the facts are. Now, you might call that rebuttal or you might call it correction. I do not care what it is, I dislike to be left in that situation."

Senator Walsh, as did Senator Harreld, said that the question could be taken up early next week and disposed of.

Colonel Codman, counsel for the wets, announced that he expected to make a speech at the close of the hearing in which we will go over the evidence, and it was indicated that if he does the drys will be ready to reply. The name of their spokesman was not disclosed.

RANEY TAKES THE STAND.

William E. Raney, Attorney General of the Province of Ontario from 1919 to 1923, was the first witness.

"I was asked," said Mr. Raney, "to watch the evidence that would be given before this subcommittee by witnesses that would be called from Canada and afterward to prepare a statement for submission to the commission as to conditions in Canada, with special reference to what is known as Government control as that system has been in operation in some of our Canadian Provinces.

"One of the New York papers said two or three days ago that all the Canadian Provinces except Ontario had repealed their prohibition laws. That is not quite true. In addition to Ontario, the three Maritime Provinces have prohibitory laws.

"Of the nine Provinces of Canada five have adopted one form or other of so-called Government control and three of these five permit the sale of beer in beer parlors by the glass.

"There is no prohibition in Canada of manufacture of intoxicating liquors. The prohibition in force in the four dry Provinces is confined to sale and importation into these Provinces. There is a heavy exportation of whisky and beer from Canadian distilleries and breweries to the bordering American States, and a good deal of the product of Canadian distilleries and breweries is bootlegged in the Canadian Provinces, both those that are under prohibition laws and those that are under so-called Government control.

"Before dealing with the 'Government-control' Provinces let me say a few words about conditions in Ontario with which I am more familiar. The Ontario Temperance act was enacted in 1916 during the war with the promise of the Government of the day that after the war and the return of the soldiers from overseas it would be submitted to the direct vote of the people as to whether it should be continued or not."

Voted to Continue the Act.

"Was that same promise made in the other Provinces of Canada, that they might have a vote on prohibition at that time?" asked Senator Harreld.

"I think so," Mr. Raney replied.

"It was so submitted in 1919," he continued, "with the result that after an experience of three years the people voted more than 2 to 1 to continue the act in force. The vote for the act was 792,942, against 383,551. There has been a subsequent history in the way of popular votes which I shall be glad to discuss with the committee after I have completed my statement if so desired.

"Under the Ontario Temperance act there is no prohibition of manufacture, and so we have several large distilleries in Ontario, whose product is well known in this country, and a large number of breweries. These, of course, increase the difficulties of enforcement of the Ontario Temperance act."

"It also increases difficulties of enforcement of the United States temperance act, I take it," interrupted Senator Harreld.

"No doubt," said Mr. Raney. "Nevertheless I am bound to say that during my tenure of the office of Attorney General I found no great difficulty in enforcement of the law so far as the open sale of liquor was concerned, and the efforts to suppress the clandestine sale were reasonably successful and gave general satisfaction to the friends of the act.

"I am also bound, I think, to say, speaking generally, that the efforts of my successor in office have also been reasonably successful and have given general satisfaction to the friends of the act. I might add that my successor is of a different party, and might also explain that I am still a member of the Ontario Legislature, but do not hold any executive office.

No Juries in Liquor Cases.

"There are just two other things to which I ought, I think, to allude in this statement. The Ontario Temperance act permits the sale of native wines in five-gallon quantities. This provision is regarded by some as a safety valve, by others as a weakness in the law.

"The other matter is one which I regard as of great importance. We have no such difficulty with court machinery as that upon which Mr. Buckner placed so much emphasis in his evidence before this committee. There is no provision in Canada for a jury trial in any case involving a charge of keeping a disorderly house or a charge for an offense against the liquor laws. All such cases are tried by a Magistrate. The provisions for appeal are simple and expeditious. Nine-tenths of such cases are disposed of within a fortnight or month of the offense, and if there is an appeal, a month or two more is usually enough to bring the case to a final determination.

"There is one other subject to which I think I ought to make reference. The suggestion is made that law enforcement in the United States would be made easier by the legalized sale of a non-intoxicating beer. Well, we are trying that experiment in Ontario right now. The beer is of the strength of 2.5 per cent. absolute alcohol by volume, which is the equivalent of 4.4 per cent. of proof spirits.

"Ontario courts had thirty years ago held, on the evidence of experiments conducted to ascertain the fact, that such a liquor is an intoxicant. But the law providing for the sale of 4.4 beer was nevertheless enacted last year by the Legislature against vigorous protests from the temperance people. The law provided for the sale in hotels, restaurants and beer parlors, and nearly 4,000 permits were issued by the Government. Sale over bars was not allowed."

Senator Harreld—There was a vast number of permits. A—Yes sir.

Senator Reed—Where was that permitted? A.—Do you mean in what kind of places?

Q.—Yes, or give me just what you stated there a moment ago. A.—The law provided for the sale in hotels, restaurants and beer parlors, or, as they were called, beverage parlors. Holders of permits were required to furnish tables and chairs for their customers and were forbidden under penalties to sell to a man standing at a bar with his foot on a brass rail. Hotel men spent thousands of dollars in fitting up premises to make them comply with the law and then the whole thing fell flat. The beer drinkers said there wasn't enough kick in the Government's healthful, invigorating, non-intoxicating beer. The permits were in fact useful to the holders chiefly as disguises for the sale of something stronger.

Beer Parlors a Difficult Problem.

"The Government-control Provinces," continued Mr. Raney, "are Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. These are, I believe, the only systems of Government control in an English-speaking country anywhere in the world. Three of them have parlors, as they call them.

"Labor men who have appeared before this committee have advocated sale of beer, but are opposed to the return of the saloon. This is the problem these Canadian Provinces have tried to solve. Can you have beer parlors that will not be beer saloons? Does so-called Government control of hard liquor really control the sale so as to measurably solve the drink problem more effectively than it can be done by prohibition?

"In an effort to answer these questions The Toronto Star early this year sent a commission on a tour of these five Provinces. The commissioner was one of its editors, Mr. W. R. Plewman, who is one of the ablest and most reliable newspaper men in Canada. His report was embodied in thirty-four articles which appeared in The Star in January and February of this year. These articles constitute, I suppose, the most valuable survey of the subject of Government control that has yet been published anywhere in the world, because the five systems in force in these five Provinces include about all the suggestions that have been heretofore made for the regulation of the liquor trade by Government control.

"First as to Quebec. It is to be borne in mind that Quebec is not an Anglo-Saxon State. Its civil law is the code of Napoleon. It boasts that its philosophy is the philosophy of Latin Europe. Its attitude toward what we English-speaking North Americans call the social evils—prostitution, gambling and the liquor traffic—is toleration, regulation and moral suasion—and the liquor law of the Province of Quebec is consistent with French philosophy.

Inquiry Into Vice Conditions.

"A few years ago a committee of prominent citizens of Montreal, Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jewish, started a movement to bring Montreal abreast of the other cities of the North American Continent in its attitude toward commercialized vice. Their efforts culminated a year or two ago in the appointment of a member of the Quebec bench to investigate alleged conditions. In due time the Judge made his report. Let me quote from one of Mr. Plewman's articles:

"'Less than a year ago Montreal paid $75,000 to hear the truth about itself. A police probe was held which produced 200 witnesses and 10,000 pages of evidence. Much of the evidence about the drinking (under Government control) and social vice and about the protection of crime and wrongdoing was sensational and the community gasped.'"

"Right there, you are now reading from what?" Senator Reed asked.

"From one of Mr. Plewman's Quebec articles," was the reply.

"And your statement amounts to this: that you are just presenting his views to this committee," said Mr. Reed.

Extensive excerpts from the articles on which Mr. Raney based his testimony were read into the record by the witness. The articles pictured Montreal as a city in which commercialized vice flourished, an enterprise, it was alleged, that was perfectly organized.

Finally after the witness had been reading for fifteen or twenty minutes Senator Reed interposed an objection to the line the testimony was taking.

"I submit," said Senator Reed, "that this is not testimony."

"Senator Reed, in an investigation of this kind why should it be confined to testimony that would be admissible in court?" asked Senator Walsh.

"I do not think we should be so strict about it as that, but this is merely a compilation of hearsay stuff," replied Senator Reed.

Valuable Data, Walsh Contends.

"I think," said Senator Walsh, "it is very valuable."

"We have before us," interrupted Senator Harreld, "a witness who appears not to be giving his own sanction to the statements, exactly, but is giving a statement that was published in a newspaper that seems to be expressing the views prevailing, and therefore it is history, and I think a number of newspaper articles have been admitted to the record."

"I am not going to make any fuss about it," Senator Reed retorted, "but want to call the attention of the subcommittee to what is going on. In this way you could introduce every letter and every opinion of any man in the world and yet we would not have the benefit of the direct testimony of the witness on anything."

Senator Goff—The witness will be subject to cross-examination of any statement he makes.

Senator Walsh—Oh, yes.

Senator Harreld—That is understood.

Senator Reed—I am not making a formal objection, but am merely calling attention to the situation.

Senator Harreld—You may proceed, Mr. Raney.

Mr. Raney resumed reading the newspaper articles, Senator Reed interposing no further objections to the testimony.

"I was a little astonished," said Senator Walsh, "if you will permit the interruption, at the statement there about the Liquor Commission advertising its liquors. You spoke about attractive advertisements that it puts out for whisky, rum and other hard liquors.

"Yes," replied Mr. Raney, "I am not sure; I have not seen newspaper advertisements. This reads as though there probably were newspaper advertisements, but I have seen their list of liquors of all classes, all kinds."

Q.—I was wondering if you could speak from personal knowledge about the fact of advertising as if they were endeavoring to induce purchases? A.—There is the Quebec Liquor Commission price list. There are twenty-four pages of different descriptions of liquors, cognacs alcohol, Old Tom gins, Irish whiskies, French whiskies.

Q.—Well that would hardly be regarded as an advertisement. A.—Well, they may or may not. Perhaps not intended to be an advertisement, but that is the only thing I have with me.

Q.—I should think it would be necessary to issue something of this kind. A.—I suppose so.

Senator Reed—Are they bootlegging liquor obtained from the United States? A.—Not that I know of. Are they bootlegging the liquor that had been obtained from the Government stores. Or it might be moonshine.

Q.—That is, they may make moonshine up there and sell it, and they may get it from the United States and bootleg it. A.—And they may get it from the Government stores.

Q.—And they may buy it from the Government stores, paying the Government price, and then peddle it out? A.—Yes.

Q.—What was the statement in regard to bootlegging? I did not catch that. A.—The report of the Government Liquor Board tells of the increasing number of cases of bootlegging within the Province and of the impossibility of suppressing it.

Q.—When was that report made? A.—Well, I presume that this would have reference to the last preceding report.

Q.—Have you the report? A.—It was put in, Senator, by one of the witnesses from Quebec; the second man who testified put it in.

Q.—Now that is in what Province? A.—That is in Quebec.

Q.—And is that official report at hand? A.—Well, I presume he is quoting from this. I was familiar with this reference in his letter. I have not verified it by turning to the report itself, but I presume he is referring to this report of 1925.

Strangers Support "Blind Pigs."

"Here is a reference," said Mr. Raney. "I see at Page 53 of the report, dated Montreal, January, 19[illegible], fourth annual report. I doubt if this is the last one. The commission says:

"'Much time and money have been expended during the year for the purpose of eradicating illicit resorts in Hull and the surrounding neighborhood. While we may not have succeeded in making them disappear entirely, there is nevertheless marked improvement. Owing to the fact that the City of Hull adjoins a prohibition Province, its citizens will always have to suffer from the presence of blind pigs. Statistics conclusively prove that about 75 per cent. of the business done in these alleged resorts is supported by strangers.'

"Now whether there is another paragraph in this report on that subject I am not sure. I would rather infer that the reference to the paragraph that I quoted from Mr. Plewman's letter is from a later report or from some other report. That is the only one, at a hasty glance, in this report."

"Now just before you get to that, you have not been able to find the quotation in the letter," Senator Reed interrupted. "You have found quotations very much in conflict with it thus far. You are not able to find that quotation except in some newspaper article?"

"Well," Mr. Raney answered, "that is the only copy of the Quebec report I have with me."

The witness proceeded to read another of the newspaper articles in which the "blind pig" business in Montreal and other Quebec places was commented on.

HIS VIEWS ON QUEBEC.

"Now I will make some observations of my own with regard to Quebec," continued Mr. Raney.

"The conditions described by Judge Coderre and by The Montreal Star and The Montreal Standard are, of course, the legitimate fruitage of a policy of toleration and regulation of crime. The educated Frenchman defending the system will say that at least it is better than the cant and hypocrisy of Ontario. It cannot be denied that he is frank and logical. He makes no attempt to deny the existence of the red-light district. He openly advocates not only Government control of the liquor traffic but Government control of houses of prostitution and gambling houses, and he has all three.

"Whatever opinion any public man in Ontario may hold of prohibition as we have it in Ontario, there is no public man in our Province who would be insane enough to advocate the Quebec system for Ontario.

"I have been several times invited to go to Montreal to discuss the liquor question. I have always declined. I have said: 'To what purpose? What probability is there that a Province that will not enforce the criminal code of Canada against disorderly houses—gambling houses and houses of prostitution—what probability is there that a Province that tolerates the conditions officially described by Judge Coderre would enact, or, if enacted, would enforce, a prohibitory liquor law?'

"The Quebec system, which has existed for five years, is the oldest Government control system in Canada—and the worst. The Manitoba system, for which Mr. Russell, the Secretary of the Moderation League of Manitoba, spoke before this committee, is perhaps the best."

Increase in Liquor Sales.

In one of the articles which the witness read to the committee, the Mayor of Winnipeg was quoted as saying the Government liquor control system "was undermining the whole social structure."

"Why did not the Mayor enforce the law, if he had the authority?" asked Senator Reed.

"Perhaps if you will just let me finish the quotation and come back to he question, it may be answered in what follows," replied Mr. Raney. He continued reading:

"The lawyers who helped draft the law," declared his Worship, 'are now defending the criminals who violated it. In the bootlegging business a man is fined $200 and the next day is in the business again. The law should either be enforced or repealed."

"On the invitation of the conference, Attorney General Craig appeared before it and gave his side of the dispute," said Mr. Raney.

"Though not admitting the Mayor to be right in saying that conditions were a thousand times worse under prohibition, the Attorney General agreed that there was an increasing sale of liquor by the glass in the city and all over the Province and to a far greater degree than existed under prohibition. The Government had sought to tighten up the law but had failed mainly because of the unprecedented lobby of the liquor interests.

Convictions Hard to Obtain.

"Sir Hugh John MacDonald, son of Sir John A., and now Police Magistrate, said he thought there was just as much unlawful drinking under the Government control act as under prohibition. The present law was in the very nature of things difficult of enforcement. It was far less difficult to secure convictions under prohibition than under Government control."

Senator Reed—Why did not this Mayor who went down to the church meeting and made a speech enforce the law? He had the forces to enforce it, did he not? A.—Yes, sir, and I think your criticism is well founded. I think the Mayor could have done a good deal himself. His attitude, apparently, was just this, that the condition was brought into existence and supervised by the Government of the day and it is the business of the Government to enforce it, and not the city and police. It was a controversy between the Mayor and the Attorney General.

Q.—And, therefore, he referred it to the preachers? A.—Yes, they ought to get after the Attorney General and get him to do it.

Senator Walsh—I understood him to say if he got the proper support from the Provincial Government he could do something. A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—And he was complaining that the Provincial Government did not support him. A.—Quite so, yes, sir.

Q.—Something similar to what we have right here in the United States, the local authorities say the Government does not give proper support. A.—Here is what he says: "He blamed the ministers for not speaking out and the Province for not more vigorously enforcing the law, saying that if the Province would give the city some real help he would clean up the city in no time."

Senator Reed—In that case the Mayor of the city complains that the authorities of the Provinces are not helping the city, whereas here the authorities of the Government seem to complain that the authorities of the municipalities and States do not help the Government. It is just turned around. A.—In my own time my policy was, when I was administering the law, to put the onus as much as possible on the municipalities. I had in reserve 100 Provincial men, and if I found the authorities in the municipality were breaking down I sent my men into that municipality.

Q.—The law here intends that the municipalities shall help to enforce the law. A.—There is no question that is the best basis.

Senator Harreld remarked that the Eighteenth Amendment intended that enforcement should be carried out by all officers, State and municipal.

"Do you find that anywhere is the Eighteenth Amendment?" asked Senator Reed.

"That is the clear intent of the law," said Senator Harreld. "Read Senator Borah's speech. He made it clear that when the Government took over the control of the importation and sale of hard liquor that it became mandatory on every public official, local, State or national, to help enforce it. I think that can hardly be gainsaid."

Quotes Judges' Criticisms.

The witness, continuing the reading of the newspaper article, quoted Justice MacDonald of the Manitoba Supreme Court as having said that "in pest-holes in Winnipeg and St. Boniface slimy rats of the underworld and others who call themselves respectable lie in wait for thoughtless children."

"St. Boniface," said the witness, "is only a small suburb, but it had 305 persons in its police court last year charged with drunkenness.

"In December Judge St. George Stubbs criticized the enforcement of the Government control law in the County Court, saying:

"'I cannot understand the attitude of the authorities charged with liquor law enforcement. They are content to inflict a money penalty, when the act clearly provides a term in jail. Liquor sellers laugh at a fine. A term in prison is the only thing that will teach them the wisdom of obeying the law. There is entirely too much discrimination in enforcing the act. Many well-known places are running wide open, while others less fortunate are hailed into court.'"

"That," remarked Mr. Raney, "I suppose, reads something like you have here in this country.

"And then," he continued, "I quote some figures about crime in Manitoba.

"The figures for crime are not conclusive. In 1915, before prohibition, the jail population was 1,591. In 1920, under prohibition, it was down to 964. The number increased from that time on until 1923, when Government control went into effect. That year the number of inmates in the prisons reached 1,307. Last year the jail population showed the biggest increase in ten years, growing from 1,206 to 1,650, a record figure for the period.

"The first complete year of Government control showed 793 convictions for violations of the Temperance act. Last year the number grew to 855, a figure larger than that for all but one year under prohibition."

"Some increase in population?" asked Mr. Reed.

"Some increase in population, no doubt," said Mr. Raney.

Again citing the newspaper articles, Mr. Raney said that in January of this year six of the seven owners of breweries, or their agents, in Winnipeg had been brought before the courts for violating the law this year.

"Do you know what the character of those charges were; whether they were technical violations or amounted to grave infringement?" asked Mr. Reed.

"I suppose they would be the mill run," was the reply.

"Do do not know?"

"No, I do not know," said Mr. Raney.

How Liquors Are Sold.

"I have dealt at some length," Mr. Raney continued, "with the cases of Quebec and Manitoba, because those are the two Provinces that have been represented before this committee. Under the Quebec system hard liquors are sold in Government stores one bottle at a time, and beer and wine by the glass or otherwise in unlimited quantities, by holders of Government licenses.

"In Manitoba, on the other hand, there is no legalized sale by the glass. No liquors are legally sold for consumption on the premises and the purchaser must be the holder of a Government permit. The British Columbia and Alberta systems approximate the Quebec system, except that in the Western Provinces the purchaser must have a permit. The Saskatchewan more nearly approximates the Manitoba system. The Quebec and British Columbia systems are each about five years old, the Manitoba and Alberta systems between two and three years old and the Saskatchewan system about one year old.

"The British Columbia and Alberta systems being similar in most respects to that of Quebec, Mr. Plowman found the conditions in those two Western Provinces not very dissimilar to those in Quebec. He found women and girls among the frequenters of the beer parlors in both of those Provinces and prominent citizens expressed to him the opinion that the beer parlors, for this and other reasons, were a greater menace than the old barrooms had been.

"He found the system condemned by newspapers on both sides of politics—that is, the British Columbia and Alberta systems. He found that the fourth year of control in British Columbia witnessed an increase in one year of 53 per cent. in violations of the liquor act, of 80 per cent. in the number fined for offenses against the act, of 65 per cent. in the number who forfeited bail and of 108 per cent. in the amount of cash penalties.

"The number of violations of the prohibitory law in British Columbia during its worst year, that of 1920, was 896. The number of violations of the law in 1925, with the sale of beer added to Government control, was 2,505.

Newspaper Assails System.

"On Jan. 23 last, this year, The Vancouver Sun, which is a supporter of the present British Columbia Government, said editorially:

"'The people decided on a policy of restricting alcoholic consumption to the lowest possible degree. The Government has made this piling up of revenue the chief purpose of the act. Moderation does not moderate. Government control does not control. The British Columbia liquor system has actually failed.'"

Senator Reed—I suppose some editorials have been printed on the other side? A.—In that article Mr. Plowman quotes from both papers in that Province, both condemning the system.

Q.—But in addition there are plenty of editorials to the effect that the law has been successful and of benefit? A.—I do not know; it is very possibly so.

Q.—You came here at the invitation of whom? A.—Of Mr. Wheeler.

Q.—How do you have you known Mr. Wheeler? A.—I do not know that I ever met him before I came here.

Q.—I mean how long have you known him? A.—I have known of him for a long while.

Q.—You have been more or less cooperating with him? A.—Well, we have had—I think I have written him two or three letters. That is the extent of the cooperation.

Q.—In Canada, where you have held the position of Attorney General of the Province of Ontario, what years did you occupy that position? A.—1919 to 1923.

Q.—At that time they had the prohibitory law, did they? A.—The Ontario Temperance act, yes.

Q.—You call it the Temperance act? A.—Yes.

Q.—You have stated this, but I am asking you again to get it back in my mind, because I could not follow every point. Under that act what were the provisions with regard to the sale of liquors? A.—There was a prohibit of the sale of intoxicating liquors, and the definition of an intoxicating liquor was 2.5 proof spirits.

Q.—That would be 1½ per cent. beer. A.—It would be 2½ per cent. spirits, which is about 2 per cent. alcoholic content—No, about 1 per cent. absolute alcohol by weight.

Q.—What else could be sold? A.—The only exception in the way of the sale of an intoxicating liquor was that in favor of native wines, which might be sold in five-gallon quantities.

Q.—And, of course, made by anybody? A.—The Province has no jurisdiction over manufacture, but does assume, I think, to license—I know it does, it assumes to license the manufacture of beer. I may have stated that a little too broadly, because there has been question raised as to whether or not, after all, the Provinces may not have jurisdiction to prohibit. But we have always acted on the assumption that the Provinces have not jurisdiction to prohibit

EXTENT OF PROHIBITION.

"So that, whatever the law may ultimately be decided to be, the construction given has been that the Province could not regulate the men?" asked Senator Reed.

"Yes, that is right," replied Mr. Raney.

"And consequently the men went on unrestricted, except that the general laws of the Dominion, of course, provided some regulation as to who could manufacture and who could not?"

"I think that is correct, although I think there is the maximum of regulation in respect to domestic wines."

"So that, as a matter of fact, in the Province of Ontario, under what is termed prohibition, anybody could make all the wine he wanted to and only had to get a license from the General Government, which was easily obtained? That is correct, is it?"

"I think that is right."

"And ciders?"

"Yes."

"And beers for his own use?" persisted Senator Reed.

"No; there is no interference with the manufacture of wine or cider or beer for a person's own use, except that in the case of beer there must be a notice to the Excise Department of the intention to manufacture," said the witness. "There is not even a permit that is necessary."

Q.—What about the right to sell the wine? Was that practically unrestricted? A.—When I say that, Mr. Raney, I mean by going and getting a permit or complying with some regulations, could people sell wine generally? Q.—They could sell it in five-gallon quantities.

Q.—That was in what you call the prohibition period? A.—The prohibition period that began with 1910.

"There were the conditions in the prohibition period?" asked Mr. Reed.

"Yes, sir," replied Mr. Raney. "I might just qualify that in this way. During the war there were Dominion Orders in Council which prohibited the manufacture, transportation, exportation and sale. When those Orders in Council were repealed at the beginning of 1920 there was nothing to prevent importation into a province from another province. But in the meantime the Dominion Parliament had passed an act which provided that upon a resolution being adopted by a Provincial Legislature the Dominion Government would submit a referendum to the people on the subject of prohibition of importation into that province, and if that referendum resulted in favor of the prohibition, then there would be prohibition of importation.

Ontario Barred Importation.

"We did that in Ontario; but we did not get that law against importation effective until July of 1921, so that between the first of January, 1920, and the middle of 1921 there was free importation of liquors into Ontario from other provinces for domestic use."

Q.—You continued under that condition until when? A.—Down to this time.

Q.—You still have what is called prohibition up there? A.—Yes.

Q.—But you have prohibition where anybody can make all the wine he wants, and anybody can import all the hard liquor or beer he wants? A.—Oh no, he cannot import it; no, he cannot import at all. He cannot import any intoxicating liquor. He is prohibited, of course, from making whisky, by the Dominion law, that is, moonshining. But he is not prohibited under any law in force in our province from making wine or beer or cider for his family use.

Q.—Are hard liquors still permitted to be made in your province and shipped out? A.—Oh, yes.

Q.—But they are not permitted to be sold there? A.—Not permitted to be sold there to Ontario people. They may be sold there for export.

Q.—So the people of Ontario who want hard liquor get what is made in other provinces, and that is what you call bootlegging? A.—Yes.

Q.—And under these conditions you have found it hard to stop the sale of hard liquors? A.—As I think I said, my experience was that there was no difficulty—I mean, there was the ordinary difficulty of law enforcement, but I found no special difficulty in stopping the open sale of intoxicating liquors under our law. I do not suggest that we stamped out the clandestine sale, but the enforcement was accepted by the people as being fairly satisfactory.

Q.—That is to say, if a man opened up a place of business and went to selling whisky these you could stop that? A.—Yes.

Q.—But if he was selling it around under cover you had more difficulty in reaching that? You occasionally found a man. A.—Yes, I suppose that is putting it fairly.

Q.—You do not know, then, how much was sold clandestinely, of course? A.—Oh, no.

Q.—Without knowing, having specific facts, did you see some evidences of prosperity among the bootleggers? A.—I have heard of prosperity among the bootleggers.

Tells About Other Provinces.

"Now, I hope you will not misunderstand this as a reflection upon your great country; but I am so ignorant of Canada, I am sorry to say, that I cannot quite keep these provinces straight in my mind, and if I get them mixed up you will set me right," said Senator Reed.

"You may be pardoned, you have so many of your own to look after," Mr. Raney replied.

"We have so many that we cannot look after. This is Ontario that you have been speaking of?"

"Yes, sir."

"Now, there are a number of other provinces in Canada that have prohibitory laws, or laws that they call prohibitory laws? Am I correct in that?"

"Yes, sir."

Q.—Under those so-called prohibitory laws in other Provinces, speaking of them now in the broad way, did they really have about the same conditions that you had under your Ontario prohibitory law or were they more stringent? A.—You mean the laws?

Q.—Yes. A.—I think the laws were very similar—our own law was framed after the Manitoba prohibitory law, Quebec had, I think, a prohibitory law for a very short time.

Senator Walsh—What other prohibition Provinces are there? A.—The prohibition Provinces now are Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

Senator Reed—Was not all of Canada once under prohibition of this kind that we are speaking of? A.—Yes

Q.—Now, this kind of prohibition that we are speaking of—I speak of it in that way because it is different from our prohibition—has been repealed by the vote of the people in how many provinces? A.—Three.

Q.—What has happened in the others? A.—Well, in Quebec the repeal was not by the people. It was done by the Legislature; in the four Western Provinces there were votes by the people.

Q.—So that when Canada was all at one time under prohibition, the prohibitory laws have been changed or repealed and new laws enacted in all of the Provinces except Ontario and the three Maritime Provinces and they are what? A.—Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

Q.—Now, is Ontario one of the populous Provinces? A.—Ontario is most populous. It has a population of about 3,000,000 people.

Q.—What about Nova Scotia? A.—It is one of the smaller Provinces.

Q.—Do you know about what its population would be? A.—Oh, I should think maybe three-quarters of a million; something like that. That is just a rough guess, you understand.

Q.—Just your estimate, which I suppose is approximately correct. New Brunswick has about what population? A.—I think about the same, or maybe a little less. Somewhere about that.

Q.—And Prince Edward Island? A.—That is small. Again just an estimate—perhaps 100,000. It is like your Rhode Island, just a little Province.

Half Under Control System.

"So that, in round numbers, counting Ontario as 3,000,000 and the other two provinces as 750,000, there is a population in Canada of approximately 4,500,000 that adheres to this limited prohibition which you have spoken of?" asked Mr. Reed. "What is the population of the Dominion?"

"About 9,000,000, speaking broadly," was the reply.

"So that more than half of the territory in area and about half of that territory by population has gone to Government control?"

"Yes," said Mr. Raney.

"What is the population of Quebec?"

"I think between two and a quarter and two and a half millions."

"Mr. Taschereau is the Prime Minister of the Province of Quebec, is he not?" asked Mr. Reed.

"Quite right, yes," replied the witness.

"I want to call your attention to a letter from him, addressed to Mr. Charles S. Rackemann, dated April 6, 1926," said Senator Reed. "It reads:

Office of the Prime Minister,
Province of Quebec,
Quebec, April 6, 1926.

Mr. Charles S. Rackemann,
President, Constitutional Liberty League of Massachusetts, 70 Kilby Building, Boston, Mass.

Dear Sir:

I am in receipt of your letter of the 2d instant and beg to send you here with a booklet, which, I trust, will give you the information asked for.

I may state that the Quebec law has been an unqualified success, both from the moral and financial points of view. Drunkenness has decreased to a great extent and the result in the City of Quebec is most interesting. Quebec has a population of about 115,000, is a seaport, and during the Summer season received thousands of tourists. The statistics show that the number of arrests for drunkenness is one and a half per day.

I believe that this result compares favorably with any of the American cities where the Volstead act is in force.

Yours sincerely,
L. A. TASCHEREAU.

"He encloses a booklet, printed in both French and English," said Senator Reed. "I read from Page 11, under the heading of 'Drunkenness':

"'The following table sets forth the statistics of convictions for drunkenness, by Provinces, during the course of the four years, 1920-21-22-23, and the average per annum for these four years.'

"What is this document," asked Senator Walsh?

"It is the booklet that was enclosed in this letter of Prime Minister Taschereau, entitled 'The Moral Balance Sheet of a Great Social Experiment,'" said Mr. Reed. "Issued by the Quebec Liquor Commission," interposed Mr. Raney.

Document an Official One.

"What is that commission? Is it charged with the enforcement of this law?" Senator Harreld asked.

"It is charged," replied Mr. Raney, "primarily with sales. It has a warehouse in Montreal, with nine acres of floor space."

"It is a governmental agency?" asked Mr. Harreld.

"Oh, yes, it is a governmental agency."

"And this is a governmental publication?" asked Mr. Reed.

"I assume so, if it is by the Liquor Board. I suppose it is by the Liquor Board," replied Mr. Raney.

"You may examine it, you are much more familiar with them; I wish you would. I have not seen this book until within five minutes," said Senator Reed.

"I wanted to know," said Senator Walsh, "whether it was issued by the commission or whether it was gotten out by some organization, such as this Moderation League that the gentlemen from Manitoba told us about.

"It is official all right," explained Mr. Raney. "There is no doubt about that. It is an argument for Government control, an argument for the Quebec system, made by the Quebec Liquor Commission, as I understand it.

Senator Harreld—The Prime Minister is, of course, an advocate of that policy? A.—Oh, absolutely; it is his policy.

Q.—In other words, he is holding this office because that policy is in effect, or the policy is in effect because he is holding that office? A.—Perhaps it works both ways.

Senator Reed—And the articles you have read are articles that have been written by gentlemen who advocate the contrary theory, so that we have advocates on both sides, I suppose. That would be a fair statement, would it not? A.—Well, I suppose so. I suppose you could put it that way.

Q.—I want to read now from this publication, it says: "The following table sets forth the statistics of convictions for drunkenness by provinces during the course of the four years 1920-21-22-23 and the average per annum for these four years."

Q.—Now, those were the four years when the prohibitory laws were in effect pretty generally, were they not? A.—What years are you speaking of?

Q.—From 1920 to 1923 inclusive.

Senator Walsh—The Quebec law went into effect in 1921?

Mr. Raney—Yes, I think so. The Quebec law has been in force five years, and the British Columbia law five years; Manitoba and Alberta, I think, about two and a half or three years.

Reed Presents Statistics.

"I continue to read," said Senator Reed, "the figures which I will offer for the record."

The figures submitted follow:

Provinces.	Year 1920.	Year 1921.	Year 1922.	Year 1923.	Aver.
P. Edw. Isl.	120	144	162	164	147
Nova Scotia.	3,140	2,156	1,492	1,392	2,045
N. Brunswick	1,582	1,264	1,033	1,074	1,318
Quebec	11,983	9,044	7,103	6,280	8,702
Ontario	15,021	14,408	10,083	11,370	12,738
Manitoba	2,330	1,420	1,023	1,680	1,765
Saskatchewan.	919	708	816	884	832
Alberta	1,838	1,538	1,008	1,277	1,315
Brit. Columbia	2,948	2,378	1,081	1,443	1,963
Yukon	10	2	12	21	11
Totals	39,709	34,362	25,013	25,565	31,152

"This tabulation," continued Senator Reed, "reveals the interesting fact that convictions for drunkenness in the Province of Quebec have shown a steady decline from 1920 to 1923, that is to say, during the period that the present act has been in force; while prohibition Provinces have registered a constant increase or fluctuations which have left them at the end of 1923 at practically the same point as in 1920.

"Temperance progress in the Province of Quebec is strikingly illustrated by the adjoining diagram, which shows that starting with 301 convictions for drunkenness for 100,000 of population in 1919, we reached the rather high level of 525, under mitigated prohibition in 1920; in 1923 the figure is only 267. (Bulletin of Dominion Bureau of Statistics, July, 1924.)

Biggest Sales to Foreigners.

"An additional feature worthy of notice is that the biggest sales of the commission and particularly the sales of spirits, are made by the stores mainly frequented by foreign patrons. For example, in the chart shown below, which gives the sales in gallons for the year 1923, of wines and spirits in six cities of the Province, it will be seen that the two cities showing the smallest amount of sales, even when taking into account the relative figures of their population, represent at the same time such localities as can only count primarily on local patronage.

"The same remark applies to stores situated in the City of Montreal, which do a larger business and sell a far greater proportion of spirits, precisely to the extent in which they are located near railway stations and the large hotels.

"I understand you do not agree with this report? Or do you simply take the position that you have produced here certain statements and you do not want to decide between these opposing statements?" asked Mr. Reed.

"No, I do not want to take that position," said Mr. Raney. "I am, of course, very familiar with Premier Taschereau's great pride in the Quebec liquor system, especially as a revenue producer. There is no doubt that it has produced a large revenue. This letter that you have just read is not the first time I have heard of his praise of the Quebec system, both as a body of economic legislation and as a factor in the moral life of the Province of Quebec.

"So far as the criminal statistics go it is trite in Ontario that there is a radical difference between the methods of law enforcement and the methods of law enforcement in Quebec. That is indicated by some of the things I have already read to the committee."

"One is based upon the Code Napoleon and the other on the English law," said Senator Harreld.

"No, the Code Napoleon is civil law," said Raney. "The criminal law of Canada runs in all the Provinces, but Quebec Province enforces that portion of the criminal code that suits it and does not enforce those parts of the criminal code that do not appeal to the sentiment of the people of that Province, notably the laws against disorderly houses. Of course, the liquor laws are the Province's own laws."

Reed Cites Boston Arrests.

"What do you say as to this statement?" asked Senator Reed.

"Dry Boston has a population of 770,000 and wet Montreal a population of 618,506. Dry Boston had 33,000 arrests for drunkenness in 1923 and wet Montreal had 3,761. On the basis of arrests for drunkenness per 100,000 of population the figures are: Boston, 4,285; for Montreal, 627."

"Do you want to know what I say about that?"

"Yes."

"Yes, I say it all depends, or at least it largely depends," said Mr. Raney, "on the instructions given to the police as to when a man is to be arrested as being drunk."

"Does it not also depend," said Senator Harreld, "largely upon the efficiency with which the law is enforced?"

"On that and the other, too," said Mr. Raney. "I have not myself seen the conditions, but they have been described to me by so many people that I know the conditions to be something like this: When a man is dead drunk in a park, for instance, and a policeman comes along, he—what was the term used here on yesterday?"

"They said in Cleveland he was 'golden ruled,'" said Senator Walsh.

"Yes, he is 'golden ruled,' that is, he gets the man in a shady place," said Mr. Raney.

"Is that a fact or do you say that it might be a fact?" asked Mr. Reed.

"I have heard it from so many sources that I believe it to be a fact," was the reply. "And I know that there is a difference between law enforcement in our own city of Toronto and in Montreal. As to Toronto, I can speak definitely. If a man shows signs of intoxication he is taken into the police station."

"You are not telling us that in dry Boston the police do not do that, are you?" asked Mr. Reed.

"I will not speak about Boston at all. I am going to confine myself to Canada," said Mr. Raney.

Smuggling From America.

"Now, how much liquor have they been importing into Canada from the United States," asked Senator Reed, "and when I say 'liquor,' I mean to include in that term alcohol?"

"Oh, there is no record of that, of course. I should say, if I may speak offhand, that there are no liquors legitimately imported, but—"

"I am speaking about those being imported illegitimately," interrupted Senator Reed.

"Do you mean smuggled in?"

"Yes."

"Of course there is no record of that."

"Is it understood to be a large amount or a small amount?"

"Well, it only depends upon the reports coming to me, but I understand there are considerable quantities of denatured alcohol exported from this country into Canada," said Mr. Raney.

Q.—We seem to have a surplus down here? A.—Yes, sir, apparently so.

that more are due to that cause than are actually reported as due to it."

YALE DRIER, SAYS FISHER.

The drys then called to the stand Professor Irving Fisher of Yale University, who said:

"In a recent speech in the Senate, Senator Wesley Jones of the State of Washington criticised The Yale Daily News, our chief undergraduate publication, for its wet editorials. There can be no doubt that the prevailing sentiment among our students is wet. The recently published statistics of the senior class of Yale College showed that 80 per cent. of that class are wet in their sympathies.

"This is a larger proportion than the figures for Harvard reported last year and far larger than the recent survey of eleven colleges, mostly Middle Western, which showed that two-thirds of the men and four-fifths of the women students favor strict enforcement.

"Not only is the Yale students' sentiment prevailing wet, but the city and State in which Yale is located are among the wettest in the nation. Connecticut did not ratify the Eighteenth Amendment and recently refused an opportunity to tighten up its inadequate enforcement legislation. The newspapers of New Haven are uniformly wet. The Judges are wet.

"Besides all this damp atmosphere in which they live and move and have their being, the students largely come from the great wet cities, especially from New York, and a large fraction of the students are from the well-to-do classes that can support wine cellars at home.

"Thus tradition and environment conspire to moisten these young men's minds if not their throats. Moreover, the students are just at that age when we are so often told prohibition is corrupting the youth and with apparent justification.

"If anywhere in this great country prohibition ought to prove a rank failure it should be among such a group of susceptible young men. I have, therefore, taken great pains to ascertain the actual facts in the case, with every desire after ascertaining them from every available source, to face them squarely, exactly as they are.

Quotes Eight Authorities.

"Not relying on my own impressions, I asked the eight authorities who are most familiar with student discipline. These know the facts at first hand and far better than any others. At least two of these eight men I know to be strongly opposed to prohibition. One I know to be strongly in favor. The attitude of the other five I do not know positively, but believe they are mostly opposed. The facts at Yale as these authorities have given them to me in writing are summarized as follows:

Frederick S. Jones, outgoing Dean of Yale College, says:

"I think, on the whole, there is decidedly less drinking than before prohibition, and conditions have been improving with time. On the other hand, the cases with which I have to deal are often more acute than those encountered before prohibition. The college fraternities have forbidden liquor in their houses, and are living up to this rule. The main trouble comes at the time of the great athletic events, when large numbers of young alumni return."

C. W. Mendell, incoming Dean of Yale College:

"I should say, on the whole, that Fay Campbell's summary [see below] of the matter was reasonably good and as near to the facts as one could hope to come. It seems to me, however, that he has overlooked one very important fact. There is more drinking of hard liquor now than there was before prohibition. This, I think, cannot be questioned. In the old days the staple drink was beer, and I am inclined to think that it led to very little harm. The present drinking of hard liquor almost always results in trouble of some sort, so that scenes of public disgrace are rather worse than they used to be. The drinking is more occasional but more disastrous."

Secretary Campbell's Views.

Fay Campbell, Secretary of the Yale University Christian Association:

"The police feel that this year there was less drinking at the junior prom than at any time in many years. There was a great deal of drinking at the games. I am perfectly sure, however, that there was not nearly as much drinking as in 1915, when I was a sophomore. But more men carried flasks, and many men were noticeably drunk.

"The nights before tap day the situation is bad, but the amount of liquor consumed now is considerably less than ten years ago. Saturday night is still a bad night. But I have checked with others, who agree with me that drinking is not the thing to do as it once was."

Charles A. Clarke, professor of French at Sheffield Scientific School:

"I am not a prohibitionist and have never been. I will admit to you, however, that the effect of prohibition at Yale University has been good. I know whereof I speak, for I have been a member of the Committee on Discipline from a time dating back many years before prohibition. I know conditions intimately. I do not pretend that the students are prohibitionists or not drinking. But the change has been simply revolutionary.

"In the old days our committee was constantly busy with cases involving intoxication and the disorders arising from it. Now we have practically no business of the kind at all to transact. Moreover, this is in spite of the fact that in the old days we rarely troubled ourselves about a case of mere intoxication if it had not resulted in some kind of public disorder, whereas now intoxication of itself is regarded as calling for the severest penalty."

Roswell P. Angier (former) Dean of Freshmen:

"Among freshmen the situation got distinctly better from year to year of my administration, September, 1920-June, 1924."

Percy T. Walden (present) Dean of Freshmen:

"There was much more open traffic in liquor at the games this year. The freshmen found more drinking places this year than formerly, at least since prohibition came in."

James R. Angell, President of Yale University:

"I am myself naturally unable to make any comparisons of contemporary Yale with Yale before prohibition, because I never knew it under the earlier conditions. The impression, however, which I get from all well-informed alumni with whom I talk is that despite the all too frequent violation of the law, the amount of drinking at present, and particularly the amount of excessive drinking, is very much less than it was in earlier years."

Fisher Summarizes Conclusions.

Professor Fisher himself went on to say:

"I would summarize my own conclusions, based on the authorities quoted, on my own observations, and on conversations with others informed on the situation, as follows:

"(1) The number of discipline cases in which drinking is a factor is now very much smaller than before prohibition.

"(2) The improvement has been especially noticeable in the last few years.

"(3) Such drinking as still remains is often more concentrated and unrepentant than before prohibition. While liquor that was largely beer was easily obtainable, many got it, got it often, and got in in small quantities. Now that it is harder to get, fewer get it; get it more seldom, but when they do it, make up for lost time.

"(4) Prohibition created a defiant attitude in many students. It is unpopular even among many who do not try to circumvent the law."

"Judging from such discussions as I have heard, Yale College is no exception. Throughout the country the same evidence is available that the present outcry against prohibition gives an exaggerated picture of the evils complained of."

Although not a prohibitionist in the beginning, he had been "converted" to the idea, Professor Fisher stated to the committee.

He started to trace the drop in crime after prohibition to a minimum in 1921, and its subsequent rise.

"How do you account for it?" asked Senator Harreld.

"Inadequate forcement," replied Dr. Fisher.

"The foundation of the whole thing," he continued, "is that alcohol is a narcotic problem. It is a habit-forming drug. No animal except man indulges in it. It is a late perversion of civilization. It is a craving not natural, but acquired.

"If it is a narcotic, the traffic should be forbidden just as the opium traffic is forbidden. But if opium was used as freely, and an attempt would be made to stop it, there would be the same hue and cry."

"You maintain," asked Senator Harreld, "that any one having a craving for alcohol is an addict?"

"Yes, in varying degree. Drug-taking is the quickest way to get release from the modern strain of life."

The old standard of temperance has disappeared, Dr. Fisher declared, saying that now "moderate drinking means only moderate intoxication."

"A man who drinks one glass of beer is just one glass drunk," he added.

In this connection he stated that one to two glasses of beer reduce the capacity of a student to do work by 12 per cent.

Sees $6,000,000,000 Saved Yearly.

Testifying as an economist, Professor Fisher ranged himself with Secretary Hoover, Judge Gary and other industrialists on the side of the saving in industrial efficiency noted since the passage of the Eighteenth Amendment, estimating a point saving to the nation of $6,000,000,000 from prohibition yearly. Professor Fisher said:

"The national income in 1919, the year before prohibition took effect, was estimated at $56,000,000,000 by the National Bureau of Economic Research, our chief authority for such statistics. About three-fourths of this consisted of wages and profits, or $50,000,000,000. Let us assume that the remainder (interest, rent, &c.) was not increased where the large cities and industries are. A rough study shows that two-thirds of our national wealth, three-fourths of our corporate incomes and four-fifths of our personal income subject to the income tax were in this wet territory.

"It follows that at least two-thirds of the nation's wages and profits (and perhaps even three-fourths) were produced in wet area, or over $33,000,000,000. Applying the minimum estimate of 10 per cent., we calculate that at least three and a third billions should be added to our national production by prohibition—or would be added if prohibition were well enforced—simply through the release of human energy and skill.

"This three and a third billions is 5 per cent. of the total income of the whole United States in 1919. It is in addition to two billions, which was saved merely by transferring our energies from alcohol production to something possessing true value. In fact the two billion would have been three or four today were it not for prohibition, or let us say, in accordance with various other estimates—5 per cent. of our total income. In a nutshell, prohibition saves 5 per cent. which used to be wasted out of our income and adds another 5 per cent. into the bargain.

"This double gain, that through the transfer of energy and that through the increase of energy, are together, therefore, over six billions—without counting any savings in the cost of jails, almshouses, asylums, &c., or any economic savings from reducing the death rate.

Increase in National Income.

"Turning now to experience since prohibition, we ask is there any sign of such an increase in national income? There is. We find that the 'real' wages of labor per hour, after making all due allowance for changes in the purchasing power of the dollar, increased over 30 per cent. between 1919, the last year before prohibition, and 1925; also that most of this sudden improvement came immediately after prohibition.

"Between 1890 and 1919, inclusive, the fluctuations in 'real' wages never exceeded 4 per cent. above or below the average level for those twenty-eight years (excepting only once, in 1897, when it was nearly 7 per cent. above). Likewise, beginning with 1920, real wages have remained almost as uniformly close to their new average. This new level is 32 per cent. above the old.

"In other words, with the coming of prohibition wages suddenly rose from the old level which they had kept without much change for over a quarter of a century to a new level a third higher, where it now is.

"Profits have also risen, as has the total income of the country, but the figures for profits are not so nearly up to date. All of us, however, know that our present abounding prosperity is unprecedented. This is one reason for our unprecedented stock market.

"Thus the facts fit perfectly with the theory that prohibition should increase wages and profits by at least 5 per cent. In fact, they leave a margin six times that figure to take account of other causes as well as of the fact that this 5 per cent. is a sane minimum and for the fact that prohibition is not fully enforced.

"Personally, I am inclined to believe that prohibition has saved and added much more than the six billions which I have estimated as a safe minimum.

"But it is always better to keep on the safe side and to mention no higher figure specifically; for even a paltry six billions a year is well worth saving. This is one reason why Gary, Leland and other industrialists believe in prohibition. Evidently, if prohibition enforcement cost us a billion a year, it would be well worth while purely as an economic investment."

Urges Education for Dry Law.

On the abandonment of their educational program by the drys and their reliance on a strictly law enforcement procedure after the passage of the Eighteenth Amendment, Professor Fisher said:

"It is my firm conviction that a great tactical blunder has been made virtually by the drys in dropping their educational program and turning to a mere law observance program. Prohibition made its great strides when the evils of alcohol were stressed. It lost ground as soon as that emphasis was lost.

"The public which had not already been converted to prohibition and who never understood the solid reasons for urban prohibition by judges and clergymen and exhorted to obey the law merely because it was the law, have acquired the impression that no other reason for obeying this law exists. They have acquired the idea that this prohibition law is a bad law, resting only on the whimsical ideas of fanatics. No one can be really enthusiastic over obeying a bad law believed to have been put over on us.

"What is needed is to go back to first principles and educate the public to understand that there's a reason and a good one."

In contrasting the argument that personal liberty had been interfered with, an argument which he declared a "hollow farce," Professor Fisher said:

"Ask the wife of a workingman about the personal liberty of her husband. His personal liberty to drink takes away her personal liberty to eat."

Although the committee questioned yesterday whether William M. Forgrave, State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, would be permitted to file statements from Massachusetts business men in favor of prohibition, he was allowed to do so this afternoon after Dr. Fisher ended his testimony.

FOOTBALL COACH HEARD.

The next witness, who was one of the most interesting presented by the drys, was Amos Alonzo Stagg, famous football coach of the Middle West. He spoke with spirit and fire in declaring prohibition should be supported by all the American people.

"I am the director of the Department of Physical Education and Athletics at the University of Chicago," said Mr. Stagg. "I think it is fair for me to say that I have come here without having any membership in any of the organizations which have invited me, and I have had nothing whatever to do with the bringing about of prohibition, so what I say is entirely the result of my own observation and without any bias of any sort.

"My interest in prohibition dates back to the time when I was a boy," he continued. "Fortunately or, as some may say, unfortunately, I was born in very poor circumstances, and our neighborhood was a neighborhood of poor people who were laborers or factory workers, and this neighborhood was very much given to drinking, and on very many occasions, as a boy, I saw the heads of nine out of ten families in our block drunk at different times. And I saw many fist fights and many other things which I regret that I ever had a chance to see.

"As a boy I accompanied the other boys as they carried their pails to get the beer, but fortunately my father told me never to go into the saloons. But I saw these drunken occasions and in fact it gave me thrills which boys nowadays get out of the movies.

"I saw multitudes of keg parties, in which the young men of the neighborhood indulged, and I saw scores of young men get drunk on these occasions.

"The whole point is purely this: That some say you cannot get drunk on beer, but I know otherwise, because I know those men were drinking beer as I hovered around the saloons and saw them drinking. I did not carry the pails, but the boys I was with carried the pails of beer from which they drank the beer which caused the intoxication. And I saw these keg parties where the young men got drunk, so I do know that men got drunk on beer in those days, and women, too.

Saw Women in Fisticuffs.

"The next but one neighbor to my home, the woman, was constantly on a 'tear.' That is, two or three times a week, and she was always in altercations with the across-the-way neighbor, so that many times have I seen the two out in the middle of the road going to it in a rough and tumble fight. I know that people can get drunk on beer and I know that before prohibition came there was an immense lot of drunkenness, not only where I was brought up in West Orange, N. J., but in the surrounding blocks there I saw enough of it to know exactly what did happen.

"When I went to Yale I regret to say that I saw a great deal of it there. And I saw many of my college mates get drunk. They did not always get drunk on the beer, but they got drunk on the wine when they chose to drink that.

"Then I went to Chicago, where I have been for thirty-four years. I observed the drinking that was going on in the neighborhood of Hyde Park and along the thoroughfare of Fifty-fifth Street, and I have seen scores of men—I did not spend a lot of time on the street—but I have seen scores of men coming up from Lake Avenue along Fifty-fifth Street drunk. Now, since prohibition I have seen very, very few men, in my visits to Fifty-fifth Street, drunk, and I know that there is a tremendous lot of difference in the neighborhood where I live in reference to that matter since prohibition.

"I have been at the University of Chicago all these years since the beginning, and have had to do with athletics, and I have had intimate contact with all of the students, and I have known a large number of the students intimately. I want to say this: that the university from the beginning took a strong stand against drinking, and the officers of the university and members of the Faculty created a sentiment against it, so that there has never been anything like the drinking at the University of Chicago that I saw at Yale. And I can say this with honesty, that there has not been nearly as much drinking since prohibition came in as before."

Students Pledge Against Drink.

"How many students have you in that school?" asked Senator Harreld.

"We have in general 5,000," Mr. Stagg answered. "Part of them are women. Now the parties which are held at the University of Chicago are held on the students' honor that they will not drink. Our promenade, which corresponds to the Yale promenade, is one at which the students on their honor do not drink. I know what the conditions are there. I know them intimately.

"As a coach I do not believe, and none of the coaches that train men believe, in the use of alcoholic beverages. I was a member of the coaching staff of the Olympic team two years ago, and that was one of the forbidden things when we went over to Paris, that the men were not to drink anything except water, and we took our water over with us. When we got over there we found that the Paris water was even purer than the spring water that we took along with us. The coaches and trainers generally are dead against the use of alcoholic liquors in training, even beers."

"Over in Paris," Senator Harreld interrupted, "they advise you not to drink water because it is not healthful over there, do they not?"

"Yes, they do that, but we had a chemical analysis made of the water over there and found it was really purer than what we took over in our casks," Mr. Stagg replied.

"Now the American athletes stand up on the top. There are none better. And the only ones that approximated us at all were the Finnish athletes, and they do not use liquor. So that there is not any question about the fact that the use of liquor in training is a detriment. And, as Mr. Fisher said, it is not the sort of stuff to do training with.

Enlarged Freedom of Youth.

"Now it has been said, or at least I have read it, that a considerable lot of crime has been committed of recent years, and you asked the question, Mr. Chairman, in reference to it. I have another theory on that. I believe that a great deal of the looseness which has happened has been due to the enlarged freedom of the young folk. I believe that the breaking down of the family, of the home life, has had an awful lot to do with the looseness which now prevails.

"An educator came to my home recently and we were discussing the matter of the larger freedom of the boys and the girls, and he told me that in California his daughter and two other girls had gone off into the mountains with three boys for three weeks simply on a camping trip. And they were perfectly fine people. Well, that certainly is a change from the old standards of conduct for girls to do that sort of thing.

"And yet the girls of today are more of the comrade, they are trying to be, at least, and they have acquired a freedom that they did not possess once. I do not believe in it. I think that it is tremendously important that there be a moral wave sweep this country and a religious wave, too, that will bring the families together again, where fathers and mothers will look after the welfare of their children and give them a consistent discipline and bringing up of the right sort, instead of being so irregular in every way, where the parents are running away from their duties and responsibilities, and are looking for personal pleasure rather than taking care of the responsibilities they have in the homes.

"I think it is that enlarged freedom which to a degree has brought about this recent daring where girls are willing to drink and they take the dare—or rather, I said they won't take the dare and they are doing the comrade act.

Asks Fair Trial for Law.

"I personally feel that things are nothing like as bad as they have been painted to be. There is an immense lot of young folks of today who are not as they have been painted at all. They are sound, essentially sound. And I think that they will come into their balance again.

"I have talked with a good many people and it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that what should be done is simply to back up the law as it should be backed up. I believe that it should be backed up. And this whole nation should get together and cooperate on this thing.

"Simply set aside their own personal wishes and desires and get back of the law. That is what the people out where I come from demand. We ask that the law have a fair trial. It has not had a fair trial. There are a whole lot of folks that have not been playing the game on the square and according to the rules of the game.

"That is all."

Applause greeted the statement of Mr. Stagg.

CANADIAN PASTOR'S VIEWS.

The final witness of the afternoon was the Rev. W. W. Peck, D. D., a minister of the United Church of Canada and Educational Secretary of the Prohibition Federation of Canada. He lives in Toronto.

After describing the various Canadian systems of liquor control, Dr. Peck asserted that the liquor store in Canada was the source of supply for the bootlegger. He explained to Senator Walsh that he meant that because the liquor stores generally closed at night and were closed before 10 o'clock in the morning, the bootlegger placed his trade in the closed hours.

Vancouver Dr. Peck described as "the bootleggers' paradise." The bootleggers became so active in Vancouver, he said, that one member of the British Columbia Assembly proposed to dot the city with Government stores, cut the price of liquor in half and run three eight-hour shifts of employes to keep the stores open twenty-four hours.

Dr. Peck sharply disputed the figures given last week by Francis William Russell of the Moderation League of Canada, who opposed prohibition. Dr. Peck said that when he read the figures of Mr. Russell he found them wrong. Mr. Russell had given the number of seized stills as: 1919, 400; 1920, 40; 1921, 40; 1922, 800; but Dr. Peck said they should be respectively 20, 21, 16 and 43. He also disputed Mr. Russell's figures on drunkenness, arrests and inmates of asylums.

"What are the figures now?" asked Senator Reed.

"I went to your Congressional Library today to get them, but I was told the books were not there and had probably been taken out by a United States Senator," Dr. Peck replied.

"Can you explain the disparity between the Russell figures and yours?" asked Senator Walsh.

"No, I am not in the confidence of Mr. Russell; I simply give figures from Government reports."

Although the Provinces had been promised that the Government control of liquor would reduce their debts, the debts had been increased, the witness stated.

More Hard Liquor Drinking.

He contrasted dry Ontario with wet Quebec, greatly to the disadvantage of the latter, and said also that whereas the amount of beer consumed at Government sale had increased, the amount of hard liquor had also increased.

Sales of hard liquor had been reduced in Montreal, he admitted, but he put this down to the efficiency of the American patrol on the international border rather than to the introduction of beer and light wines.

"Your hard liquor man doesn't take kindly to beer as a substitute; when drinking beer he becomes waterlogged before he becomes exhilarated," he asserted.

The committee questioned Dr. Peck at some length on why men and women were permitted to drink in bars under the Government system in some parts of Canada. He said this was due to the Moderation League.

Almost at the end of the hearing Senator Reed asked Dr. Peck how he came to testify in Washington. He said that the Rev. Dr. Clarence True Wilson of the Board of Temperance, Morals and Prohibition of the Methodist Episcopal Church asked him to do so.

"Have you any connection with the Anti-Saloon League?" asked Mr. Reed.

"None," replied Dr. Peck, who, however, said that sometimes the league of which he is Secretary sent contributions to the World League Against Alcohol. His league comprises the various provincial prohibition organizations of Canada.

Senator Reed asked Dr. Peck if he had prepared his contradictions of the Russell testimony after he reached the United States. He said he had not; that he prepared it in Canada after reading the Russell testimony there in THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The hearing will be resumed Monday.

MELLON WILL BACK ANDREWS TO LIMIT

Washington Believes Only a Request From Coolidge Would Oust the General.

DRY LEAGUE IS RETICENT

But McKellar Urges Andrews's Removal and Assails Mellon's Attitude.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 17.—In the face of a movement by the Drys to force the removal of General Lincoln C. Andrews from charge of prohibition enforcement, there were strong indications today that Secretary Mellon will back the Assistant Secretary to the limit, and will pay no attention to criticisms of General Andrews's statements before the Senate committee.

In some quarters it is believed that knowledge of this fact has been one important reason for the central body of the Anti-Saloon League failing to ask for the General's removal.

The feeling here is that only a request from the White House that General Andrews withdraw could result in his downfall, and the indications all are that the President, as well as Secretary Mellon, do not intend to take any step in that direction.

General Andrews, it is understood here, was selected personally by Secretary Mellon to take over the post of Federal enforcement chief, as an assistant secretary, and, while Mr. Mellon and General Andrews have differed on some matters in regard to the prohibition work, there has been no break of serious proportions.

League Silent on Andrews.

Following the afternoon session of the senatorial hearings the legislative committee of the Anti-Saloon League held a meeting today, ostensibly to determine whether the dry forces should demand the head of General Andrews at once. After the meeting, however, a statement was given out in which no mention whatever was made of the General. The statement reads:

"The Legislative Committee of the Anti-Saloon League of America has authorized no official statement concerning the testimony has been given on the prohibition question before the sub-committee of the Senate committee on the judiciary, and has no statement to make at the present time."

This was signed by James Cannon Jr., Arthur J. Barton, W. E. Wheeler and Ernest H. Cherrington.

Those in touch with the dry leaders said later the statement was meant to show that, no matter what statements about General Andrews had been made by individual members of the league, the organization itself could not be placed on record as having criticized him one way or the other. At the same time it was made plain that the league is at liberty to issue a statement about General Andrews at any time.

It was agreed by all those present to make no personal statement of their attitude toward General Andrews, because this might involve the league as having taken a definite stand.

McKellar Calls for Removal.

Senator McKellar of Tennessee, one of the dry leaders in Congress, issued a statement today, in which he called for the immediate removal of General Andrews, and declared that administration of prohibition should be taken from Secretary Mellon. The Senator gave a political color to his statement by adding that "we can't possibly expect that to be done unless we have a Democratic Congress."

The prohibition discussion is expected now to become even more intense, with the drys manoeuvring to strengthen their hold and prevent inroads from the wets. Senator Borah in his speech this week paved the way for an airing of the subject in the Senate, while the drys have a bill for tightening up enforcement condition, which some have predicted will be forced to the front before adjournment.

Anti-Saloon League directors will determine the course of the campaign against the wet movement at a meeting here Monday. They will try to arouse the dry sentiment of the country to get solidly behind a drive to keep prohibition secure, and discipline those officials whom they regard as being unsympathetic toward their cause.

Senator McKellar's Statement.

In his attack on General Andrews, Senator McKellar said that men should be put at the head of enforcement who are sympathetic with the law. His statement follows:

"When the liquor hearings were first proposed my impression was that they were wholly useless at this time and would probably do more harm than good. I am convinced that I was mistaken.

"Two factions have been developed by the hearings that are of great moment and concern.

"First, the contention that the liquor advocates will have liquor in any way that they can obtain it, regardless of the Constitution and law. This is shown by the declaration of Senator Bruce on the floor of the Senate on April 14:

"'I know, as I said before, that, whether we like it or dislike it, the affluent portion of the American population are going to have their wine—Constitution or no Constitution, statute or no statute.'

"It is well for the country to know this contention of the liquor people.

Criticises General Andrews.

"The second fact of importance that has been developed is that the present enforcement authorities are not in sympathy with the law and are not trying to enforce it. I had hoped that General Andrews was really trying to do his duty, but his own evidence makes it absolutely certain that he has no sympathy with the law, and, of course, he has not really been trying to enforce it.

"I have long said that as long as we keep the liquor interests in charge of law enforcement that there would be no efficient enforcement of the laws. In the very nature of Mr. Mellon's situation, being so greatly interested in the liquor business himself, no one could really expect an efficient enforcement of the law from him or from any organization under him.

"General Andrews should be removed at once, and, of course, the Administration of the liquor laws should be taken out of Secretary Mellon's hands. We can't possibly expect that to be done unless we have a Democratic Congress.

"These hearings have demonstrated that the prohibition laws should be strengthened rather than weakened, and the best possible way I know to strengthen them is to put them in the hands of men who are friendly to enforcement rather than in the hands of men who are interested in violating them."

Senator Tyson of Tennessee, the colleague of Senator McKellar, came out with a statement today declaring himself flatly in favor of prohibition. He was convinced, he said, that the testimony of the wets at the congressional hearings would only rebound against them, and that if this Congress did not grant more money for enforcement subsequent Congresses would.

MANITOBA AMENDS DRY LAW.

Tightens Up Enforcement Over Conservative and Labor Protests.

WINNIPEG, Manitoba, April 17 (AP).—Four of the five Government bills for tightening up liquor law enforcement have been given the third and final reading in the Legislature. Opposition to many of the clauses was maintained by Conservative and Labor members to the bitter end.

The fifth bill, which amends the Liquor Appeals act, was held in Committee of the Whole, after a protest by Major F. G. Taylor, Conservative leader. The protest was made because of the expense entailed by people in country districts having to take appeals to the Court of King's Bench in Winnipeg. Major Taylor asserted that county court Judges at outside points were competent to deal with such appeals.

The bills put through the final stages amend the Government Liquor Control act, the Manitoba Summary Convictions act, the Manitoba Interpretation act and the Manitoba Temperance act.

TO RULE ON SEIZED BOATS.

Supreme Court to Decide on Dry Agents' Right to Dispose of Them.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., April 17 (AP).—The question whether prohibition agents have the right to accept and sell vehicles or boats seized by local police authorities for carrying liquor has been taken to the Federal Supreme Court by Daniel T. Hagan of this city, attorney for William E. Dodge and Joshua T. Dodge, owners of the motor boat Ray of Block Island, which was seized, laden with liquor, by the Providence police April 18, 1924.

Judge Arthur J. Brown, of the Federal Court here, ordered the boat returned on the ground that enforcement of the Volstead act by the police was not mandatory. The Circuit Court in Boston agreed that it was not mandatory, but ruled that the police were within their rights. Mr. Hagan yesterday filed a brief and petition on a writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court.

WHEELER RIDICULES SLOGAN OF THE WETS

Asserts Over Radio That Prohibition "Facts" Are In Health, Morals and Prosperity.

OPPONENTS TAUNT DRYS

Declare That $750,000,000 for Enforcement Would Cause a Taxpayers' Revolt.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 17.—In an address delivered tonight by radio over station WMAL, Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel of the Anti-Saloon League of America, taunted the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment for adopting the slogan "Face the Facts," and asserted that the wets must be prepared to face the facts set down in statements by Henry Ford, Judge Gary, John D. Rockefeller Jr. and other prominent men which were recently made public by a Baltimore organization. These statements pictured prohibition as contributing materially to the welfare of the business interests.

"Facts are the last things the liquor interests wish to face," said Mr. Wheeler. "They cleverly shout the slogan 'Face the Facts' to create the impression that the drys are hiding something, while they dodge the facts themselves. Their challenge is a brazen bluff. In interviews, made public for the first time, recognized business leaders of the nation give us the latest facts about prohibition and business.

"The facts about prohibition's success are registered in the health, morals and prosperity of the nation which it has benefited. The facts of drink and the lawlessness it promotes are written in the death rolls, bankruptcy courts, charity appeals and crime records. America faced the facts when she banned booze and will not shut her eyes because the brewers request it."

The Association Against the Prohibition Amendment made a counter-attack on the Anti-Saloon League, suggesting that the drys, who claim to have a big majority in Congress, seek legislation for prohibition enforcement which would call for expenditures of $7[illegible],000,000, which, the association contended, was the figure set by United States Attorney Buckner of New York and General Lincoln C. Andrews, head of the Federal agencies.

Such a move, the association said, would be welcomed by it, but the organization forecast that a taxpayers' revolt would be started if the country was called upon to shoulder such a burden.

"The Anti-Saloon League witnesses have testified," said Captain Stayton, National Chairman of the wet organization, "that there is not sufficient strength behind the prohibition laws to make them effective, but that this strength will be forthcoming if the Government will spend more money. We are delighted that the Anti-Saloon League and its friends have taken this ground, and we enthusiastically endorse the proposed move.

"In demanding more money for enforcement the drys, of course, admit that the law which they have so many times declared perfect is not perfect. However, the remedy lies in their own hands.

"Prohibition Chief Andrews and District Attorney Buckner pointed out in their testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, in their opinion, the law can be enforced if the Government will spend $750,000,000 this year for enforcement.

"The Anti-Saloon League claims something like 380 'dry' Congressmen in the present House of Representatives and a majority in the Senate. If this be true, the league can easily bring about the appropriation of the required amount.

"It is true that $750,000,000 is a large expenditure, and one which will hamper Mr. Coolidge's economy program and cause the taxpayers to emit louder and more poignant groans, but the sum is a mere bagatelle alongside the losses which the country has already suffered through the operation of the Volstead law.

"If the Anti-Saloon League does not lay the lash upon Congress and bring about the immediate appropriation of the hundreds of millions of dollars which its own friends admit are necessary to make the Volstead law effective, this association will be forced to conclude that the league is satisfied with the present condition of chaos so far as enforcement is concerned.

"Enforce or modify should be the demand of every citizen, and we want the proponents of the Volstead law to have every opportunity to satisfy themselves that it is completely impractical in its present form."

WANTS RESERVATION DRY.

Head of Oregon Indian Lands Asks for Prohibition Agents.

WASHINGTON, April 17 (AP).—A request for two Federal prohibition officers to be assigned to the Klamath Indian reservation in Oregon was made to the Indian Bureau today by Superintendent Arnold of the reservation, but at the same time he said disorders which had been reported there occurred mostly on land which had been deeded by the Indians and not on the reservation.

The superintendent submitted a report to Commissioner Burke, who had been apprised of reports of drunkenness on the reservation. Prosecuting Attorney Elliott had asked Federal intervention because of a court decision holding State authorities without jurisdiction on the Indian lands.

"Have investigated Elliott's report on drunkenness and rioting," Arnold said. "Have gone over reservation and found no evidence to substantiate report. Have conferred with Elliott, who admitted telegram based on uninvestigated reports.

"Most disorders occurred on deeded land in Chiloquin, Sprague River and Beatty, which appears distributing point for liquor to Indians.

"Circuit Judge of Klamath County recently ruled State has no jurisdiction over Indians within reservation. Indian prisoners are being released from county jail.

"Misdemeanors among Indians probably will increase. Recommend two Federal prohibition officers assigned to this reservation immediately."

PROSECUTION CLOSES IN WILLIAMS TRIAL

Defence Makes Unsuccessful Attempt to Impeach the General's Testimony.

MAY TRANSFER BUTLER

Military and Naval Men Foresee Personnel Changes If Accused Is Acquitted.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., April 17.—Both prosecution and defense concluded their testimony today in the court-martial of Colonel Alexander Williams, Fourth Regiment, U. S. M. C., charged by General Smedley D. Butler with intoxication, and arguments will be presented on Monday.

The announcement that no more witnesses would be called came as a surprise, for it was confidently expected that the colored maid said to have mixed and served the cocktails at the Williams residence on March 6 would be put on the stand.

Thus far there has been but one suggestion as to what the cocktails contained, that the intoxicating element was gin. However, as court-martial appears to loom against some of the witnesses on charges of perjury, it is predicted that the maid will be called to establish the fact that the liquor drunk by the witnesses did contain intoxicants.

Another attempt was made to impeach the testimony of General Butler.

Captain Clifton Cates, defense attorney and witness, whose testimony conflicted with that of General Butler, admitted that this was his intention when he questioned Captain George Stokes concerning conversations with the General's aid, Colonel Ellis Miller.

Colonel Miller is in temporary command of the Fourth Regiment, succeeding Colonel Williams, whose command was suspended when he was placed under technical arrest on the intoxication charge.

"Are you trying to impeach the testimony of General Butler by impeaching the statements of Colonel Miller, made on the witness stand?" asked Captain Leo Hermle, the naval prosecutor.

"Yes," replied Captain Cates. "Colonel Miller gave testimony conflicting with that of Captain Cates in connection with a conversation between General Butler and Captain Cates."

"You cannot impeach General Butler's testimony by impeaching the statements of his aid," Captain Hermle declared.

"Did you hear Captain Cates say, 'The General thinks we're all a bunch of liars'? and did you hear Colonel Miller say, 'Cates, drop that sort of thing'?" the lawyer asked.

"No, I did not," Captain Stokes replied.

Major J. L. Doxey, another guest at the party which Colonel Williams gave in honor of General Butler, was called to the stand.

Major Doxey testified that in his opinion Colonel Williams was not intoxicated at the Hotel del Coronado.

"What was the nature of the accused's eyes?" he was asked.

"There was nothing abnormal about them."

Lieutenant Francis Wilburn, another guest at the party, was asked whether he had had a conversation with Captain Stokes regarding Colonel Williams having been in Tia Juana on the day of the party.

"I did not," the witness replied. "But there were such rumors around headquarters."

Shortly thereafter the court was adjourned until Monday.

The court-martial already has occupied five days of testimony, whereas it was first thought it could be completed in two or three days.

The possible transfer of General Butler, should the case go against him, was hinted in military and naval circles today. Predictions that Colonel Williams would be acquitted were freely made. Confidence of the defense that this would be the case, it is said, prevented Colonel or Mrs. Williams from being called during the trial.

Sweeping changes in the officer personnel of the San Diego marine base will follow the court-martial, according to those high in authority at the base. These changes will take place regardless of whether Colonel Williams is convicted or not, it is declared.

Several of the higher ranking officers have announced their intention of asking for transfers, presumably because they do not desire to serve longer under the command of General Butler.

The court-martial is expected to end on Monday.

BERLIN HAS BOOTLEGGERS.

City Is Unable to Control Smugglers by Guarding Roads.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, April 17.—The City of Berlin is in the hands of an army of bootleggers, against whom the authorities are practically helpless. Though there is no law against the sale of liquor, the city has levied a special tax which retailers in the suburbs escape.

When the wine growers complained that their products were not being sold on account of the high taxes, and that vineyards were not employing their labor, the Reich removed the tax.

Berlin then decided to impose a special tax, so the wholesalers decided to get their wet goods by truck from other cities and avoid the local duties.

Now the city has customs officials on the principal roads entering Berlin with instructions to search trucks and autos, but the smuggling continues unabated. The city fathers are wondering whether the taxes will bring in sufficient to pay the cost of collection.

BRITISH ARE DUBIOUS OF NEW LIQUOR TREATY

Political Experts Say American Move Would Greatly Embarrass the Government.

LONDON, April 17 (AP).—Officials here are disinclined to discuss the news that officials of the American State Department are considering proposing a new liquor treaty with Great Britain. Political observers, however, profess to see considerable embarrassment for the British Government if such a suggestion is advanced formally.

Political experts sum up the situation by saying the liquor interests here are so powerful that any Government would encounter formidable opposition in attempting to sign a formal compact precluding the exportation of alcoholic beverages in any direction.

It is stated that the Government is doing its best to administer the export laws in such manner as to discourage rum-running.

Several weeks ago, American Ambassador Houghton instituted discussions with the Foreign Office with a view to securing stricter control of liquor exports from England, and it is stated that the Government has since done much to tighten the regulations.

British officialdom has always expressed a sympathetic attitude toward America's problem in enforcing the prohibition law.

CANADA FIGHTS SMUGGLING.

Orders Customs Men to Aid Border Officers in War on Liquor.

OTTAWA, Ontario, April 17 (AP).—The Department of Customs has notified Canadian customs collectors to supply United States border officers with information regarding suspicious clearances of vessels, containing liquor cargoes and information in regard to suspected smuggling.

The instructions are in conformity with the treaty between Canada and the United States for suppression of smuggling.

Berg Resigns as Buckner's Aid.

Assistant United States Attorney William Berg resigned yesterday from United States Attorney Emory R. Buckner's staff to return to private practice. Mr. Berg's reason for resignation was that the salary was insufficient. He has prosecuted numbers of defendants in commercial fraud cases and was referred to by Mr. Buckner as the man who "never made an enemy or lost a friend." He will open offices at 303 Broadway.

Ask Removal of General Andrews.

LINCOLN, Neb., April 17 (AP).—The Nebraska Anti-Saloon League today wired the legislative committee of the national organization meeting in Washington, urging the committee to ask the removal of Assistant Secretary Andrews.

PASSAIC MILL TIE-UP ENTERS 13TH WEEK

10,000 Workers Idle 3 Months as Dozens of Attempts Fail to End Textile Strike.

THEIR LEADERS ARE IN JAIL

Bitter Clashes With Police Mark Struggle of Employes to Better Working Conditions and Pay.

The strike of textile workers in Passaic, Garfield and Clifton will enter its thirteenth week tomorrow. Beginning as a suspension by a small group of workers in the Botany-Garfield Worsted Mills, it spread until it affected nearly all the mills in the Passaic, Garfield and Clifton areas. At its peak more than 10,000 workers were idle.

If the strike ends soon it will be largely because of the absence of the leaders, most of whom have been arrested, and because of the specially energetic action of Sheriff Nimmo of Bergen County and the action of Sheriff Morgan of Passaic County, who assumes direction of the police situation in Passaic tomorrow.

Revival of a Civil War statute, the Riot act, by Sheriff Nimmo is being fought by the American Civil Liberties Union. Private meeting halls in Garfield have been closed and all meetings in that city are forbidden, even though they may be held in private halls or on private grounds.

Hundreds of armed guards at the mills during the day and in the mill district at night furnishing ample protection to the mill workers, it is expected by the mill owners, will result in an early end of the walkout, which has cost the employers an enormous loss in business.

Strike Began on Jan. 22.

The strike in the Botany Worsted Mills began on Jan. 22. It had been brewing since last September, when the mill reduced wages by 10 per cent., "owing to action taken in other textile centres several months ago and on account of general market conditions."

The officials of the mills asserted that they were never given an opportunity to deal with their employees' committees, which rushed the operatives out of the mills without notice. The strikers said one cause of the walkout was the dismissal of workers with grievances.

Eventually formal demands were served on the mill owners. They included the abolition of the wage cut, a 10 per cent. increase in wages, time and a half for overtime, a forty-four-hour week, as against a forty-eight-hour week, better sanitary conditions, no discrimination against union workers and recognition of the union, known as the United Front Committee.

The employers retorted with a refusal of all demands. They refused to see a committee headed by Albert Weisbord, organizer of the United Front Committee, because he was a Communist. They said business conditions prevented a wage increase and that all their troubles were caused by Weisbord and outside agitators."

Weisbord was careful not to discuss his political views at mass meetings of the strikers. Observers are of the opinion that his personality is chiefly responsible for the duration of the strike. The mill owners admit that Weisbord's hold on the strikers was quite extraordinary. The strike leader is thin and frail and does not look older than his 25 years. He is a graduate of Harvard Law School and of the College of the City of New York.

Mills Are Picketed.

Directly the strike in the Botany Mills was called the strikers began picketing the other mills. Soon the workers in the Passaic Worsted Mills, the New Jersey Worsted Spinning Company and the Gera Mills joined the strikers.

The Forstmann & Huffmann Company, one of the largest mills, shut down its plant on Feb. 24, announcing that it took the step to place its workers "on call" because of "intimidation by strikers." This mill did not make the 10 per cent. wage reduction last Fall.

As some of the mills did not shut down entirely, the strikers resorted to mass picketing. They marched in thousands past the mills, crossing the bridges separating the towns and singing their strike songs. Some confusion was caused by the different policies of the police in the various towns. When the pickets sought to enter Clifton from Garfield, where the police did not molest them and where the Town Council gave them a vote of sympathy, the Clifton police attempted to bar the paraders. The picketers refused to turn back and the first of several sanguinary battles occurred, the police charging the crowd and making a number of arrests.

Clashes between the police and pickets increased. Most of the clashes occurred over a difference of opinion between pickets and police regarding the rights of the strikers. Weisbord admonished his followers not to yield the right to march past the mills two by two. The first major battle between the police took place at the Botany Mills in Passaic on March 2, when the police used tear bombs, fire hose, mounted police and motorcycle officers to disperse a crowd of 2,000 strikers.

Disperse Paraders With Water.

The strikers poured out of a meeting hall a block from the mill and at first were permitted by the police to straggle past the mills. Except for a few hoots and jeers at the police and toward the mills, there was no trouble and there appeared to be no prospect of trouble. Then, for some unexplained reason, the strikers were not permitted to march past the mills. They milled about the corner, hemmed in by the police, jeering and taunting until finally Chief of Police Richard O. Zober threw several tear bombs to disperse them. When these failed, he ordered out the Fire Department. The streams from the icy nozzles dispersed the crowd. Several arrests were made.

This incident and the battle between police and strikers next day ended the rather peaceful phase of the strike. The following day small boys who threw stones and pieces of ice enraged the Clifton police, who charged the strikers and sympathizers on the dividing line between Clifton and Passaic. Newspaper photographers intent on taking pictures of the scene were chased by the police, who smashed their cameras, and reporters were beaten.

The first attempt to bring peace was made through a citizens' committee headed by Mayor James H. McGuire of Passaic, who proposed that the grievances of the strikers be arbitrated. The strikers insisted that they be represented by Weisbord on any committee that might be named, but the mill owners refused to deal with Weisbord or to recognize the union. Late in the strike one of the mill managers said he would have dealt with an accredited American Federation of Labor union. Weisbord took up the question of cooperation with the American Federation of Labor, and President William Green wrote that the A. F. of L. recognized the United Textile Workers' Union as having jurisdiction over the textile workers and he could not recognize the United Front Committee.

Dozen Attempts Fail.

A dozen other attempts to settle the strike failed. Mediators from the United States Department of Labor put forward a plan of arbitration involving a return of the strikers to the mills and arbitration of their demands. Weisbord was ignored in the plan and the strikers turned it down.

The Passaic Chamber of Commerce and several newspapers suggested mediation by Governor Moore but no progress was made along these lines.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, the Rev. Dr. John Howard Melish, rector of Trinity Church, Brooklyn; Paul U. Kellogg, editor of The Survey, and John Lovejoy Elliott of the Hudson Guild offered their services as mediators. The offer was accepted by the strikers and rejected by Colonel F. A. H. Johnson of the Botany Mills.

Local ministers and merchants named committees to meet strikers and employers. The American Legion took a hand in the situation but also without success.

In the midst of these efforts Weisbord and a committee of strikers, accompanied by Frank P. Walsh, went to Washington with a plan for the formation of a Federal Industrial Relations Committee to investigate conditions in the mills. They said the textile workers received between $10 and $19 a week and urged on Senators to adopt a resolution creating a commission to ascertain why it was necessary for women to work at night in the mills where their husbands were employed during the day.

The mill owners' reply was that women were required in textile mills because of their deftness and they put the average of pay as being between $15 and $23 a week. The most highly skilled operatives, it was said, were paid as high as $40 a week.

Much Help for Strikers.

As the strike dragged on the leaders interested sympathetic groups in various parts of the East in the plight of the strikers. Committees were formed to assist the destitute and needy. A committee including Mrs. Stephen S. Wise, whose daughter worked in Passaic for some time; Mrs. Henry Goddard Leach, Mrs. Gordon Norrie and Mrs. Jacob Wertheim worked actively for the strikers.

The strike entered its third phase on April 8, when Julius Forstmann of Forstmann & Huffmann announced that his mill would reopen in a few days. This stiffened the resistance of the strikers, who planned a strong picket line for the vicinity of the Forstmann & Huffmann mills. The Garfield and Bergen County authorities were notified of the mills' intention to open their gates at an early date and preparations were accordingly made.

Last Monday a long picket line in Garfield was stopped by the police, and Deputy Sheriffs ordered the pickets to walk away from the Forstmann & Huffmann mills. The leaders refused and Sheriff Nimmo read the Riot act, a statute adopted after the Civil War, ordering the dispersal of a crowd within an hour. In a few minutes half a dozen arrests were made, including Rebert Dunn of the American Civil Liberties Union and Esther Lowell of the Federated Press, who stopped to assist a woman to her feet after she had been knocked down in the melee.

Justice of the Peace Louis Hargreaves, who had previously fixed $500 as the amount of bail necessary for persons arrested on the picket line, fixed $10,000 in some of the new cases. This amount was attacked as excessive and oppressive by attorneys for the American Civil Liberties Union.

High Bail Fixed for Leaders.

A meeting hall in Garfield and a private park owned cooperatively by residents, including strikers, was closed by the Sheriff, who announced that the town was under virtual martial law because of the reading of the Riot act. Exception was taken to this opinion by the American Civil Liberties Union and the League for Industrial Democracy. Norman Thomas of the latter organization volunteered to test the Riot act. He spoke from the stump of a tree on a plot of ground rented for the afternoon and was arrested and held in $10,000 bail.

In the meantime Weisbord had been arrested and bail of $30,000 asked on three charges, inciting to riot, inciting against the Government and introducing Communist matter. Most of the leaders were also jailed, and the outlook for the strikers appeared dark. The future of the strike is uncertain. From their cells in jail the strike leaders assert that their followers "will stand firm for victory." The mill owners predict an early end of the struggle.

GERRY ASKS TEXTILE INQUIRY.

Would Broaden Scope of Proposed Passaic Investigation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 17.—Senator Gerry of Rhode Island called on the Senate today for a thorough investigation of the cotton textile industry. His speech was in connection with the pending resolution for an investigation of the Passaic strike, which Senator Borah has threatened to bring before the Senate by a motion to discharge the Committee on Manufactures. That committee is to take the measure up Monday in executive session.

Senator Gerry said the scope of the investigation should be increased so that conditions elsewhere may be made the subject of inquiry. The Senator explained his position as follows:

"I understand that there has been some opposition to the proposed legislation on account of the question as to whether the Federal Government should go into a matter of this sort. The question I do not intend to discuss, but I do think that if the Committee on Manufactures should consider the resolution and authorize and conduct such an investigation it ought to enlarge its scope and not limit it to one manufacturing corporation, but have it apply to the entire cotton textile industry.

is being held in $10,000 bail, Sir, on the overt act of the other person."

He contended that when Weisbord urged the strikers to "meet the scabs and talk to them as you know how," at a meeting on April 8 at Ukrainian Hall, he was not, as charged, inciting to riot. As for the allegation that he had on this occasion urged the strikers to "pull down the scab's noses" Mr. Feder asserted that this was only a figurative phrase. Of the third complaint, alleging that Weisbord had "participated in meetings of the Workers or Communist Party," he contended that this was within a citizen's rights. "The law permits a man to attend any meeting so long as he uses no expressions indicating an urge to hostility to the government and welfare of the people."

He then introduced Mr. Colby, who said: "I have a little feeling that is apologetic for coming to the court of a State outside my own on business which is primarily that of New Jersey. But, sir, there are great rights and attributes common to the whole country and beyond arbitrary geographic division. I have followed the reports of the unhappy situation in the Passaic area. The whole question between employers and employes tries the faculties of men. We have not yet reached a final formula for their settlement, we must concede. But we have deeply imbedded in the laws the right of man to do as he will with his own property. And, on the other hand, the right to organize and strike is conceded to be a right.

"It must be manifest that we have not solved the problem implied. But by mutual forbearance, high mindedness and good resolve we may hope to. It is gratifying to all friends of fair play to find this question lifted from the scrimmage of the highway to the calm and dignity of a New Jersey court. We must work in a spirit of deep reverence for the fundamental rights of all American citizens. I won't discuss the right to free assemblage, for which our fathers fought. I won't discuss the right to free speech, which is axiomatic in American life, though it is limited by certain restrictions.

Assails the Complaints.

"I will only call your attention to the light into which these rights are thrown by these complaints, evidently so hurriedly constructed to give colorful background to justify seizing this man. To put this young man under the crushing burden of $10,000 bail on each one is so oppressive that it goes to the very roots of our Commonwealth. Judges have over and over again justified a man in discussing conditions of government. I can put this no more forcibly than by quoting Supreme Court Justice Holmes: 'It is not a crime to wish or seek a change in government.' I am not a Communist. I abhor their doctrines as hateful, unsafe and unsound. It fell to me to write the note to the Bolsheviki defining this Government's attitude toward the Soviet. No one thinks that I expressed myself in terms of any partiality to them. I think the United States has the best Government in the world. And a part of it should be brave and open-minded indulgence, for the truth is strong, and can stand it. In the name of the spirit of Americans I ask that these issues before us today be regarded without any feeling. This young man, a graduate of Harvard, a student of law, has had no guilty action proved against him. He has assailed the Government of the United States, and if a man has seen fit to try the issue, let him go ahead. Hold Mr. Weisbord but grant him the right to reasonable bail."

Mr. Deyoe, with an expression of conscientious determination, answered Mr. Colby by first announcing that he agreed with him in that every man has a right to strike.

"But," he continued, "the man who wants to work also has his rights. Stones have been fired from buildings, brick bats have been used. These complaints have to be read in the light of what is going on. We realize that certain actions do incite to riot. But the complaints are a thing of the past. Here I have indictments found by the Grand Jury."

The fourth indictment for "inciting to riot" was regarded as the most significant. It came as a surprise to defense counsel. "Without it," Mr. Feder said, "he could not have been held in over $15,000." Besides Weisbord, it included as defendants "others unknown." The wording, copied from old New Jersey law, and reminiscent of legal phraseology of the time of Charles II, was in part as follows:

"That the defendants unlawfully and riotously assembled and gathered together to the disturbance of the public peace, and being so unlawfully assembled and gathered together, then and there unlawfully and riotously did make a great noise and disturbance, did make and utter great and loud noises and threatenings, signifying intent to beat and assault and frighten and intimidate certain and quite persons, and to break, damage, injure and destroy real and personal property, and to defy, oppose, resist, show dislike, contempt, hatred and hostility to the Constitution and laws of this State, and to defy the police and lawful authority to the great terror and disturbance of all citizens being in and along the public streets, avenues, thoroughfares and highways there."

Weisbord Taken to Jail.

Weisbord was taken to the county jail where after three hours Sigmund Unger, attorney for the United Front Committee, appeared with a representative of National Surety Company with bail bonds. He was then formally released, taken back to his cell, to await arrival of Garfield police. Pending the arrival of his counsel, Weisbord sat in the police station, unshackled, and chatted amicably with policemen. When booked he gave his occupation as "union organizer and proud of it."

"Well," said a detective, "you're doing you're job as best you can, and we are doing ours."

The first flare-up of the arraignment came when Mr. Feder cross-examined Lieutenant Pyott. He said: "Now, you're a prejudiced man on the subject of this defendant——" He got no further, the witness rising out of his seat and fairly shoutin: "Now listen. I'm not taking any of that stuff from you."

Mr. Feder objected, and was sustained by Recorder Baker. From then on the witness answered in tones of ironical indifference, with his gaze out the window. In answer to questions, he said that he had copied down Weisbord's remarks, word for word, in the part quoted in the complaints. He said he was not a stenographer and did not know shorthand, and produced a slip of paper which, he said, was the paper he had used. From this he quoted Weisbord as urging the strikers to "stop all scabs from going to work" by means of picketing. "Remember France. They shall not pass, even if we have to use force," were words used by Weisbord, he testified.

At the conclusion of testimony Recorder Baker asked Mr. Feder to "make your argument as brief as possible. The hour is getting late." This appeared to anger Mr. Feder, who contended that the matter was too serious for haste. "I'm not here to dig up all the State's witnesses and try the case," retorted Recorder Baker. Mr. Feder replied that very serious questions were involved, as to whether Mr. Weisbord could properly be accused of crime or merely of disorderly conduct, and as to whether he had urged the strikers to crime or disorderly conduct.

He cited decisions to show that if Weisbord had urged destruction of property or personal violence he could not be considered guilty unless these overt acts were proved to have been committed directly as a result of his words.

Recorder Baker and Mr. Feder were talking at once and loudly. Finally the Court gave as its opinion that, regardless of what Mr. Feder might say, the situation was so threatening to peace and property that the prisoner would have to be held in heavy bail. He reserved decision on two of the complaints and on the third, "inciting to riot and assault," he fixed bail at $25,000, releasing the prisoner of the other charges on his own recognizance.

Mr. Feder objected in vain to the amount of bail. After adjournment from the courtroom to the police station in the same building, Reuben Kantrowitz, local property owner, said that he would supply bail in the form of a $15,000 surety bond, and real estate valued at $100,000 as guarantee for the remaining $10,000. Recorder Baker asked to see the surety bond and the deed, but Mr. Kantrowitz said that they were at his office and that he would have then in "two minutes."

"How do I know there isn't some liability on your real estate?" Recorder Baker said. Mr. Feder protested that he knew that what Mr. Kantrowitz offered was all right.

Recorder Baker ordered Captain Boyle to take the prisoner to the Bergen County Jail at Hackensack. It was then that Mr. Feder made his remark about preferring Siberia to Garfield. "You get out of here," said Lieutenant Jacob Brown, accompanying the suggestion with a shove which, Mr. Feder says, propelled him to the door.

At 8 o'clock tonight Weisbord was still in Bergen County jail and his counsel was still trying to arrange satisfactory surety for his release. Strikers met this afternoon at Wallington, but created no disturbance. At Lodi 2,500 men and women and children attended the funeral of Frand Dido, striker, whose death was proved by autopsy not to have resulted from a blow from a policeman's club, as asserted by some.

Broken Premise Charged.

"We were told that the bail on the Passaic County charges would be $15,000," said Forest Bailey, director of the American Civil Liberties Union. "Our bailor was given to understand that this would be the amount to be fixed by the Recorder. Instead of keeping to their word they played bail poker with us, bidding us up $10,000. Had it not been for this outrageous lie Weisbord would have been out on bail today."

Counsel for Weisbord were particularly incensed because Recorder Baker in Garfield refused property said to be worth more than $100,000 and a $15,000 surety bond offered as bail by Reuben Kantrowitz, a wealthy real estate dealer of this city.

The injunction against picketing obtained by the Forstmann & Huffmann Company presented the strikers with the most serious problem since the strike began. Charles M. Joseph, attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union said:

"The injunction issued in favor of the Forstmann & Huffmann Mills is one of the most sweeping injunctions ever issued during an industrial conflict. The injunction denies rights which have never been denied in the State of New Jersey, which have been affirmed and declared in the laws and court decisions of New Jersey as well as in every State of the Union.

"This injunction prohibits peaceful picketing in spite of the fact that the Legislature of the State within the last three weeks has passed a law which specifically permits peaceful picketing. If this can be done, who will say that laws are not made by the courts rather than by the Legislature?

"The strikers are prohibited by this injunction from speaking to any of the workers who are continuing to work in the mills with the intention of persuading them to refrain from such work.

"The next provision can hardly be believed. The strikers are even prohibited from consulting with one another as to the ways and means of conducting the strike. In other words, in the State of New Jersey, workers have no longer the right to go out on strike.

"Will any one believe the next following provision? And yet they are included in this sweeping injunction: The strikers are prohibited from contributing any money and from giving any advice to any other strikers toward the success of said strike.'

"Strikers are prohibited from participating in any manner in any movement to induce the employes' of the mills 'to cease their employment.'"

A clash between deputy sheriffs and strikers is feared on Monday when all the mills will throw their gates wide open under the protection of Sheriff Morgan's men and the local police. The strikers will, it was announced, picket all the mills except the Forstmann and Hoffmann property.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise of New York and Arthur (Golden Rule) Nash, will be the principal speakers at a meeting of strikers and sympathizers tomorrow night in Russian Hall.

TACNA-ARICA AFFAIR A DANGER 44 YEARS

PLEBISCITE DUE IN 1893

Disturbed Conditions Made Voting Impossible—American Arbitration Accepted in 1922.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 17.—The differences between Chile and Peru over the possession of the Provinces of Tacna and Arica date back over more than forty years, to the conclusion of a war between Chile on the one hand, and Peru and Bolivia on the other, during which the former took possession of the two provinces, which had up to that time belonged to Peru.

This war broke out in 1879, when Chile raised objection to the treatment which its investors and merchants living in the Province of Antofagasta and in the northern provinces of Tacna and Arica were receiving at the hands of Peru. In the course of the war, Chile captured all of the provinces and marched into Lima, the Peruvian capital, in 1880.

Political conditions in Peru were such that after the war no Cabinet was was formed capable of signing a peace treaty with Chile until three years later, when the Treaty of Ancon was drawn up and signed in the neighborhood of Lima. By this treaty Peru did not cede the Provinces of Tacna and Arica to Chile, but left the latter in possession of the territory for a period of ten years, at the close of which it was provided that a plebiscite should be held to determine the future sovereignty of the territory.

Conditions did not permit of holding the plebiscite as specified by the treaty in 1893, nor have they been such at any time since, it is declared, that the provisions of the treaty could be carried into effect and the will of the population made known. In the meantime, during the forty-four years which have elapsed since the signing of the treaty of Ancon, Chile has continued to exercise her sovereignty in the disputed provinces.

American Arbitration Accepted.

Chile and Peru signed a protocol in Washington on July 20, 1922, agreeing to submit the dispute to the President of the United States, and to request him to arbitrate their long outstanding differences.

Bolivia has never taken part in the discussions initiated in Washington, both Chile and Peru having stated officially that after they had settled their differences they would in turn treat with Bolivia over a possible cession of part of the territory in order to allow Bolivia to gain an outlet to the sea, as she has no seaport in her own territory.

One of the first acts of President Coolidge after his inauguration was to lay down the terms for the holding of a plebiscite in the disputed territory. The award of the President provided that the plebiscite should be carried out under the supervision of a plebiscitary commission, to consist of three members, to be named by Chile, Peru and the United States. The committee was to meet in the City of Arica within six months of the handing down of the President's decision.

The work of framing the regulations governing the procedure for registration of voters, and all details concerning the method of balloting, was delegated in the award to the plebiscitary commission, which would examine conditions on the ground. The award gave either party the right to appeal to the arbitrator against any decision of the plebiscitary commission.

The terms of the President's award were received with rejoicing in Chile, but inasmuch as the award ruled that Chilean sovereignty should be maintained in the disputed provinces pending the outcome of the plebiscite, the Peruvian Government raised objection on the ground that occupation of the territory by one of the contending parties would "hamper" the freedom and protection of the voters. Peru held that the territory should be administered by a neutral party during the holding of the plebiscite.

General Pershing was named by President Coolidge as Chairman of the Plebiscitary Commission, which consisted of Augustin Edwards, representing Chile, and Manuel Freyre Santander, representing Peru. The commission convened in Arica, the chief city in the disputed territory, on Aug. 4, last year, and has been sitting continuously since that time. When General Pershing resigned to return to this country last January he was succeeded by General William Lassiter as neutral member of the commission.

The work of the commission has been to prepare for the plebiscite. Difficulties have constantly arisen by objections raised first by one party and then by the other to the procedure adopted by the commission, leading to the threatened resignation alternately of both parties. Peru has insisted that her voters must be protected from intimidation and undue influence on the part of the Chileans, while the latter have protested against conditions in the territory which have caused continued postponement of the plebiscite itself.

Regulations Made for Plebiscite.

On Jan. 27 the Plebiscitary Commission completed the drafting of the regulations governing the registration of voters and laying down the election laws atipulating those entitled to vote. The commission then fixed March 27 as the date for the registration of voters and May 15 for the actual holding of the plebiscite.

Chile raised objection to the dates fixed, desiring that the plebiscite should be held at an earlier date, and appealed to the arbitrator against the decision of the Plebiscitary Commission. President Coolidge, however, dismissed the Chilean appeal, and sustained the decision of the Plebiscitary Commission, construing the decision as an order but admitting the right of the commission to make changes.

Appeals were made later by both Chile and Peru concerning certain classes of voters under the laws enacted by the Plebiscitary Commission, but these also were dismissed by the President.

While registration of voters is now under way, the work of the Plebiscitary Commission is being held in abeyance pending the outcome of negotiations recently initiated by Secretary Kellogg to bring about a settlement by means of mediation.

The exchange of correspondence between Secretary Kellogg and the Chilean and Peruvian Governments with a view to bringing about mediation resulted also in some misunderstandings as to whether the work of the Plebiscitary Commission should be postponed during this time or should be continued notwithstanding the negotiations.

It was the view of the Administration that a postponement should be made during the negotiations in Washington but that the Plebiscitary Commission should be maintained "unimpaired" during this time so as to permit a resumption if efforts at mediation should not prove successful.

DANGER SPOT IN SOUTH AMERICA.

The disputed Tacna-Arica territory, over which new complications have arisen in efforts to settle its ownership.

KELLOGG PROPOSED NEUTRALIZED TACNA

By RICHARD V. OULAHAN.

have come to have a better understanding of the tremendous possibilities, the marvelous development and the general progress of these nations.

The consistent policy of the Washington Government, irrespective of the party in power, has been to foster the most cordial relations with them. It has sought constantly to remove from their minds any apprehension that the United States had designs on their sovereignty.

So marked had been the establishment of better understanding and griendship that it would be a severe blow to this policy to have American public opinion assume a critical tone by reason of the failure of Chile and Peru to adjust their differences over the Tacna-Arica territory after they had agreed to the arbitration of the President of the United States and subsequently accepted the good offices under which the current conciliatory offers were made.

On account of the determination of officials here to confine their utterances to a formal stamp, it cannot be said that they have voiced a fear of the effect of hostile American opposition in relation to Latin-American affairs, but the importance of this aspect of the present situation is not overlooked by others equally interested.

Future Full of Difficulties.

The embarrassment that confronts the United States Government is found in the necessity of determining its future course in the event of a complete failure of its current mediation. Granted that Chile has declined to accept the proposals for making Tacna-Arica a neutarlized or buffer State, or transfer the disputed territory to a South American Government other than Chile or Peru, the question of carrying out the plebiscite agreed upon rises. But here again there is serious complication, embarrassing to this country.

Two years ago Chile and Peru, as the result of negotiations in Washington, agreed upon President Coolidge as arbitrator of the Tacna-Arica dispute. In March, 1925, the President made an award which called for a plebiscite of the disputed territory. General Pershing was appointed head of the Plebiscitary Commission and went to the controverted area to make arrangements for the voting. There were various perplexing difficulties which he sought to overcome.

This territory had come into Chile's possession as a consequence of war with Peru. In the plebiscitary conferences Peru called for Chile's withdrawal from the disputed area while the plebiscite was on. This demand was not conceded by Chile.

Ultimately the plebiscite laws were adopted, and in January General Pershing returned to the United States and was succeeded by Major Gen. William Lassiter as head of the Plebiscitary Commission. Registration for the plebiscite is now in progress. The laws call for the voting on May 15.

Peru May Boycott Plebiscite.

Recently, however, Peru objected that she feared the laws would give votes to certain Chileans.

As it appeared that Peru would not consent to the plebiscite under the arrangements made, the United States, through Secretary Kellogg, then offered its good offices, and the offer was accepted by Chile and Peru, whose Ambassadors in Washington met Secretary Kellogg in conference at the State Department on April 6. Out of these exchanges came the several proposals for an adjustment made by Secretary Kellogg.

Should all conciliatory tenders of this Government be rejected by either or both of the disputants, President Coolidge and Secretary Kellogg would be obliged to determine what course to follow. The supposition is that the only way out is to adhere to the arrangement to have the plebiscite in May. Therein lies the embarrassment confronting the Administration. If Peru should decline to participate in the plebiscite, the award of the disputed territory presumably would go to Chile by reason of the vote which Chilean citizens residing in Tacna-Arica would poll.

That would not settle the long-standing controversy. Relations between Peru and Chile would be as bad or worse than in the past four decades. Tacna-Arica would be a constant menace to South American peace.

Presumably Bolivia would make an offer to buy Tacna-Arica if Secretary Kellogg's suggestion that the territory be sold should be accepted. Chile and Peru agreed that when they had adjusted their present differences they would consider giving Bolivia an outlet to the sea. Press dispatches today tell of an anti-Peruvian demonstration in Bolivia.

The Washington Government is in an extremely perplexing situation. No hint is given of what course it would take if there is complete failure of its tender of good offices. It is doubted that it has given consideration to the problem.

Mr. Kellogg's Proposals.

The following statement concerning the disturbing Tacna-Arica situation was given out by the State Department this afternoon:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.
April 17.

Concerning the pending negotiations for the settlement of the Tacna-Arica dispute, the Secretary of State has been advised that the suggestion which he made to the plenipotentiaries of Peru and Chile at their last meeting here on April 15 has been given partial publicity in the capital of one of the countries involved. In order to avoid confusion and possible misunderstanding, the Secretary, acting with the consent and approval of both plenipotentiaries, now needs it wise to make public the full terms of this suggestion, which are as follows:

"The Secretary of State has the honor to suggest that in the interest of international peace and a cordial rapprochement between the parties, they consider the advisability of a mutual and joint sacrifice whereby either

"1. The territory of Tacna and Arica shall be constituted a neutralized State, either independent or under the protectorate of South American States, as may be agreed, or

"2. The Provinces of Tacna and Arica shall be transferred (upon an apportionment of equitable compensation, and appropriate economic arrangements, to be agreed upon) to a South American State not a party to these negotiations.

"As neither party is willing to surrender the territory in question to the other, and as the proposal for a division of the territory between them has been rejected, the remaining opportunity for a solution of the long-standing controversy would appear to be found in one of the suggestions above made, or in a modification thereof if such is deemed to be advisable."

Neutralization Often Suggested.

The Secretary further stated that in view of certain press comments, and particularly in view of a statement issued to the press by the Foreign Office of Chile, he thought he ought to say that the idea of neutralization of the territory in dispute had been from time to time, in the course of this controversy, advanced informally by publicists and others on both sides in such a manner as to lead him to believe it might prove acceptable to both Peru and Chile.

This type of solution was in particular advocated by Señor Augustin Edwards, the Chilean delegate on the plebiscitary commission, to General Pershing just before his departure from Arica, and General Pershing laid it before the Secretary of State on arrival in Washington.

It has also informally come to the attention of the Secretary from Peruvian sources.

Naturally, informal proposals of this character are not binding upon the respective Governments, who now have the entire suggestion, as above set forth, under consideration. The Secretary of State merely desires it to be understood that in exploring all the avenues of adjustment he is taking advantage of every proposal which seems to have a reasonable prospect of success.

Protested Chilean Comment.

Appended to the official statement was the following:

The statement issued to the press on April 16 by the Foreign Office of Chile above referred to is as follows:

"The Ambassador of the United States has made representations to the Minister for Foreign Affairs as to the injustice of the attack directed against his Government by a newspaper of Santiago with respect to the possibility that the Secretary of State of the United States might, in the exercise of good offices, favor the neutralization of the territory of Tacna-Orica; and he has stated that said formula was initiated by the Chilean members of the plebiscitary commission, who suggested it with insistence before General Pershing returned to the United States.

"The Ambassador requests that they inform the press as to this fact, with the object of avoiding judgments adverse to the Government of the United States, backed up on conditions in whose origin neither that Government nor its agents have had any participation.

"The Minister for Foreign Affairs has answered stating that he deplores the editorial referred to and the injustice of the attack in it against the Government of the United States.

"It adds that the Government of Chile had knowledge of the facts set forth by the Ambassador of the United States with regard to the origin of this formula of neutralization of the territory of Tacna-Arica, and that it has taken the necessary steps to avoid that suggestion, strictly personal, contrary to or absolutely opposed to the ideas of the Government, however well inspired they may have been, can create obstacles in the prosecution of the plebiscite or of the pending friendly negotiations.

"The Minister for Foreign Affairs terminates by availing himself of the occasion to make note of the noble and disinterested spirit with which the Government of the United States endeavors to secure a solution of the difference between Chile and Peru."

RIOT IN BOLIVIAN CAPITAL.

Peruvian Legation Is Stoned After Killing of Bolivian Officers.

LA PAZ, Bolivia, April 17 (AP).—Quiet prevailed here today after special precautions had been taken by police to prevent recurrence of a demonstration last night by 2,000 persons as the result of reports that two Bolivians had been killed by a Peruvian customs official.

When reports were received that the shooting had occurred on the Heath River, separating Peru and Bolivia, a crowd of 2,000 angry manifestants held a protest meeting and stoned the Peruvian Legation.

Trapped by the mob, the inmates of the Legation fired seven shots into the air, but the crowd continued the attack. Police interfered and were forced to fire numerous shots over the rioters' heads before they were dispersed.

The homes of a number of Peruvians were attacked, but little damage was done.

After a visit by the President to the Peruvian Minister and enforcement of special measures by the police, it was announced today the situation had quieted down.

The victims of the border incident were Captain Alfredo Urrio Lagoitia of the Bolivian Boundary Guard and Julian Rada, chief of the Bolivian customs station. Their aggressor is said to be Emilio Salas, an official of the Peruvian Customs House on the Heath.

Add Beauty to Your Car

Famous Fandango Seat Covers are made of beautifully striped seat cover materials in various color tones. Each set is carefully designed and cut to fit your particular car perfectly. The wearing edges are beautiful and re-inforced with blue, gray or brown Spanish leatherette harmonizing with the cover material. These colors go harmoniously with the interior of your car.

They Are Easy to Attach

It is easy to attach Famous Fandango Seat Covers. Snap fasteners are provided so that they can be quickly put on and taken off. No sewing necessary. Special fasteners provided for steel bodies. In 1925 over 75,000 car owners adopted Famous Fandango Seat covers. And because we purchase them in very great quantities we can make this extraordinary low price.

Fit, Material, Workmanship

Carefully selected materials and careful workmanship go into Famous Fandango Auto Seat Covers. Each set consists of covers for seats, backs, side panels, arm rests and door covers with large pockets. Back of front seat is covered right down to the floor of the car, protecting against the feet of occupants in back of the car. Fit perfectly and are easy to detach. Complete instructions come in each box.

THREE AUTO PLANTS CLOSE IN CANADA

Dodge, Durant and General Motors Will Cease Manufacture, Importing Instead.

OTHER FIRMS MAY FOLLOW

Shut Down, Due to Lowering of Tariff on Cars, Affects 1,000 Employes.

TORONTO, Ontario, April 17 (AP).—The Dodge Motor Car Company of Canada and the Durant Motor Company of Canada suspended operations temporarily today, as a result of the lowering of duties on imported motor cars by changes in the Canadian tariff announced in the budget speech on April 15. About 400 employes in the Dodge and 600 in the Durant plant were affected by the suspension.

Both suspensions were ordered, official announcements said, so that the companies may decide on future operations as a result of the decrease in the tariff. The shutdowns, it was indicated, were altogether independent of whatever policy the Canadian motor car manufacturers may adopt. The Canadian motor car manufacturers, together with all other Canadian manufacturers affected by the tariff changes, will meet here on April 21 to decide what action they will take.

American automobiles and American moving pictures are main points of discussion in Canada today.

The fear is expressed that the newly announced tariff reductions on motor cars may work great injury on Canadian manufacturers. Montreal and other cities in Quebec Province face the prospect of having their moving picture houses closed after Aug. 1 owing to a threat by American film distributers to decline to distribute their product in the face of the prevailing censorship.

Exactly what effect the tariff reduction on motor cars will have on the Canadian industry has not been determined. It is the opinion, however, that it will work greatly to the advantage of American car builders and that the local industry, with tariff protection removed, will be faced by the mass production of American factories.

The reduction in the tariff provides for 15 per cent. on imported automobiles, valued at not more than $1,200 retail and 27½ per cent. on cars valued at more than $1,200 retail.

The General Motors Corporation has been closed since yesterday, but will resume operations Monday after making price adjustments. Heads of other prominent automobile concerns assert that their plants will continue in operation until a definite course of action is decided on.

An official of the Toronto Automobile Trade Association declares that unless rebates to the motor trade on unsold new and used cars now on hand are made, the tariff provisions will mean that 3,600 Canadian dealers must take a loss of $5,100,000.

General Motors to Cease Work.

Oshawa, Ontario, April 17 (AP).—R. S. McLaughlin, President of the General Motors Corporation of Canada, announced today that as the result of cuts in the Canadian tariff on imported automobiles his company would discontinue the manufacture and assembling of Oaklands, Cadillacs, Oldsmobiles and General Motors Corporation trucks. These cars, he said, will now be imported from the United States.

It is the intention of the company, Mr. McLaughlin added, to liquidate its inventories on Chevrolet cars, which it has been turning out at the rate of 200 a day, and then import the complete car from the United States.

Ford to Keep Up Production.

WINDSOR, Ontario, April 17 (AP).—The Ford Motor Company of Canada today announced its intention of continuing production in the face of the Canadian tariff cut on imported automobiles.

"In spite of legislation which we do not consider to be in the best interest of the country, we believe it is the duty of all patriotic citizens to carry on and do their utmost to build up the country," said Wallace R. Campbell, Vice President and Treasurer of the company.

Other border automobile plants and allied industries are continuing, though some are curtailing production.

Appeal Stays Cowan Execution.

Special to The New York Times.

OSSINING, N. Y., April 17.—Warden Lewis E. Lawes of Sing Sing received today an appeal automatically staying the execution of Harry Cowan, the blind man, who was convicted of slaying Miss Edith Burton, his sweetheart, in Brooklyn. The execution originally was set for the week of May 10. There is little likelihood of the appeal being finally passed upon before late in the Summer.

EARL OF LAUDERDALE OPTIMISTIC ON FLORIDA

He Sails for England Denying the 'Boom Has Broken—French Senator Returns Home.

Among the passengers on board the Cunard liner Andania which sailed yesterday for Plymouth, was the Earl of Lauderdale, who has spent a month at Palm Beach where he owns some property. He is also interested in the Stotesbury development near Fort Lauderdale, which was named after one of his ancestors.

The Earl discounted stories that the Florida real estate boom had broken.

"It is true that a great many persons, including a number of negroes, have acquired land in the interior which is practically worthless, and which they are unable to pay for," he said. "But land along the sea coast should maintain its value, especially where it is near some city."

Another passenger was Senator Albert Honnorat of Paris, one of the earliest advocates of daylight saving. He has just visited Montreal, where he spoke on behalf of the French Canadians at the National Congress of Education. He denied that the French as a whole had any ill feeling against this country.

"The bitter sentiments which some of your papers featured recently represent only the feelings of those extreme elements which France in common with all other countries has," he said. "The bonds of sympathy which exist between this country and ours are too deep for any temporary misunderstandings to destroy."

LOUIS GABRIEL'S BIRTHDAY.

At 81, Insures Four More Policemen —Has Insured More Than 5,000.

Louis Gabriel of the New York Life Insurance Company, who has insured more than 5,000 members of the New York Police Department, was 81 years old Thursday and celebrated the occasion by receiving the floral tributes of friends and an engraved certificate of his company attesting to thirty-two years of continuous service as a life insurance salesman. And Mr. Gabriel maintained his reputation as a salesman by insuring four more of "New York's finest" on his eighty-first birthday.

Mr. Gabriel has insured 60 per cent. of the Police Department, and points with pride to the fact that many of the men who started at the bottom and reached the top were insured by him. Among these he counts Chief Inspector Coughlin, Inspectors Carey and McMullen and many others. Recalling the time when Theodore Roosevelt was Police Commissioner, Mr. Gabriel said:

"I walked to Police Headquarters one day to try to sell insurance to Roosevelt, but Teddy wouldn't buy from me. However, I did a lot of business with his men. That was when there were no telephones on police posts. Roosevelt had a pet system called the 'shoo-fly.' The 'shoo-fliers' were men sent out to see that the policemen and detectives were on the job. I kept an eye out for the fly-cops to warn an unsuspecting policeman. This was the beginning of my friendship with men on the force and, incidentally, the beginning of many insurance policies."

NO RELIEF FROM STATIC.

Prof. Turner of Yale Says Super-Power Helps to Eliminate It.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 17.—Professor Hubert Turner, radio specialist at the Dunham Electrical Laboratory at Yale, said that the outlook for the elimination of static was not promising. "Super-power, which is now in use at several of the larger broadcasting stations, will overcome static effects, however," he added.

"The problem in the elimination is that static and signal waves both set up oscillations in the receiving circuits, and by attempting to eliminate the static the desired signal is also decreased in amplitude. By the use of super-power in broadcasting the person with a radio set can decrease the pick-up efficiency of his receiver without seriously interfering with the reception of the desired signals. The important thing is to make a signal strong as compared with the static, which is still there, of course, although its effect is reduced.

"Distance 'bugs' have no special credit due them for the very fact that a radio operator can get Pacific Coast stations with regularity, proving that his set is sensitive and picks up all of the static which is in the air. A set which is not extra sensitive and which gets local and near-by stations satisfactorily is the best set to have. The less sensitive a set is the less static is picked up."

12 GET FELLOWSHIPS FOR STUDY ABROAD

Scandinavian Foundation Makes Awards From List of 100 American Students.

Names of twelve American students who have been appointed to Fellowships for advanced study in Denmark, Norway and Sweden have been announced by the American-Scandinavian Foundation. Antique Furniture Is Exhibited.

Antique furniture and early American hooked rugs, collected by Mrs. Edward O. Scharnikow of New York, are to be sold Thursday and Friday afternoons at the Anderson Galleries, where they may be seen. There are 323 objects listed for the sale. A twelve-legged pine Windsor settee, an early butternut kneehole table and similar sideboard and chest of drawers, early pine corner cupboards, maple day beds, hickory desks, a grandfather's clock, a maple and pine gateleg table and other pieces of furniture are of much interest. There are also early tin lanterns, glass lamps and a number of brilliantly colored patchwork quilts.

Y. W. C. A. CONVENTION TO OPEN WEDNESDAY

Hundred New York Women to Attend Milwaukee Sessions Headed by Mrs. Speer.

Nearly 100 New York women will leave tomorrow for Milwaukee to attend the ninth biennial convention of the American Young Women's Christian Association, beginning on Wednesday. The party will be led by Mrs. Robert E. Speer, head of the National Board, American headquarters of the Y. W. C. A. Mrs. Henry Gillespie Myers, President of the New York Associations, will be in the party. There will be delegates from 18 Y. W. C. A. branches. Mrs. John D. Rockefeller Jr., Vice President of the National Board, was to have gone, but called her reservations yesterday.

The convention will be attended by 2,500 delegates. Factory girls, business women, college and university women will discuss problems relating to women, international and domestic. Marriage and divorce laws, women's relation to industry, legislation, the home and world politics will be on the program for the six-day session.

Mrs. Frederic M. Paist of Philadelphia will preside at all sessions, serving her third term as presiding officer. Mrs. Paist is the sister of Secretary of the Navy, Curtis Wilbur.

Madame Alice Bertrand of Geneva will be the principal guest of honor. She will speak at the international luncheon in honor of the foreign delegates next Thursday. Women from fourteen countries will be present. A pageant, "Forward Through the Ages," will depict the progress of women since the pre-Christian era. Eight hundred men and women are in the cast.

The convention officers are Mrs. Paist, President; Mrs. Chester C. Ashley of Los Angeles and Miss Elisabeth Skinner of Dunmedin, Fla., Vice Presidents; Miss Bertha Pabst of Washington, D. C., and Miss Lois Kugler of Boston, Secretaries.

TO LEASE PARKING SPACE.

New Haven Road Seeks Bids on Mount Vernon Station Property.

The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company will lease its extensive station plaza at Mount Vernon for parking space for automobiles, it was announced yesterday. This became known when the corporation advertised for bids for the privilege of using the controlling parking purposes of the railroad grounds.

For months commuters who ride to the station in automobiles have been using the plaza for parking their cars without paying a cent and the company tried to stop the plan but failed.

THEATRE SOLD HERE BY BOSTON CARDINAL

Old Fifth Avenue Playhouse at Broadway and 28th St. Aids Catholic Charities.

F. F. PROCTOR IS PURCHASER

House Is Part of Keith Estate, Left to O'Connell as Trust—Brings More Than $1,500,000.

A sum estimated to be in excess of $1,500,000 will go to Roman Catholic charities in Boston as the result of the sale yesterday of the Fifth Avenue Theatre, at Broadway and Twenty-eighth Street, by Cardinal O'Connell of Boston. The property was part of the residuary estate left by A. Paul Keith, vaudeville manager, to Cardinal O'Connell, who was directed to use the funds for charitable purposes, in memory of Mr. Keith's mother, Mrs. Mary Katherine Keith.

F. F. Proctor, owner of the Proctor chain of vaudeville and motion picture houses, has purchased the property through one of his theatre corporations. The buyer has a lease on the building, which has five years to run, and by the purchase acquires unlimited tenancy. The present policy of vaudeville and motion pictures will continue.

The property consists of a combination theatre and four-story office building on the northwest corner of Broadway and Twenty-eighth Street, occupying half the block front on the west side of Broadway, between Twenty-eighth and Twenty-ninth Streets. It has a frontage of 105 feet on Broadway and 189 feet on Twenty-eighth Street, with a rear line of 98 feet. The northerly line runs back 151 feet.

Holding Company Made Sale.

The sale was made by the International Amusement and Realty Corporation, a holding company for Cardinal O'Connell, who was represented in the transaction by H. G. Cunningham of Boston. The property is one of the largest plots on Broadway in this section under one ownership and has enhanced in value considerably since Mr. Keith's death. It was the first fireproof theatre to be built in New York.

Mr. Proctor took over the management and lease of the Fifth Avenue Theatre on May 7, 1900, installing the present policy of vaudeville. The Proctor Fifth Avenue Stock Company followed and included from time to time some of the best known stars in the theatrical history of New York. Among those who played there were such stars as Amelia Bingham, Frances Starr, Florence Reed, Wilton Lackaye, Blanche Bates, Jessie Bonstelle, Charles Richman, Edwin Arden and Arnold Daly.

The house was redecorated in 1906 and was described in theatrical notices at that time as one of the finest playhouses in the city. A feature is the central dome with eight panels of heroic figures which were restored in 1906. These paintings were originally executed for the Gilsey estate by Tojetti, a celebrated decorative artist, but for several years their beauty had been hidden.

When the work of redecorating the Fifth Avenue was completed in the Fall of 1906, Mrs. Lillian Langtry was billed as the star of the vaudeville program. Mrs. Langtry made her first appearance in the same theatre nearly twenty years before this, playing in "As in a Looking Glass." In her supporting company at that time were Maurice Barrymore, father of Ethel, John and Lionel Barrymore. Robert Hilliard was also a member of Mrs. Langtry's company.

The property was the subject of three years of litigation, which ended in 1911, when F. F. Proctor got possession of the theatre for five years. The litigation grew out of a controversy over the division of the assets of the Keith-Proctor Amusement Company, a Maine corporation.

Makes Three Proctor Houses.

The acquisition of the Fifth Avenue Theatre makes the Proctor interests the owners of three houses here, the others being Proctor's Fifty-eighth Street Theatre and the 125th Street Theatre. The Proctor playhouse in Twenty-third Street is being operated under a long-term lease. Mr. Proctor is at present erecting a new theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., and one at Eighty-sixth Street and Lexington Avenue, the latter being a joint enterprise in conjunction with the Keith-Albee Theatres Company.

A. Paul Keith, who died of influenza in November, 1918, came into possession of the B. F. Keith Vaudeville Circuit and the United Booking Offices with E. F. Albee after the death of his father, Benjamin F. Keith, father of vaudeville in America. A. Paul Keith left a fortune estimated at $15,000,000, which was widely distributed. He left $25,000 to the Harvard 1909 Class Fund and personal bequests of $250,500. The stock in the B. F. Keith Theatres Company he left to his business associates and the residue went to Cardinal O'Connell.

GET $2,000 PAYROLL IN LAUNDRY HOLD-UP

Thieves Cow Six, Scoop Up the Cash and Vanish Quickly in an Auto.

Three armed men held up six persons in the office of the Oak Steam Laundry, 419 East Fifty-fourth Street, at 10:30 o'clock yesterday morning and stole $2,000 in cash which had just been brought in from a bank for the weekly payroll. The robbers escaped with two accomplices who had waited outside in a blue sedan automobile.

Helen Schein and Abraham Mezin, bookkeepers, drew the payroll from the Chatham Phenix Bank branch at Fifty-seventh Street and Third Avenue at 10 o'clock. They took the money to the office, where they were assisted by Lillian Goldberg, another bookkeeper, and Aaron Moses and Nathan Abrams, accountants, in making up the payroll.

Before they had finished their work, the three thugs entered, each carrying a pistol. They made the employes stick up their hands. Israel Brooks, manager, walked in at this moment and was compelled to line up with the others.

The robbers then scooped up the payroll money, ran out and jumped into their machine, which sped east in Fifty-fourth Street, turned north in Sutton Place and disappeared. Sixty employes in rooms near the office did not know what happened until it was all over.

DRAFTS FARM RELIEF BILL.

Haugen Seeks $250,000,000, With $100,000,000 for Cotton.

WASHINGTON, April 17 (AP).—An appropriation of $100,000,000 for the marketing of cotton would be available under the farm relief bill being drafted by Chairman Haugen of the House Agriculture Committee. Cotton, however, would be exempt from the equalization fee, which would be confined to the first sales of corn, wheat, cattle and swine.

Mr. Haugen virtually had completed the bill tonight. It would authorize a total appropriation of $250,000,000, out of which the $100,000,000 cotton fund would come, to be administered separately. The remaining $150,000,000 would be used for Federal aid in marketing the other basic commodities—corn, wheat, cattle and swine, and possibly wool, beans and some other products.

Senator Capper, Republican, of Kansas, introduced in the Senate today the Tincher measure, which would provide by appropriation a revolving fund of $100,000,000 for loans to farm organizations, with additional credit facilities made available.

Representative Fort, Republican, of New Jersey, also introduced a bill he previously had outlined to the House Agricultural Committee, of which he is a member. The plan would establish a Federal farm board to provide for the creation of agricultural corporations to handle each commodity. An appropriation of $250,000,000 would be used as a revolving fund to extend credit to the corporations or to other farm organizations, capitalized by their members, who would be permitted to control stock on a partial payment plan.

DEFINES CHURCH'S TASK.

International Council of Religious Education Aims to Win Youth.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., April 17 (AP).—Protestantism of North America, as represented in the thirty-six denominations composing the International Council of Religious Education, hailed today the dawning of a new day in its work and reaffirmed its interpretation of the spirit of cooperative effort to be evangelistic and missionary. Its task, as set forth by a resolution adopted at the final business session today, is to win children and youth to personal faith in Jesus and to be educational in the sense that it seeks to build them up in Christian faith, life and service.

The cultivation of Christian social attitudes also was urged as a major element in the cooperative program of religious education.

"We feel profound concern," said a resolution, "that the ideals and standards of the Christian religion be expressed in all relationship between classes, races and nations."

The council unanimously reaffirmed its faith in the merger of Protestant forces effected at Kansas City in 1922, and pledged united support to "the great motives underlying the whole field of religious education."

"Jim Crow" laws of the South are unjust and should be repealed, in the opinion of Dr. Will W. Alexander of Atlanta, Director of the Commission on Inter-Racial Cooperation, expressed today before the Inter-Denomination Young People's Conference.

PLEA FOR MERCHANT FLEET.

T. H. Rossbottom Says It Is a Political Football.

The American merchant marine was described as a "political football" to be kicked about at the whims of politicians of either party, by Thomas H. Rossbottom, general manager of the United States Lines, at the third annual dinner of the Propeller Club, made up of men affiliated with the merchant marine service, held at the Waldorf-Astoria last night.

Mr. Rossbottom urged a subsidy of American ships by the Postal Department, and said that if some kind of a subsidy was not forthcoming the American flag would be driven from the sea within the next ten years. He said that if the British, French, German and Italian shipping interests cared to combine they could make it impossible for American ships to ply the North Atlantic in one-third of that period.

The new officials of the club were inducted into office at the dinner. They were Edward A. Colson, President; Harry W. Parsons, Vice President; W. C. Gray, Secretary; D. L. McTeggans, Treasurer, and William Z. Gardner, Chairman of the Board of Directors.

COURT CLERK'S BODY FOUND

Discovered in Bronx River—A. H. Baum Jr. Vanished on Jan. 8.

The body of August H. Baum Jr., clerk of the Essex Market Court, who disappeared from his home at 2,077 Daly Avenue, the Bronx, early on the morning of Jan. 8 last, was found yesterday floating in the Bronx River at a point about half a mile south of the Bronxdale Bridge. The body was clad in pajamas and bath robe. It was recovered by Carl Reincke, a pilot, and taken to the Fordham morgue.

The place where the body was found is within a few yards of where bloodhounds traced the scent of Baum the morning he disappeared. At the time of his disappearance the Court Clerk was suffering from a nervous breakdown. His wife heard him cry out during the night and when she went to his room she found the window of his room, leading to the porch, broken open. Boy Scouts scoured the vicinity and the marine police dragged the river, but the body was not recovered. It is believed it was caught in the débris at the bottom of the channel.

INDICTED IN BANK THEFT.

Minugh's Shortage in Jersey City Estimated at $100,000.

John T. Minugh, former Assistant Treasurer of the Bergen and Lafayette Branch of the Trust Company of New Jersey, in Jersey City, was indicted on three counts of forgery, embezzlement and grand larceny by the Hudson County Grand Jury yesterday.

Minugh's shortage was alleged to have been about $100,000, and William C. Heppenheimer, President of the Trust Company, said the former Treasurer had turned over a $50,000 legacy to the company. Minugh, who had been in the Trust Company's employ for twenty years, surrendered and is now on $5,000 bail. It is expected he will be summoned to plead to the indictments next week.

To Help Save-a-Life Farm.

A concert for the benefit of Save-a-Life Farm, conducted each Summer by the Sisters of Christian Doctrine for undernourished and convalescent children of the Cherry Hill neighborhood, will take place at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre next Sunday night. The sisters also conduct Madonna House at 173 Cherry Street. Funds for Save-a-Life Farm are urgently needed, it is announced. John Burke, Irish tenor, assisted by Milton Schranok, accompanist, will sing at the benefit, together with the Tollerton Trio.

SEES REVOLT AGAINST RULE BY MECHANISM

Ivan Narodny, Who Predicted Czar's Downfall, Expects Kultur-Religion by 1930.

Ivan Narodny, who predicted the downfall of the Russian monarchy and the banishment of the Czar, in a story printed in THE NEW YORK TIMES of March 3, 1906, said yesterday that a "rebellion against mechanical civilization" in America might be expected in 1927. Furthermore, he added, the upheaval would end with a new "Kultur-religion" by the time 1930 had come and gone.

"The great American revolution," he said, "will be in no sense political. Rather will it be a revolt of the intelligent individual against the rule of the machine. Both labor and capital will be forced to yield to the demands of the intelligentsia that life be made less sterile, less futile and less uniform."

Mr. Narodny said his "intelligentsia" would band together as do the Ku Klux Klan today. The result of the revolution he pictured as a great spiritual awakening.

The account printed in THE NEW YORK TIMES of March 3, 1906, carried this head: "The United States of Russia—Born Yesterday at the Holland House, New York, U. S. A." On the preceding day Mr. Narodny, revolutionary emissary from Russia, issued at the Holland House a Russian declaration of independence containing ten accusations against the Czar, prophesying exile and execution of the royal family.

Mr. Narodny came to America just twenty years ago yesterday, landing with Maxim Gorky and P. Chaikowski. A dinner was given for the trio at 3 Fifth Avenue by Mark Twain, Robert Collier and Arthur Brisbane.

Robert W. Chanler, an artist, entertained Mr. Narodny last night at his studio, 147 East Nineteenth Street, in celebration of the Russian's twentieth year in America.

Mr. Narodny expects to visit Russia, but has renounced any intention of making his home anywhere else but in New York City.

ACCEPTS LEAGUE INVITATION

Germany Will Have Delegate on Council Reorganization Committee.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, April 17.—The German Government has accepted the invitation to send a representative to sit in the special League of Nations commission which meets in Geneva on May 12 to study reorganization of the Council.

The committee will consist of all the members of the Council and, in addition, the representatives of Argentina, China and Poland—all nations interested in Council seats—plus Switzerland.

The letter from Foreign Minister Stresemann to Sir Eric Drummond, General Secretary of the League, observes that the German representative will be in a different situation to the other conferees, inasmuch as Germany is not a member of the League. This is only technically true, as he will vote in the proceedings exactly as though he were the representative of a Council State.

There is to be a majority and a minority report [illegible] commission does not arrive at unanimity, and these reports will be studied [illegible] the Assembly which through the voice of all the League members will proceed with the reorganization.

CHIEF GETS 'KNAPP' LETTER.

Syracuse Police Head Believes Message Was a Hoax.

Special to The New York Times.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., April 17.—Chief of Police Martin L. Cadin received a threatening note this afternoon, signed Philip K. Knapp, the name of the man sought since last July 4 for the murder of Louis Panella, a taxi driver at Mitchel Field, L. I. Detectives are trying to check up on the note, which was mailed at 1:30 o'clock this afternoon and read as follows:

"When you get this I will probably be in New York. Friday night I passed a cop and bull in New York Central station, unrecognized, of course. No mustache, but 32-calibre revolver ready. Beware. Have ample funds from pot of gold left. Arrived here Thursday from Schenectady. Ask agent if he didn't recognize me. Probably not—no mustache. Beware."

Although inclined to think the note a hoax, Chief Cadin notified civilian and military authorities engaged in the unsuccessful hunt for Knapp. Knapp deserted from the army before the crime was committed, leaving a note saying that a murder and flight from police would give him "the perfect thrill."

TEACHERS GOT THEIR RUGS.

Bought Orientals for Their Room at Price of Domestic Ones.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., April 17.—Although the Board of Education of this town refused to appropriate money for the purchase of Oriental rugs for the teachers' room in the Watchung elementary school a few months ago, it became known today that the teachers at that institution are happy to have Oriental rugs and not domestic covering their floor after all.

The Education Board appropriated $170 for the purchase of four domestic rugs, declaring that if such rugs were all right for the offices of the administration building, Watchung teachers should accept them.

C. M. Arslanian, local Oriental rug dealer, who sold the rugs to the teachers, predicts that within a year Oriental rugs will adorn the teachers' room of every school in Montclair. The Oriental rugs were purchased for the same price as domestics.

ASK RADIO BILL PASSAGE.

Twelve Chicago Stations Urge Action, Following Friday's Decision.

CHICAGO, April 17 (AP).—Twelve of Chicago's thirty radio broadcasting stations adopted a resolution today urging Congress to pass the White bill as an emergency relief bill to protect public interest in the radio.

The resolution referred to the decision yesterday by Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson, holding the Zenith Radio Corporation not guilty of violating a Federal law passed in 1912 to deal with wireless control.

The stations signing the resolution were: WENR, WJJD, WHT, WFKB, WOK, WMBB, WORD, WBCN, WSBC, WEBH, WBBM, and WMAQ.

Funeral of "Missing Link" Today.

The funeral of Krao Ferini, the Siamese woman known in the Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey Circus as "the missing link," will be held at the funeral parlors of Herrlich Brothers, 306 East Eighty-sixth Street, at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon. Burial will be in St. Michael's Cemetery. The woman had been connected with the circus most of the time for the last thirty years.

GREEN TAKES HAND IN FUR STRIKE HERE

President of Labor Federation Confers With Local Union and International Heads.

INTERNAL STRIFE FEARED

Rumor That Green Will Not Support Locals Is Discussed—10,000 Workers Expected to Be Loyal.

President William Green of the American Federation of Labor took a hand yesterday in the local strike of furriers and conferred with the warring local union and international union officers at the Hotel Cadillac. He will meet them again today.

Mr. Green's first conference was with Ben Gold and a committee of the representatives of the four unions on strike for nine weeks. The meeting was at the request of Mr. Gold, who asked that President Green listen to the local unions' side of the dispute with the international union officers.

Ozier Shachtman, President of the International Furriers' Union, and his associates saw Mr. Green later and explained the steps leading to the decision by the international union's officers to order a ballot referendum to ascertain the sentiment of the strikers with regard to negotiating with the employers for a new contract without delay.

A public break between the international union's officers and the officers of the Joint Board managing the strike occurred last Thursday when strikers filled Carnegie Hall, where they were summoned by the international officers, who attempted to address them. Gold was not permitted inside the hall and the meeting was adjourned by the police after Hugh Frayne, local representative of the American Federation of Labor, decided that the demonstration for Gold would prevent a possibility for a speech by President Schachtman.

Rumors that the American Federation of Labor may support the international union, which is considering outlawing the four unions involved in the strike, were discussed in union circles yesterday. It was predicted that such a step would result in an internal union conflict comparable to the recent war between the left wing faction and the administration of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

For Manager Gold of the Joint Board, who is conducting the strike, it was said that the 10,000 men under him would remain loyal to the local unions.

At a meeting of shop chairmen yesterday Mr. Gold said the strikers were loyal to the American Federation of Labor and were willing to make their peace with International Union President Shachtman. The strikers invited Mr. Green to address them.

FOX LANE PLEA DENIED.

Appellate Division Refuses to Allow Flushing Apartment.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in Brooklyn denied yesterday to the Fox Lane Corporation permission to construct a $2,000,000 six-story apartment house at Thirty-eighth Avenue and Bowne Street, Flushing, Queens, thus reversing a recent decision of Supreme Court Justice Faber, in Brooklyn, who had directed the Superintendents of the Tenement House Department and the Queens Building Bureau to approve plans and issue permits for the apartment house.

George J. Ryan and other owners of high-grade residences in Flushing protested against the proposed building and the zone was changed from C to F grade, which calls for private residences only. Justice Faber held the change of zoning did not affect the plans of the Fox Lane Corporation, since the permits were issued before the change, but the Appellate Division, in view of the fact no work has started on the apartment house, ruled the corporation must comply with the city ordinance.

FIGHTS OLD CONVICTION.

Motorist Appeals From Jail Term Imposed 11 Years Ago.

Special to The New York Times.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., April 17.—Convicted eleven years ago for intoxicated driving, Roy Waynwright of this city will appear before Common Pleas Judge Jacob Steinbach in District Court on May 22 to appeal from a thirty-day jail sentence. Appeal hearing has been postponed a number of times.

The convictions of five drivers on charges of intoxication were dismissed today by Judge Steinbach on the plea of counsel for the convicted men that warrants and other papers vital to the State's case were missing. The prosecution, it was contended, was impossible without the warrants, the loss of which was discovered a fortnight ago by officials. A search of the city and county files, it was said, had failed to reveal the papers.

TELLS OF PATES' ORIGIN.

French Professor Says Lord Clive's Chefs First Prepared Famous Dish.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 17.—Professor Allies of Pezenas, in South France, where Moliere was born, has published a history of the Chateaux of Provence and Languedoc, which includes an interesting description of the origin of the famous pates of sweetened meats made in his village. They originally were prepared by native chefs of Lord Clive, British Governor of India, who went to Pezenas for a health cure in 1765.

Lord Clive was particularly fond of the dish, and introduced it among the French nobility whom he entertained occasionally. Before the Governor left Pezenas French cooks had learned to prepare the secret dish, which now graces French cuisines.

COMMERCIAL PLANE BACK.

Delivers Goods for Macy's in Atlanta —Makes 2,000 Mile Flight.

ROOSEVELT FIELD, L. I., April 17. The twin-motored Sikorsky biplane S-29-A arrived here late today from Boston, completing a 3,000-mile flight which took about five weeks. The purpose of the trip was to transport a consignment of goods to Atlanta, Ga., for R. H. Macy & Co. of New York City.

Among the cities visited were Washington, D. C.; Fayetteville, N. C.; Atlanta, Dayton, Ohio; Middletown, Pa.; Albany and Boston. Roscoe Turner piloted the plane, and brought with him from Boston two mechanics and two passengers.

ASKS FATHER BE FREED; HE KILLED HER MOTHER

Woman Tells Gov. Moore She Fully Forgives Slayer—Says Jury Requests Leniency.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., April 17.—It was only a few days ago that a Newark woman appealed to Governor Moore to free a young man who is serving a sentence in the State prison here for the murder of her son. She offered to adopt the slayer and give him a home. Today the Governor's mail contained another appeal, this time from a Camden woman, whose father is serving a life sentence for killing her mother. The daughter says she has fully forgiven her parent and wants him released. Mrs. Florence Blair Durham is the woman. William T. Blair is the "lifer." Blair, 53 years old, was sentenced in November, 1917.

"Although it was my dear mother who died," wrote Mrs. Durham to the executive, "I fully forgive my father and feel sure he has suffered and paid the penalty during the past eight years of his confinement in prison, and I beg of you, in the mercy of your heart, to try, if possible, to be lenient with father and grant him a parole, so that he may join us, his loved ones, and enjoy a little freedom during his last few years."

Mrs. Durham declared she personally had undertaken the task of going about among old neighbors to obtain signatures to a petition for mercy. Not only did the neighbors sign it, she said, but all the members of the jury which found the man guilty have asked the Pardons Court to show him leniency.

"Previous to the time of his crime," continued the daughter's plea, "he was always a kind, loving father and worked very hard to give us a good home. I am convinced that he was not in his right mind when the crime was committed, but under the influence of strong drink and temporarily insane."

BOYS' CLUBS REPORT GAIN.

47 Have More Than 1,000 Members Each—206,171 in Federation.

Forty-seven Boys' Clubs in the United States have reported individual memberships of more than 1,000, according to a statement yesterday by C. J. Atkinson, Executive Secretary of the Boys' Club Federation, which comprises 284 Boys' Clubs in all sections of the country. The Boys' Department of the Jewish People's Institute of Chicago is the largest, with a membership of 8,500. The Boys' Club of New York follows, with a membership of 7,000.

There is a total membership of 206,171 boys in the clubs included in the Federation, representing 145 cities in the United States, Canada, England, Holland, New Zealand, Australia and India.

20,000 WOMEN STIR LONDON BY PARADE

marched with the wives of miners from Lanarkshire. Mrs. Flora Drummond, who led the marchers as dauntlessly as she used to lead what detractors called the "Shrieking Sisterhood" in the old suffragette days, walked all the way. The widow of Dr. Barnardo, the famous founder of boys' homes, was wheeled in a bath chair. One of the miners' wives, who had come from North Scotland, was accompanied by her husband. It was their golden wedding day. Another Scotswoman carried a three-month-old baby in her arms. It slept comfortably throughout the journey.

All traffic in Trafalgar Square was held up for an hour as the huge procession marched beneath Nelson's Column. In St. James's Street, the centre of "Clubland," the Red agitators became more aggressive. A party of youths with red rosettes broke into the procession line and threatened momentarily to stampede the horses, but they were quickly dispersed by the police and the procession moved on.

When the head of the column finally reached Albert Hall, four women on white horses who had been acting as marshals of the procession, leaped from the backs of their steeds and entered the building, surrounded by a large band of Fascisti, some of whom were in black shirts.

They had attained their objective, and their success was acknowledged by remarkable scenes of enthusiasm.

Picturesque Throng in Line.

LONDON, April 17 (AP).—Fourteen bobbed-hair young women of the aristocracy and the wives of many of Great Britain's wage-earners launched a movement today designed to ease the industrial situation and gave London a new thrill in a four-mile street demonstration culminating in a monster anti-strike meeting in Albert Hall, where the leaders vented their feelings.

There were hatless women, women with shawls over their heads, women in furs, women wearing the colorful costumes of Scotland and Wales and other parts of the country, but the part of the picture which attracted most attention was composed of mounted members of the fashionable Whaddon Hunt Club, who headed the procession.

About the only fun the unemployed on the sidelines had was hurling questions and exclamations over the heads of the crowd, such as "What do you know about work?" "There go the won't-works, the never-works," and "I say, look at the blighters in the tailor-made riding habits."

So far as police reports show, there was not a single hat smashed anywhere, and only a few pieces of millinery and some ribbons and shawls ruffled by the curious onlookers and April showers and gusts of wind. Scotland Yard, however, took no chances, in view of the rumors that trouble would surely develop.

"General" Flora Drummond presided over the huge meeting in Albert Hall, which unanimously adopted a resolution demanding that the resources of the nation shall no longer be wasted in strikes and lockouts, but that all industrial disputes shall be settled by negotiation and arbitration.

Railway's Men Walk Out.

While the women's parade was in progress, several hundred men employed by the London, Midland and [illegible] struck over a dispute concerning the railway company's decision to shorten hours of work and consequently to lower wages. About 400 strikers paraded the streets to the railway headquarters at Euston, where they presented their grievance. The strikers later returned to work pending discussion of the dispute by their leaders with the railway heads.

Liverpool Butchers Strike.

LIVERPOOL, April 17 (AP).—The big slaughtering trade here came to a standstill today by a strike among the sheep and cattle butchers, which may affect England's supply of fresh meat if it is not settled by Monday.

About 150 sheep butchers refused to accept a wage reduction and struck, after which 350 cattle butchers went out on strike in sympathy.

DR. E. T. HIGGINS RETIRES.

Was Chief Surgeon of Police Department Before the War.

Commissioner McLaughlin yesterday accepted the application for retirement of Dr. Edward T. Higgins, a police surgeon, to go into effect on April 22. Dr. Higgins was appointed twenty-two years ago, and was promoted to Chief Surgeon during the Mitchel Administration. He lost this rank, however, when he resigned in July, 1918, to become a Captain in the Medical Corps of the army during the World War. He was reinstated as a surgeon five months later. He will receive a pension of $2,200 a year.

Dr. Samuel Gross of 740 Fifth Street, who heads the Civil Service eligible list for appointment as police surgeon, will be Dr. Higgins's successor, Commissioner McLaughlin announced.

ISSUE MAGAZINE FOR BLIND

New Publication Has Variety of Topics—Is Printed in Paris.

The American Braille Press, Inc., established to care for the blind during the war and now continuing its work with civilians, has begun publication of The American Review for the Blind, a monthly issued in revised braille type, grade 1½.

In the foreword to the first number, just issued, William Nelson Cromwell, President of the association, stresses the need for a publication that will enable the sightless to maintain contact with current affairs. The articles deal with the possibility of a four-days' transatlantic passage, problems of radio, an invention to enable the deaf to hear and a story on medicine's aids.

Copies of the magazine may be obtained by the blind by writing to the American Braille Press, Inc., at 730 Fifth Avenue, or direct to the place of publication, 74 Rue Lauriston, Paris.

DRIVE WORKERS TO DINE.

Will Celebrate End of Palestine Campaign on Tuesday.

New York workers in the campaign to raise $1,500,000 as the city's quota of the $5,000,000 United Palestine Appeal for colonization and immigration work in Palestine this year will celebrate the end of the drive with a dinner at the Hotel Astor on Tuesday night.

The speakers will include Nathan Straus, Dr. Stephen S. Wise; National Chairman of the Appeal; Louis Lipsky, Chairman of the Zionist Organization of America; Benjamin Winter, Chairman of the New York campaign; Rabbi Israel Golstein of Congregation B'nai Jeshurun; Chaim Nachman Bialik, Hebrew poet of Palestine; Dr. Schmarya Levin, Zionist leader of Palestine; Emanuel Neumann, National Director of the Appeal, and Morris A. Zeldin, director of the New York campaign.

URGES FRANCE TO PAY US.

Paris Newspaper Says Nation Should Not Appear as a "Debt Dodger."

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 17.—Referring to the debt negotiations at Washington, the Ere Nouvelle says today: "The truth is, the Americans helped in a difficult hour of our history, and now that this hour has passed we ought not to appear to them as debt dodgers.

"We ought not to pay with our eyes closed, but we ought not to pay with our eyes filled with hate.

"Before 1914 we were the bankers of the world, and now we have reached the point where the world is our bankers.

"Before this trick of fate let us keep our dignity and calm. Let us not make it appear that a question of money can prevent France being true to her tradition. There lies our duty and there lies our interest."

WOMEN VOTERS GET DRY RESOLUTION

National League Convention Asked to Urge Congress to Uphold Law.

BALLOT TO COME TUESDAY

New York's Only Woman Alderman Speaks on Politics at Cleveland Gathering.

ST. LOUIS, April 17 (AP).—With only three dissenting votes, the convention of the National League of Women Voters took today under consideration a resolution of the Pennsylvania delegation calling on Congress to refuse to "undermine or weaken" the Eighteenth Amendment.

The resolution also urged national and State executives to appoint to enforcement offices only those supporting prohibition. Under the convention's rules, final vote on the resolution will be reached Tuesday.

The resolution stated that "Federal prohibition officers have openly declared themselves as favoring the modification" of the amendment and that opponents of prohibition have "bitterly, persistently and unjustly attacked it from without." It reaffirms the League's stand in favor of "supporting, defending and obeying the Constitution of the United States as a whole."

Dr. Ellen Potter, Pennsylvania Director of Public Welfare, declared that newspapers were "leading us to believe that crime, economic conditions and public health are as they are today because of the Eighteenth Amendment," but "nothing could be further from the truth." Conditions were better today than ever.

The practical side of politics was discussed tonight by Miss Marie Wing of the Cleveland City Council, Mrs. J. Paul Goode of the Illinois State Legislature, and Mrs. John T. Pratt, only woman member of the Board of Aldermen of New York City.

Miss Wing centred her attention on woman's new responsibility in the conduct of government.

"City government," she said, "is like good housekeeping. If it is going along smoothly and the city services are well performed every one takes the comfort and orderliness for granted, but if things get upset, out of order, or badly managed, people set up a howl.

"Whatever the system of city government in force," she added, "be a shareholder, not only a taxpayer, but an intelligent, interested, socially minded citizen."

"The outstanding function of a political party," said Mrs. Pratt, "is the designation of certain of its leaders for public office." This, she maintained, was "public service of the greatest importance and significance."

"Forceful and appealing personalities" were of the utmost importance in realizing party principles and policies. Women had it in them to improve politics and she urged the delegates to throw their enthusiasm and vigor behind party functions.

Young voters also figured prominently in tonight's program, with Miss Margaretta Fleming of Ohio State University, Miss Irene O'Crowley of New Jersey, Miss Dorothy Norgholt of Indiana, and Miss Elizabeth Hunkin of Ohio telling of youth's part in politics.

Miss Belle Sherwin of Cleveland was nominated for re-election as President of the League. The recommendation of the Nominating Committee is considered equivalent to election.

Other officers nominated were: Mrs. James Morrison of Chicago, First Vice President; Miss Adele Clark of Richmond, Va., Second Vice President; Miss Ruth Morgan, New York, Third Vice President; Miss Elizabeth J. Hauser, Girard, O., Fourth Vice President; Miss Mollie Ray Carroll, Baltimore, Fifth Vice President; Mrs. Herbert Knox Smith, Farmington, Conn., Secretary; Miss Katherine Ludington of Lyme, Conn., Treasurer.

Regional Directors nominated were: First Region, Mrs. James E. Cheesman of Providence, R. I.; Second Region, Mrs. Casper Whitney of Irvington-on-Hudson, N. Y.; Third Region, Mrs. Mary O. Cowper of Durham, N. C.; Fourth Region, Mrs. William Hibbard of Chicago; Fifth Region, Miss Marguerite Wells of Minneapolis; Sixth Region, Mrs. Roscoe Anderson of St. Louis, and Seventh Region, Mrs. Ernest Mott of San Francisco.

TRANSIT REPORT SOON DUE.

Westchester Commission's Survey Is in Hands of Printers.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., April 17.—Word was received at the Court House today that the final report of the Westchester County Transit Commission would probably be presented to the Board of Supervisors at the meeting to be held on Monday afternoon, May 3.

It is understood that the report is now in the hands of the printers and that it will offer suggestions additional to the construction of a commuters' subway under Madison Avenue, New York.

It was intimated that the Transit Commission also may make some suggestions regarding a proposed county-wide bus system which will solve the fights between a number of companies now seeking separate bus routes.

REPORT NEW SWISS STEEL.

Experts Declare Boshard's Invention Is Cheap and Light.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.
By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, April 17.—The Swiss engineer Boshard of Zurich, after many years of experiments, discovered a new steel which is 40 per cent. lighter and 30 per cent. cheaper than the present product.

Experts who recently tested the steel at the Polytechnicum of Zurich and Dresden reported favorably on it. They announced that it is specially suitable for building railway bridges owing to its lightness.

A German company has been formed to exploit the new product.

Boshard died a few months ago in Zurich after selling his invention.

400 AT DINNER FOR KING.

Leaders of Both Parties Honor Head of Republican Organization.

About four hundred men and women attended a dinner in honor of John F. King, President of the Republican Organization Club of the Third Assembly District, North, in the Hotel Pennsylvania Roof Garden last evening.

Among those present were Samuel S. Koenig, Republican County Chairman; Representative Nathan D. Perlman, Postmaster John J. Kieley, R. Mulligan, D. Morton and J. Kane Jr., Republican leaders of the district; Charles H. Hussey Tammany leader of the district; Herman W. Beyer, Republican leader of the Fifth District, and former Representative Thomas Jefferson Ryan.

The dinner was followed by a vaudeville entertainment.

DOHERTY AND LEACH IN BIG POWER MOVE

Plan $88,000,000 Development at Niagara Falls, With Service to This City.

HEARING IS SET FOR MAY 6

Super-Power Corporation Also Proposes St. Lawrence River Project to Cost $211,500,000.

BUFFALO, N. Y., April 17 (AP).—Announcement was made today that Henry L. Doherty and A. B. Leach, leading New York Public Utility executives had become associated with the American Super-Power Corporation, with headquarters in Buffalo. Simultaneously Edward C. Randall of Buffalo, President of the corporation, made it known that this organization plans to make a strenuous fight for the right to develop hydroelectric power at Niagara Falls and on the international reach of the St. Lawrence River.

The plans of the corporation, which are predicated upon an early amendment to the existing treaty between Canada and the United States, by which more power might be developed by both countries, call for an $88,000,000 development at Niagara Falls, and a $211,500,000 development in the St. Lawrence. Detailed plans have been worked out under which the scenic beauty of the Nnagara cataract would be preserved for posterity, and power from the mighty fall would be made available to the metropolitan district.

The officers of the American Super Power Corporation, as chosen at a meeting in New York City last week, are: Henry L. Doherty, New York, Chairman of the board; A. B. Leach, New York, Chairman of the Executive Committee; Edward C. Randall, Buffalo, President; F. C. Hamilton, New York, Vice President, and J. Boardman Scovell, Lewiston, Secretary.

A hearing before the Water Power Commission of New York State on the corporation's plans is scheduled for May 6.

The American Super-Power Corporation has been incorporated in New York State for the purpose of generating and transmiting hydro-electric power in the State of New York. It has no connection with a company of similar name incorporated in Delaware.

If it obtains a license, for which it is an applicant, to develop electric power from additional treaty waters, it will transmit power to New York City and other cities, notably Binghamton, along the 315-mile right of way which has been obtained.

Its plan for development at the Falls, the corporation's engineers assert, will produce the maximum required by the Federal Power Commission of thirty horsepower per cubic foot second of water, 50 per cent. greater than any company now using the waters of the river on the American side.

Engineers of the corporation plan the erection of double transmission lines to New York carrying 220,000 volts, which have been found practicable in California and Southern States. They would be connected with local power distributing companies in New York City.

The whole project, including the transmission lines, it is estimated, would cost $88,000,000.

In addition to the Niagara project, the corporation has filed its application with the Federal Water Power Commission and the Water Power Commission of New York for a license to develop power on the St. Lawrence. This plan provides for a channel for navigation by ocean-going steamers with a draft of thirty feet. In case the canal is included in the project the American Government would be asked to contribute $38,700,000.

PRAISES AMERICAN WIFE AS 'EXPERT AT HER JOB'

Rosita Forbes Adds That This 'Unimaginative Race' Is Standardizing Her.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.
By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 17.—"There is nothing in the world quite as nice as a young American woman, and she is as much an expert at her job as her husband," writes Mrs. Rosita Forbes, the British explorer and writer, in The Observer.

"American womanhood, however, is being standardized, like every other product of that efficient but unimaginative race. It is a pity, because the material is gorgeous. The American woman can produce a degree of comfort and order in her house which only a professional can do in England. She is the best mother in the world, because she has been so often starved in her girlhood.

"The aim of American education is to treat boys and girls alike, 'until,' said one university President, 'we actually forget which is which.'

"'Oh, the poor girls!' exclaimed a great French professor to whom I repeated this, 'What insensate cruelty!'

"Whenever I lectured in American colleges girls used to come to me afterward and ask about romance. I grew accustomed to such questions as, 'Are there cavemen in Arabia?' 'Are shieks really attractive?'

"Half of the fault lies in too early marriages, which often follow, or even interrupt, the course of coeducation. Girls of 19 and 21, with none of the experience the wider life of Europe affords, marry before they have any knowledge of what they want."

SHOW OLD FURNITURE AND ART OBJECTS

Exhibit at Anderson Galleries Contains Many Rare Pieces to Be Sold at Auction.

Venetian lacquer, Italian Renaissance furniture, ceramics, Murano glass and other objects, the property of Mrs. Norman Hapgood; also English, French and Italian furniture and art objects from the home of Mrs. James Brown and Mrs. W. V. S. Thorne, both of New York, and the unclaimed items of the Viscount Leverhulme collection, now exhibited at the Anderson Galleries, will be sold there Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons.

Chinese brocade panels, needlework pictures, French Felletin and other tapestries, Murano glass clocks, rugs, paintings and miscellaneous antiques and a crystal mirror are listed.

In Murano and opaline glass there are Venetian candlesticks, green flower chalices, pendants, candelabra, a beeker-shape mirror-black vase, an urn with cover crested with opaque polychromed flowers and other large pieces and a goodly collection of small ones.

In Venetian lacquer there are pole screen panels with Chinese pavilions and Chinese clad figures in rouge d'or on black; a writing desk in the fashion of the Rafaelle revival, with griffon, mermaid and satyr motifs and birds. A lacquer cabinet has floral pendants in dark greens and rose on an apricot ground. A commode with serpentine front and incurved sides is decorated in sanguine with designs on cream ground.

There are some late eighteenth century Venetian chairs with arched cabriole supports and outcurved and scrolled front rails. One is done in apple-green and rogue d'or on old cream. A seventeenth century six-fold paper screen is painted with trees and flowers in silver gray with touches of rose and green. A sixteenth century Venetian walnut centre table is supported on a pedestal of three carved putto caryatids facing converging arches of unusual design. The twelve-sided top is a later addition.

An important old Irish hand-tufted carpet, circa 1790, has a green ground and is centred by "Fame," framed in a Maltese cross design, and is from the collection of Sir Ralph Coote, Deer Park, Mountrath, Ireland. An Aubusson verdure panel is woven with brilliantly colored birds.

A Chinese-decorated lacquer eight-fold Ch'ien-lung screen with incised and painted Chinese figures in pavilions and landscapes, with trees above and flowers below, all on black lacquer, is very attractive. A sixteenth century carved wood paneling taken from a Brittany house may be used as an overmantel, or a settle back.

Levelhulme articles include a Chinese Chippendale mahogany wardrobe and other pieces of furniture, Sheffield plate, a George III meat platter and a few other items.

There are 267 items listed in all.

HE FLIES 900 MILES FOR HIS DAY'S MEALS

Army Pilot Lunches in Washington Between Breakfast and Dinner in Dayton, Ohio.

Special to The New York Times.

DAYTON, Ohio, April 17.—Among those who sat down with the rest at the banquet tendered tonight to Lieutenant Macready, the highest flier of them all, who is retiring from the Army Air Service, was Lieutenant James T. Hutchinson, test pilot, who after breakfast here this morning had flown to Washington for luncheon and had completed the 900-mile circuit to get back to the dinner of his brother officers.

Lieutenant Hutchinson this morning received an invitation in no uncertain terms asking him to take lunch with Brig. Gen. John B. Dellinger of the Quartermaster Corps, who is also retiring. The aviator hopped off for the East, and, returning, left Washington about 2 P. M. The return trip was especially rough and he landed at 7:15 P. M., in time for the Macready banquet.

During the evening, Lieutenant James H. Doolittle, who succeeds Lieutenant Macready as chief of the Flying Section, presented him with a golden sword, the gift of the air service men of Dayton.

Langley Field fliers, who came in today for Army manoeuvres, reported encountering heavy head winds which held them up to the extent that entire squadrons on country roads made better time than did the Martin bombers.

Coolidge Refuses Pardon to Two Who Hid Assets of Defunct Concern.

As a result of information received by authorities at the Federal Building yesterday that President Coolidge had refused to pardon Meyer and Abe Kaplan, sentenced to eighteen months in Atlanta Penitentiary for conspiracy to conceal assets of the defunct Republic Plumbing Supply Corporation, it was announced that they would appear in the United States District Court Monday to be remanded to prison.

The move for pardons was opposed by the National Association of Credit Men, through its Executive Secretary, J. H. Tregoe, and others.

Fire Burns Tobacco Worth $150,000

BROAD BROOK, Conn., April 17 (AP).—A $200,000 fire today destroyed a dwelling on Rye Street occupied by Ruben Donovan and a large tobacco warehouse located near by, which was filled with baled tobacco valued at $150,000 and owned by Tupinski & Adler of New York. Starting in the Donovan home the flames rapidly gained headway and it was not long before they had spread to the warehouse. The amount of insurance could not be learned. The Donovan house and contents were destroyed.

OPERA SEASON ENDS; STARS OFF TO SOUTH

Two Pullman Trains Engaged to Take the Metropolitan Singers to Atlanta.

16 PRODUCTIONS ON TOUR

Cleveland and Rochester Also to Be Visited—Stirring Farewells to Company's Friends.

Thirty-odd cars in which were singers and scenery from New York's opera were speeding southward today, due tomorrow morning in Atlanta, where the annual tour opens a few hours later for a sold-out week at the Auditorium that has housed political conventions. Two trains of artists, with 120 choristers, 100 orchestra players and a fair-sized ballet left the Pennsylvania Station after midnight, separately routed over the Seaboard and Southern lines. Most of the equipment for sixteen complete Metropolitan productions had started ahead.

There were fifteen Pullmans for those who boarded the special trains. Rose Ponselle and Signor Martinelli, who open in Atlanta with "Aida," were reported already reaching Georgia from their recent concert tours. Bori, Gigli and Chaliapin were to follow in the next two days. Most of the company found the specials more sociable, and so did a host of the artists' friends, who by hook or crook managed to accompany them from the opera house doors to give the stars and lesser folk a royal send-off at the station.

Jeanne Gordon in "Aida."

One of those who will appear in "Aida" tomorrow is Jeanne Gordon, American contralto, who missed a coveted chance of opening New York's season in the same work and had been absent from opera most of this year. Also in the performance will be Mardones and Bohnen. Chaliapin heads a Tuesday "Don Quichotte" with De Luca and also Miss Telva, who had her first hearing in that work during the local farewells.

The Atlanta week adds a Wednesday doublet, "Bohème" and "Pagliacci," with Bori, Gigli and Scotti, Mary Lewis, Tokatyan and Tibbett. On Thursday will be heard "The Jewels," with Easton, Telva, Martinelli, and Basiola; Friday, "Lucia," with Marion Talley, and Saturday "Tannhäuser," with Laubenthal, and "Trovatore," with Rothier added to those already heard there.

The artists have been preceded in the South by W. J. Guard of the Metropolitan publicity department, who made a three days' circuit by way of Cleveland, where the company will spend a second week of its tour. The Ohio enthusiasts, in fact, have again booked ten days of opera, to be followed by two in Rochester, N. Y., before all hands return to New York on Saturday, May 8.

Repertoire for Cleveland.

To avoid mischances of opera being given without dresses and scenes the first four Atlanta productions will be among Cleveland's last, while all others in the Ohio city will be Cleveland's own selection. The list there includes "Cena delle Beffe" and "Pagliacci" as a Gigli-Martinelli double bill for one unparalleled opener.

The following days bring "Boris," "Giocconda," "Romeo and Juliet," "Samson," "Lucia," "Bohème" and "Cavalleria," and one week hence, "Rigoletto," with Galli-Curci, "Don Quichotte" and "Aida." The wind-up of the tour at Rochester comprises "Rigoletto," with Talley, and "Tosca," with Easton.

Farewells in overflowing measure filled the Metropolitan's last day yesterday. Marion Telva replaced Miss Flexer as the French war mother in "Andrea Chenier." Easton and Bourskaya, Daiossy, Meader, Gigli and Didur were among the familiar cast, while Serafin conducted both the opera and the ensuing "Petruschka" ballet.

Last evening Lauri-Volpi sang what was said to be a first time in "La Giocconda," as also did Mmes. Larsen-Todsen and Branzell, if memory served, after six months' repetition with varied constellations. Telva, Basiola, Mardones and others under Giulio Setti's accomplished direction shared the recalls.

THEATRE TOURNEY ENDS.

Big Audience at Final Performance Held in Mount Vernon.

The Westchester Woman's Club Theatre on Crary Avenue, Mount Vernon, was crowded last night with folk from all parts of Westchester County for the finals in the county's Little Theatre tournament.

Four groups had been picked for the final contest at the presentation of plays by community players earlier in the week. Each of these four groups had won a prize. The companies that took part last night were the Community Players of Mount Vernon, playing "The Drums of Oude"; the Play Shop of Pelham Manor, in "Jeremiad"; the Wayside Players of Scarsdale, in "The String of the Samisen," and the Fireside Players of White Plains, in "Manikin and Minikin."

Announcement of the winner of the silver cup will be made on Monday by the Westchester County Recreation Commission, under whose auspices the contests were arranged. The names of the three judges have been kept secret.

GIVE SAXOPHONE CONCERT.

Rudy Wiedhoeft and Others Glorify the Recent Note in Orchestras.

Glorifying the American note in modern orchestras, Rudy Wiedhoeft gave a saxophone concert in Aeolian Hall last evening, assisted by three other players of the same instrument, Arnold Brilhart, Alford Evans and Harold Sturr, who appeared, as the program stated, by courtesy of Roger Wolfe Kahn. Two vocal soloists were Virginia Rea, soprano, and Franklyn Baur, tenor. Pianists who also helped in various capacities were Daniel Liebenfeld, Rudolph Gruen and Frank Banta.

The saxophone ensemble began with a Bach air arranged by Hugo Frey and others of Tchaikovsky and Nevin scored by Joseph Nussbaum. Mr. Wiedhoeft was applauded in his own "Valse Vanité" and jocose "Sax-o-phun." There were arrangements for all the players and voices combined in Romberg's "Will You Remember?" and the "Bye-Bye" song from "Dearest Enemy."

MUSIC

By OLIN DOWNES.

Oratorio Society.

It is not easy to give a just estimate of the merits of the performance of the Bach B minor Mass by the Oratorio Society, Albert Stoessel, conductor, last night, in Carnegie Hall. There was a wide gap between the qualities of the music and the quality of its interpretation. The music is extremely difficult. Its difficulty is exacted by its greatness. It was known that Mr. Stoessel had labored long and earnestly with unflagging enthusiasm to perfect this performance as much as he might and to give the Mass in a way that would justify its annual repetition by the Oratorio Society. There could hardly be a finer ideal or a more worthy service to the art of the music, for the B minor Mass is a creation of indescribable beauty, workmanship, and depth of feeling. Bach himself never surpassed and perhaps never equaled it. A community which secures the opportunity of becoming familiar with such a score can count itself more than fortunate, and can hardly fail to grow to broader horizons of knowledge and beauty.

There is nothing, therefore, but praise for the aims embodied in last night's performance. But there must arise the question whether these aims are commensurately within the powers of those who harbor them. The B minor Mass is a work to tax the abilities of the greatest choral organizations. Or it is sung, as at Bethlehem, by those who have grown up in the music, know it by memory, and practice it year in and year out for the annual performances. These performances are mentioned here not for the sake of unjust comparisons with that of last night, but to emphasize what the question of an adequate performance of this score entails. That it entails far more than many besides those acquainted with the music realize was forcibly shown, and this makes it a question whether Mr. Stoessel is not asking too much of the material he has to attempt a task of such difficulty.

At its best the chorus last night sang the notes in a way that had rhythm and tonal sonority, but very seldom in a manner to convey the singers' realization or expression of the tremendous feeling of the text and its glorification through Bach's music. In other places the chorus singing was technically uncertain and ill-balanced; it had little color or variety of dynamics; it was often poorly balanced as regarded the relative sonorities of the different choirs. In plain words the singers were confronted by a task which must have sorely dismayed them, though much of the evening they were plainly feeling their way. Perhaps because of the technical obstacles that his singers faced Mr. Stoessel's tempi were as a rule too slow, so that the music dragged and lost emotional current; and they were metronomic and there was little variety of shading or dramatic impulse in the performance.

(There is not only religious but powerfully dramatic feeling in this Mass.) The conductor was also obliged, because of the length of the work and the circumscribed duration of a concert in this city, to make important cuts—cuts of whole numbers, cuts in arias, duets and choruses—and some of these cuts omitted some very valuable music.

Under such circumstances slips of the letter can readily be condoled, but what if the letter oppresses so that the spirit is inarticulate? The spirit of last night's performance was stiff, diffident, and uncommunicative. Those who heard the Mass for the first time must have wondered at the encomiums which have been lavished upon it. Only occasionally was tedium relieved by some brilliant or massive effect of the voices that gratified the ear, if it did not appeal particularly to the emotions.

The soloists were Olive Marshall, Grace Leslie, Lewis James and Frazer Gange. The soprano and alto were inadequate to the inordinate demands of Bach's vocal passages. Mr. James, the tenor, was the most effective of the quartet as a singer, and in his expression, Mr. Gange was less fortunate than is his rule. His performance was gingerly, and often lacking in clear resonant tone quality. The music taxed his range, as it did that of other singers, and there was little conviction in his interpretation. The airs and concerted numbers of the B minor Mass are merciless in their demands, and he is indeed a finished artist who survives them.

The performance last night was attended by an audience that packed the hall—a convincing proof of what the name of Bach and the announcement of a performance of this composition means to the public—which makes it more desirable that the B minor Mass he adequately and often presented.

CONCERT BY HARVARD MEN.

University's Glee Club Sings to Large House at the Town Hall.

The Harvard Glee Club of sixty members sang at the Town Hall last evening to a house well filled apparently by their champions in a recent controversy, wherein they protested the intercollegiate contest prize song, Parker's "Lamp in the West." Whether or not a light had been seen in that or any other quarter, last night's classic program began with the old college's traditional "Fair Harvard." Its further groups of Latin, Reformation and Russian Church songs, hymns from the "Rig Veda," the coronation from "Boris" and other recognized music followed Harvard's new practice that has found imitators in many colleges.

Dr. Archibald T. Davison's place at the head of his chorus was taken by G. Wallace Woodworth of the club as acting conductor for this year. An unnamed undergraduate played accompaniments, while the singing groups were alternated with instrumental numbers by the distinguished pianist Harold Bauer.

TO HONOR SHAKESPEARE.

English Union to Hold Exercises on Eve of Birthday, Thursday.

Former Governor Henry J. Allen of Kansas and E. H. Sothern, actor, will be the speakers at exercises to be held by the English-Speaking Union of the United States at the Town Hall next Thursday night, the eve of Shakespeare's birthday. Francis Rogers will sing Shakespearean songs.

The guests of honor will include Julia Marlowe, wife of Mr. Sothern; Sir Harry Gloster Armstrong, British Consul General, and Lady Armstrong, and officers of the St. George's, St. Andrew's and St. David's Societies and the Shakespeare Association of America.

Young & Rubicam Win Ad Prize.

Young & Rubicam, New York and Philadelphia advertising agency which won the Harvard award for the best advertising campaign in 1925, announced yesterday that it had received first prize for a color illustration for an advertisement for the Postum Cereal Company at an exhibition of the Art Directors' Club of Philadelphia. The illustration was painted by Walter Biggs, a New York artist.

MRS. A. G. SPENCER, 75, HONORED BY FRIENDS

Rainbow Luncheon Is Given for Social Worker and Educator Who Gets Many Tributes.

RECEIVES A POT OF GOLD

$3,000 Gift Intended to Give Her More Leisure—She Tells the Philosophy of Her Life.

A rainbow luncheon in honor of Mrs. Anna Garlin Spencer was given yesterday at the Hotel Astor by the National Council of Women in celebration of her seventy-fifth birthday. Representatives from many organizations with which Mrs. Spencer is affiliated paid tribute to her achievements as an educator, theologian, humanitarian, author and lover of peace.

Seventy-five burning candles formed a rainbow, and there was also a painted rainbow arching the speakers' table, from the end of which, at the close of the luncheon, was lifted a real pot of gold containing $3,000.

The gold was a contribution from the associates of Mrs. Spencer in her activities, and its formal presentation was made by Dr. Valeria H. Parker, President of the Council, who presided. There was a string tied to each dollar, said Dr. Parker, in that they were not to be used to further the aims of any organization, but were for the benefit of Mrs. Spencer herself in giving her more leisure time in her work and "clerical service."

Mrs. Spencer, in expressing her gratitude for the gift, spoke of two gifts which she said she already possessed, the power of appreciation, and the great advantage in being able to keep company with many groups. She suggested, with a smile, that her remaining years of service be placed in the hands of a receiver.

Gives Her Philosophy.

She said she still saw the big things she had never been able to do and, quoting from Emerson, she recited two texts she followed closely in her life. One for the morning was the "Call to work," and other for the evening," she continued, "which is very dear to me, as the shadows lengthen and the goal is within sight, is 'Trust the spirit that brought us hither and is leading us onward.'"

Benjamin F. Andrews of Teachers College, Columbia University, where Mrs. Spencer is at present special lecturer in social science, spoke of her contribution there as one of the great things at the university, and declared she had the mind of a women of 25.

He read a letter from James E. Russell, Dean of Teachers College, who spoke of Mrs. Spencer as an invaluable adviser and an inspiring teacher in the college for many years. "Her sanity, optimism and force of character," the Dean wrote, "has served to dignify the service which she has given. Why doesn't kind providence give us more such women?"

Dr. William F. Snow, Director of the American Social Hygiene Association, spoke of Mrs. Spencer as perennially young, but old with experience. Miss Kate Holladay Claghorn, President of the New York School of Social Work, paid a tribute to her work in social training, and Mrs. V. G. Simkhovitch, Director of Greenwich House, spoke of Mrs. Spencer as a steadfast and consistent worker for peace, always a part of the whole struggle for peace, and as a constructive type of modern womanhood.

Dr. William I. Lawrence of the American Unitarian Association defined Mrs. Spencer's theology as psychology and sociology combined, while Dr. John Lovejoy Elliot spoke of her as a practicing ethicist. "She can sense what is in the mind of a flapper," said Dr. Elliot, "and she also knows the minds of the great people of the past."

Lady Newsholme's Tribute.

Lady Newsholme, wife of Sir Arthur Newsholme, British Sanitarian, brought a tribute from her husband, who was unable to attend. She declared Mrs. Spencer was an inspiration for the women of England. Mrs. William Hunton, representing the Federation of Colored Women; Mrs. Leonard B. Searing of the Rhode Island Council of Women, Mrs. W. A. Fritchey, President of the National Housewives' League; Paul U. Kellogg, editor of Survey; Mrs. Glen K. Swiggett, Mrs. James Lees Laidlaw, for suffrage organizations, and Dr. Katharine B. Davis, who was Chairman of the Luncheon Committee, were others who paid tribute.

There were also one-minute greetings from representatives of the Commission on the Family of the National Board of the Y. W. C. A., Women's Peace Society, Woman's Conference for Ethical Culture, Child Study Association of America, American Social Hygiene Association, Foreign Policy Association, Russell Sage Foundation, New York School of Social Work, National Conference of Social Workers and the National Council for the Prevention of War.

Mrs. Spencer's first newspaper work was on The Providence (R. I.) Journal, and it was in that city that she received her ordination and became the preacher for the Bell Street Chapel. She was Hackley Professor of Sociology and Ethics at the Theological School at Meadeville, Pa., following her associate leadership in the New York Ethical Culture Society, the New York School of Philanthropy and special lectureship at the University of Wisconsin.

She is an author of note, among her recent works being "Men's Share in Social Culture," "The Scarlet Woman," "Social deals of the Free Church" and "The Family and Its Members."

Actress and Basil Rathbone, English Actor, to Marry Today.

Miss Ouida Bergere, actress and scenario writer and former wife of George Fitzmaurice, the motion picture director, will be married to Basil Rathbone, English actor, this afternoon at the home of Joseph B. Thomas, the architect, in the Beekman mansion, 433 East Fifty-first Street.

The ceremony will be performed by the Rev. Charles Hampton and will be followed by a reception, to which prominent persons in theatrical life have been invited.

UNITED JEWISH DRIVE BEGINS NEXT SUNDAY

$6,000,000 Is New York's Quota Toward $15,000,000 Chest for Relief Work Abroad.

Next Sunday an intensive city-wide campaign will begin for the largest quota ever sought in any single community in the history of Jewish philanthropic effort in America, it was announced yesterday. From April 25 to May 9 the United Jewish Campaign Committee will undertake to raise $6,000,000, which is New York's quota toward the national $15,000,000 overseas chest. The drive is being conducted simultaneously in forty-five States, under the national leadership of David A. Brown of Detroit.

The purpose of the overseas chest is to provide immediate relief for war-impoverished Jews of Eastern Europe, who are now suffering because of the terrible economic conditions in Poland, Galicia and Bessarabia. Another object is to further the back-to-the-soil movement in Russia, where thousands of families are seeking a new foothold as productive workers of the soil. The Russian Government has opened to them hundreds of thousands of acres of good farm lands.

This work of Jewish farm settlement, which is in charge of Dr. Joseph A. Rosen, noted American agricultural scientist, is an outgrowth of the non-sectarian famine relief work undertaken in Russia by the Joint Distribution Committee in cooperation with the American Relief Administration in 1921-22, under the directorship of Herbert Hoover, for which $20,000,000 was appropriated by the United States Congress.

The entire array of Jewish relief and reconstruction undertakings maintained in Europe by the Joint Distribution Committee in the eleven years since the World War began has embraced forty-two countries and involved an expenditure of close to $60,000,000. Aid in furthering the economic development of Palestine is also included in the contemplated distribution of the overseas fund.

PEGGY JOYCE HAS LOST TRACK OF HER BRIDALS

'I Honestly Don't Remember How Many,' She Says as She Lands From Florida With Fiance.

"I honestly don't remember how many times I have been married," said Peggy Hopkins Joyce, actress, when she arrived yesterday from Miami, Fla., on the Admiral liner H. F. Alexander with Stanford E. Comstock, real estate operator, to whom she recently announced she was engaged.

Miss Joyce said she was not worried by statements attributed to Mrs. Comstock maintaining that the divorce granted to Mr. Comstock last September was illegal.

"It is absolutely legal," said Mr. Comstock. Miss Joyce described the statements attributed to Mrs. Comstock as "sour grapes."

"Ex-wives always act that way," said Miss Joyce.

When Mr. Comstock told of his plans to have his eight-year-old son Don live with him after his marriage to Miss Joyce she volunteered:

"I will be a mother to him."

Miss Joyce and her fiancé went from the pier to the Hotel Ambassador. She plans to sail for Europe on May 1.

C. W. Barron, publisher of The Wall Street Journal, returning from a three months' visit to Florida, described the real estate lull there.

"The big concerns will come through all right," said Mr. Barron. "But some of the smaller ones have been forced to postpone improvements by lack of capital. Miami is still the leading city of Florida and will continue to be the big city of that State. The division and development runs from below Miami to above Palm Beach and involves many millions of dollars, and as long as the country is prosperous the development will continue."

LOUIS FRANKLIN GENET.

Grandson of "Citizen" Genet Dies Suddenly in Leonia, N. J.

Louis Franklin Genet, 82, a retired lumber dealer, died suddenly of heart disease on Friday at his home, 451 Broad Avenue, Leonia, N. J. He was born in Greenbush, N. Y., a son of General Henry James Genet and a grandson of Edmond Charles Genet, known as "Citizen" Genet, who came to this country in 1793 as Minister of France, later became an American citizen and married a daughter of Governor George Clinton of New York.

For many years Louis Franklin Genet was in the lumber business in New York, retiring thirty years ago. Since then he had made his home in Leonia. He was an heir of the Lorillard estate. He is survived by his wife.

Funeral services will be held at 1 P. M. tomorrow in All Souls' Episcopal Church, Leonia.

VETERAN LIFE SAVER DIES.

J. F. Gillooly Is Said to Have Saved More Than 1,000 Lives.

LOUISVILLE, April 17 (AP).—John F. Gillooly, 70, veteran life saver, who is estimated to have saved more than a thousand lives, died here today. His twoscore or more years' service at the Falls of the Ohio River here was recognized by special acts of Congress and the Kentucky Assembly.

Heart disease brought death to the life guard, who until he was retired in 1917, was in charge of the United States Coast Guard life station here.

He and his rescue workers were said to have been the first to cross the Miami River during the Dayton (Ohio) flood of 1913.

Max Pearl.

Max Pearl, steward of the Brooklyn Club and formerly for twenty-five years steward of the Unity Club, dropped dead of heart disease on Friday at his home in Richmond Hill. Mr. Pearl was born in Berlin, Germany, 62 years ago and came to this country when a boy. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Henrietta Pearl; a daughter, Carrie, and a son, Herman Pearl.

Lyster C. Reighley.

Lyster C. Reighley, 77, a retired textile manufacturer, died yesterday in his apartment at Hotel La Salle, 30 East Sixtieth Street. He was born in Flint, Mich., and had formerly been associated with woolen mills in New England. Funeral services will be held on Monday at 2 P. M. in St. Matthew and St. Timothy's Church, 26 West Eighty-fourth Street.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC BUYS TEXAS ROAD

Pays $900,000 to Acquire $25,000 Capital Stock of the Dayton-Goose Creek Railway.

I. C. C. APPROVED THE SALE

J. B. Eastman, Chairman, Dissented, Saying Purchase of Control Meant Consolidation.

The Southern Pacific Railway has paid $900,000 to R. S. Sterling to acquire the $25,000 capital stock he holds of the little Dayton-Goose Creek Railway in Texas. The Interstate Commerce Commission has approved the acquisition, with its Chairman, Joseph B. Eastman, dissenting on the ground that under the present law the commission is not authorized to approve an "acquisition of control in a manner that involves consolidation of the carriers into a single system."

The railroad extends from Dayton to Goose Creek, Texas. It was built in 1918 and 1919 to furnish rail transportation for a large oil field discovered in 1916, with an extension later to serve a large refinery of the Humble Oil and Refining Company at Baytown. The company's book investment in road and equipment as of Oct. 31, 1925, was $765,177 and the value of its property was said to be $994,473.

The commission has also approved the leasing of this line to the Texas & New Orleans Railroad, a subsidiary of the Southern Pacific, for operation.

Testimony in the case, according to the commission's report, shows that joint operation of the Dayton and the T. & N. O. will result in savings of about $80,000 per year. Such operation, it is said, will give shippers and consignees better service in that the resources of the Southern Pacific in respect to motive power, equipment and supplies will be available. It is also expected to benefit the agricultural interests in the Dayton's territory by giving them wider markets.

Regarding the reasonableness of the price, the commission points out that its appraised value of $575,000 as of Dec. 31, 1920, adjusted to 1925 prices would be $994,434. The rental to be paid by the T. & N. O. is 6 per cent. on the $900,000 invested by the Southern Pacific.

In dissenting from the majority opinion Chairman Eastman said that the merger "would be acquisition of control in a manner which involves consolidation of the carriers into a single system for ownership and operation and we have no authority to approve such an acquisition under Paragraph 3 of Section 5.

"In the second place, I am unable to distinguish in principle what is now proposed from what Division 4 and later the entire commission refused to sanction in control of the Dayton-Goose Creek Railway by the New Orleans, Texas & Mexico Railway. The only essential difference is that there the N. O., T. & M. sought to acquire control, while here we have the Southern Pacific seeking the same thing. Most of the reasons urged against the former proposed acquisition, in my judgment, have equal application here and I think that they were and are sound."

BALTIMORE TELLER HELD.

Federal Reserve Clerk Is Accused of Taking $7,200.

BALTIMORE, April 17 (AP).—Walter A. Snyder, a teller in the Baltimore branch of the Federal Reserve Bank, was arrested at his home here today on a Federal warrant charging embezzlement and the making of false entries.

Manager Albert H. Dudley announced that a shortage of $7,200 in the bank's funds had been traced to Snyder. An investigation disclosed, Dudley said, that a check had been raised from $200 to $7,200.

Snyder denied taking the money which the officials said the false check was entered in the records to cover.

COLLEGE HEADS PRAISE THE NICOLL-HEARN BILL

See in Measure Creating a Higher Education Board a Means of Unifying System.

Officials of City College joined yesterday in praise of the Nicoll-Hearn bill, creating a Board of Higher Education, which has just been signed by Governor Smith.

Sidney E. Mezes, President of City College, said the legislation was as important as the unification of the elementary schools, and that it would lessen overcrowding.

Dean Frederick B. Robinson said the measure gave assurance "that public education of collegiate grade will go forward in this city under well-balanced, experienced and unified control."

Charles H. Tuttle, a member of the college Board of Trustees, said it gave New York a system of municipal education superior to any.

Ralph Jonas, President of the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, added his endorsement as follows:

"I feel that not only Brooklyn but the entire city as well as those interested in higher education generally are to be congratulated on what I regard to be one of the most important steps to further higher education that has been adopted in this State. The bill will result in the organization of a Board of Higher Education, whose duty it will be to establish a unit for higher education in Brooklyn, and also to provide adequate facilities for every other borough in the city."

France Changes to "Summer Time."

PARIS, April 17 (AP).—Summer, or Daylight Saving Time, went into effect throughout France at midnight tonight. The weather, however, was far from summery or even Springlike, for from all parts of the country came reports of abnormally cold weather for this time of year.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 17.—The northern disturbance has moved eastward to Newfoundland with greatly increased intensity. St. John's reporting a barometer reading of 28.92 inches. The disturbance that was over the northeastern slope of the Rockies is now over Kansas, Wichita reporting the lowest pressure, 29.64 inches, and a storm remains low from the Pacific Coast. High pressure prevails from Saskatchewan and Manitoba southeastward to the upper Ohio valley and the lower Lake region, and is relatively high over Florida.

The indications are for rains in the Ohio Valley and the southeastern portion of the Middle Atlantic States and local showers in Tennessee, the East Gulf States and the northern portion of the South Atlantic States Sunday. Generally fair weather is probable Monday east of the Mississippi River, except in portions of the South Atlantic and East Gulf States, where there will be showers.

The temperature will be lower in Kentucky, Tennessee, the Carolinas and the southern portion of the Middle Atlantic States Sunday, and in the East Gulf States on Monday, while the temperature will rise slowly Monday in northern sections.

MEDALS TO BE GIVEN TO WINNING ORATORS

The Times's Trophies Will Go to Eight Finalists and All School Winners.

CASH PRIZES ON APRIL 30

Winner in Every School Will Get an Honor Award in Bronze on May 14.

MANY CONTESTS THIS WEEK

Leaders in All 65 Districts to Be Determined—The Interborough Finals Here Friday.

Medals of honor designed by Emil Fuchs, sculptor, painter and etcher, will be awarded by THE NEW YORK TIMES to the eight finalists and to all high school winners in the National Oratorical Contest on the Constitution.

The sixty-five $50 cash prizes, which THE TIMES has offered to all district winners, will be presented to them at their schools by April 30.

THE TIMES Medal in gold and silver will be given to each of the eight finalists who win their way to the regional championship to be held at Town Hall here the evening of May 14. Gold medals will be received by the first three speakers and silver medals by the remaining five. The same medal in bronze will be awarded on the same date to the winner in every school entered in the contest in New York City, thirty-five counties of New York State and eleven counties of Northern New Jersey.

Shows Spirit of Liberty.

THE TIMES Medal is the creation of a recognized master in the ancient art of medal making. The medal is 1¾ inches in diameter. The face brings out the spirit of Liberty projected in relief against the Continent of North America. On the obverse the inscription bears the date of the regional championship, May 14, and is placed against a shadowy background sketched with heads of Washington and Lincoln and with Independence Hall, where the Constitution was signed. The periphery is starred for the thirteen original States. The medal should permanently memorialize the individual efforts the successful high school boy and girl contestants have contributed toward the purpose of the National Oratorical Contest—the increasing of respect for and interest in the Constitution.

Mr. Fuchs at his studio yesterday said of his conception:

"To express the age in which we live simply and directly, and without imitation of those who have gone before, should be the ideal of every artist. In this age that is hurried and young we haven't the time to look for symbolism, but for independence and directness of thought, to which we will add a little of the beauty and poetry of life. I thought of this as I worked over the medal for these boys and girls who are directly, and in their own way, thinking of art and liberty.

"So my Liberty sits, holding the fasces that represent power, with those beautiful words of the Constitution over her:

"'To form a more perfect union . . . And secure the blessings of liberty.'"

Fuchs a Sculptor of Note.

Mr. Fuchs is known to the art world for a Cellini-like fondness for various media. After his sculptured group "Mother's Love," won the Gold Medal of Honor at the International Exhibition at Munich in 1896 he was brought to the English court by King Edward, then Prince of Wales. He executed portrait busts of Lady Alice Montagu, Lord Wolseley and others. He designed the coronation medal for King Edward and the medal commemorating the extension of Queen Victoria's reign into the twentieth century, as well as the King Edward postage stamps and, in customarily different key, the Prince Christian Victor Memorial for St. George's Chapel at Windsor and others.

The first distribution of prizes by THE NEW YORK TIMES, that of the sixty-five $50 district prizes, will be made in cooperation with the heads of the winning schools themselves. It is planned to ask the district winner's principal to make the actual presentation in behalf of THE TIMES, preferably at the Friday afternoon assembly on April 30, which is usually the high point of the school week.

Many districts have already produced their winners, but announcement of the list as a whole will be withheld by THE TIMES until complete. The winners in all districts will be known with certainty after next week's district contests in New York State and New Jersey, the last of which are scheduled for Friday evening, April 23.

Finals at White Plains.

The finals of the White Plains District in Westchester County were held at the White Plains High School yesterday afternoon. The winner was Ivan Flood of that school, speaking on "The Constitution." Joseph Moore of St. Joseph's Normal Institute of Pocantico Hills became young Flood's alternate by winning second. W. Lynn Houseman, Principal at White Plains and the Chairman for the district, presided. The judges were the Rev Thomas F. Watkins, pastor of the White Plains Presbyterian Church; William W. Fairclough, Principal of Pelham (N. Y.) Memorial High School and Samuel J. Preston, District Superintendent of Schools. The other contestants, who all took "Washington and the Constitution" as their subject, were Catherine Mergardt of Brewster

Orchard Used in Revolution To Make Way for Home Sites

An orchard of eighty old apple trees said to have been used by General Washington's men as cover from which to bombard the troops of General Howe during the battle of White Plains in 1776, is threatened with destruction to make room for a residential park in the Battle Hill section of Westchester County, a mile west of Scarsdale, it was said yesterday.

Robert Andre, General Manager of the Mooreland Development Corporation of 19 West Forty-fourth Street, which owns the property, said that in view of local protests against destroying the historical trees he was willing to remove them and pay the cost of transportation to another site where they might be transplanted. He said the offer was open to any historical society that might desire to take advantage of it, but that the trees were obstructing work and would have to come out very soon.

COLLEGES RESPOND TO EVENTS CONTEST

Eleven Prepare for Tests to Pick Finalists for Prizes Offered by The Times.

KEEN INTEREST IS SHOWN

Pennsylvania Sets Examination Date and Reports 75 Entrants—Columbia Endorses Contest.

From the eleven institutions concerned in the Intercollegiate Current Events Prize Contest sponsored by THE NEW YORK TIMES, comes the news that preparations for the local examinations are now actively under way. The interest in the contest among the students, and the importance attached to it in undergraduate circles, is indicated by the space devoted to it in the news and editorial columns of the college publications.

The Daily Pennsylvanian, for instance, the organ of the student body at the University of Pennsylvania, has printed three news articles and an editorial within the two weeks since the contest was announced, and reported officially that seventy-five names of entrants had already been turned in to the local committee, in charge of Professor Reese James.

From Cambridge, where at least an equal number of articles has appeared in The Crimson, comes unofficially the announcement that all the members of the staff of that Harvard daily are expected to be among the competitors. The importance of the event in the minds of the college authorities is indicated by the fact that Professor Arthur N. Holcombe, Harvard's faculty member of the Intercollegiate Committee, has associated with the academic judges in the local contest Robert L. O'Brien, editor of the Boston Herald. The undergraduate interest at Harvard is said to be especially keen.

Naval Academy Order.

Naval Academy Order No. 7-26, issued by Rear Admiral L. M. Nulton, the Superintendent, states in regular naval form the conditions of the contest as they apply to the midshipmen and fixes the date of the examination which will choose Annapolis's local prize winner and the navy's contestant for the intercollegiate prize of $500. This examination is to take place on the first day of May. The Naval Academy magazine, The Log, has also dealt with the subject at length from the point of view of the student body.

The midshipmen are stirred up by the reminder that the army's institution up the Hudson requires the reading of the news, and tests the cadets' knowledge by daily quizzes, and their attention is called to the fact that though the Naval Academy has, so far, no such requirement, the library is amply provided with current news publications. The local committee in charge at Annapolis includes, in addition to Dr. Carroll S. Alden, head of the Department of English, Captain Gilbert J. Rowcliff, U. S. N.; Commander Allan J. Chantry Jr., U. S. N.; Professor Allan F. Westcott and Associate Professor Howard McCormick.

Columbia Interested.

At Columbia The Spectator has treated the contest as first-page news, and there also the interest is lively. In addition to Dean H. E. Hawkes, who represents President Butler directly, and is also Chairman of the Intercollegiate Executive Committee, the Columbia committee locally in charge includes Professor Arthur W. MacMahon and Dr. Horace Taylor, with Professor Edward M. Earle and Professor Raymond C. Moley representing Barnard College and the interests of the distaff side of the house on Morningside Heights.

An editorial in The Spectator approves the value of the contest in encouraging a keener and more understanding interest among college undergraduates in the important things that are going on in the world from day to day. It refers to the recent report of President Angell of Yale noting the lack of undergraduate interest in things political as contrasted with the enthusiasm for drama and literature. The value of the intercollegiate examinations on current events toward testing rival examination systems is also editorially discussed in the Columbia daily.

Not all the eleven institutions which are charter members of the contest—Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Columbia, Pennsylvania, Chicago, Cornell, Michigan, Virginia, West Point and Annapolis—have as yet announced the date of the local examination which is to choose the winner of the local medal and prize of $250, and at the same time the institution's conestant for the grand prize. Pennsylvania has set her examination for May 5. The date of the intercollegiate examination was fixed by the Intercollegiate Executive Committee for Saturday, May 15.

CARDINAL ISSUES CHARITY PASTORAL

Hayes's Annual Message, to Open Catholic Drive, Will Be Read in Churches Today.

GIVES HIS VIEWS ON CRIME

'Not a Disease or a Mere Mental Condition,' He Asserts—Actual Campaign Begins Tomorrow.

Cardinal Hayes's annual pastoral on charity, in which he says that "crime is not a disease or a mere mental condition," is to be read today in the 329 parishes of the archdiocese. At 4 P. M. the Cardinal will pontificate at vespers and formally open the campaign for Catholic charities. It is expected that 7,000 persons will hear his address in St. Patrick's Cathedral.

Actual solicitation in the campaign will begin tomorrow morning. About 15,000 volunteer workers will engage in a house-to-house canvass. Last year more than $1,000,000 was raised and expended in welfare work among Catholics.

The Cardinal's Pastoral.

The Cardinal's pastoral in full follows:

Cardinal's Residence,
452 Madison Avenue,
New York.

Dearly Beloved of the Clergy and the Laity:

Once more it becomes my privilege to present to the faithful of the Archdiocese the achievements and the appeal of our Catholic charities. At various seasons of the year the Church emphasizes different aspects of the Christian life. She sets apart special times for penance and mortification, for devotion to the chief mysteries in our Lord's life. We have in a particular way dedicated this period immediately following Easter to the kindling of the love of neighbor in the hearts of the faithful. We would have all realize that charity is obligatory on every one who would call himself a follower of Christ. It is not a mere by-product; it stands at the very heart and centre of the Christian life.

Our blessed Saviour promised that He would be with His Church "all days even to the consummation of the world" (Matt. xxviii. 20). Where He is, love must reign and works of mercy flourish. The Church must give expression in a practical way to His sympathy for the poor, the sick and the wayward. She must reach out His hands to them. That is the work of Catholic Charities. During the past year in its person Christ has been walking in our midst. The crowded streets of the city and the lonely lanes of the country have felt His footfalls. The tired brow of the aged has been smoothed; the tears of the motherless have been dried; the pains of the sick have been soothed and the spark of hope has been kindled anew in the downcast souls of sinful men.

Church Catches Up Lesson.

The great Apostle St. Paul counseled his Disciples to preserve their faith by "doing the truth in charity" (Eph. iv. 15). The Church has caught up this lesson in every age. Pressing to her gentle bosom the babe abandoned by pagan cruelty, she taught an unbelieving world that every human soul has an infinite value. When hatred between nations endangered the lives of travelers she established religious confraternities which, through love of their fellow-man, housed, fed and cared for the pilgrims of every race. When slavery degraded human nature there sprang forth under her inspiration groups of men willing to sell themselves into captivity in order to rescue the despised slave. When usury wrought untold ruin and misery she founded loan associations operating in accordance with the principles of justice. Thus throughout her history has the Church carried her doctrines into practice through charity she has taught the world by deed as well as by word.

Here in the Archdiocese of New York our Catholic Charities have enabled the Church to do "the truth in charity" (Eph. iv. 15). Holding fast to her high ideals of the permanency of the marriage bond, and the sacredness of child life, she has endeavored to prevent the breakdown of family life through poverty or sickness; to keep wrangling, jealousy and selfishness from sundering the ties of love; to see that little children were not separated from their dear ones until every effort to keep them at home had failed. Through such services rendered by self-sacrificing religious laymen and laywomen the Church has carried into countless families the tender compassion of Christ. She has not approached their difficulties as disease spots in the body politic, but rather as the trials and sorrows of human beings possessed of priceless souls, of hearts and feelings, of memories and hopes. For the poor are, in truth, our brothers related to us through God.

Work in Criminal Field.

During the last year our Catholic Charities have carried on a unique work to vindicate the truth of Catholic principles in the field of criminology by demonstrating the true value of the probation system in the Court of General Sessions. Directed according to sound principles, this experiment has served to refute false theories and doctrines and to establish the truth concerning the basis of human conduct and the standards of human justice. Man is not an automaton; crime is not a disease or a mere abnormal mental condition. The individual is composed of a body and a soul, is gifted with an intellect and a free will. If he has chosen to do wrong, we, his brothers, should study to discover the influences which led him to so choose, and then, with all energy and ingenuity, we should apply the remedies which will help him to rise again. In some cases a prison sentence is the only proper treatment. In others stern punishment and continued disgrace will lead to nothing but despair, a broken family and hopeless degradation. For such as these life at home under strict yet helpful supervision will make for the forming of character, the avoidance of temptation, the building of a worthy citizen and the saving of an immortal soul. Dr. O'Shea in Arbor Day Appeal Asks School Children to Keep Our Parks Clean

Dr. William J. O'Shea, Superintendent of Schools, has written the following Arbor Day letter to the million public school children of the city, which will be read in all city schools on Arbor Day, April 23.

During Patriots' Week this term we honored in song and story the memory of those great men who in so many varied ways have helped to make our country the strong, happy nation it is today. As, again I sent you an Arbor Day greeting, I am thinking of a man whose name belongs on that roll of honor, of the man to whose wisdom, love and foresight we owe this beautiful day of observance—this Tree Day—that "turns its face toward the future rather than toward the past."

This man, J. Sterling Morton, Governor of Nebraska, inaugurated in 872 the first Arbor Day and, in so doing started the great movement which was not only to convert the arid, treeless plains of his own State into a gracious, tree-covered, smiling region, but to cause millions of trees to be planted in other States and countries. He builded better than he knew, for from that simple beginning has come the great national effort to conservation of all our natural resources so that in the distant future those who come after us may have a share in their rightful heritage. Truly he was a patriot, for

"He who plants a tree
He plants peace."

Perhaps we who live in the city have few opportunities of sharing in this beautiful work of tree-planting, but we can take part in the equally important work of tree and plant protection. To realize how necessary this is we have but to watch the many automobiles returning to the city from the country laden with wilted sprays of lovely dogwood and apple-blossoms, or to see in the dusty roadways withered violets and daisies, ruthlessly gathered and as carelessly thrown away. Because of our thoughtlessness or selfishness, their beauty and usefulness have been sacrificed.

We should also take care of our parks. We should keep them beautiful and clean. On Sundays and holidays people tramp on the lawns and litter the grass with papers. Parks are the lungs, the breathing spaces of our city. It should be our pride to maintain them as centres of health and natural beauty, so that they may be enjoyed by all our citizens at all times.

Do you remember in Frank Stockton's "Fanciful Tales" the story of Old Pipes and The Dryad? How, in the Springtime Old Pipes listened to the voice within the oak tree, found the magic key, and released the tree-fairy from her Winter's confinement and how, because of his kindly action, the grateful dryad made Old Pipes happier and younger, and the world about him lovelier? So I think nature stands ever ready to reward those who love and serve her. To those who are willing to protect the blossoming tree, the glowing bush, the shy wild-flowers of deep woods and silent places, the world will be fairer, life will be more gracious.

Shall we, boys and girls of the city's schools, enlist in this great work of protection and conservation? Shall we, in this way, show our appreciation of a world that God has so beautifully dressed?

Your sincere friend,
WILLIAM J. O'SHEA,
Superintendent of Schools.

YALE SEEKS RELIEF FROM STUDENT RUSH

Professor Corwin Tells of Plans to Apply Psychological Tests to All the Applicants.

CALLS FOR COLLEGE LEAGUE

Would Have American Institutions Unite to Enforce Higher Collegiate Standards.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn. April 17.—The American college demands relief from the horde of ill-equipped students which has been rushed into it since the World War," said Professor Robert N. Corwin, Chairman of the Board of Admissions to Yale University, today in discussing the congested conditions found almost everywhere, and the lack of cohesion in plans for meeting them. Professor Corwin outlined Yale's determination to apply psychological tests rigidly the coming year and called for a league of American men and American universities to enforce higher collegiate ideals and standards.

"The American college," said Professor Corwin, "has suffered under two-fold pressure from the public at large; an attempt to bring college requirements—which, when translated means college standards—down within the reach of all, and the insistence that the college curriculum be spread out until it meets the immediate practical needs of all.

"The colleges have been rushed by a horde of ill-equipped students, with a consequent revision downward of college courses. If the rush to college should lead to the establishment of a college beside every fresh water stream and to still further inflation of the educational currency in circulation the needs of higher education would not be served. If, on the other hand, the necessity for limiting numbers becomes general in the better institutions it will clarify the function of school and college, will, to some extent, counteract the deadly standardizing and normalizing influence now pervading each, and may thus prepare the way for a healthy revival of undergraduate learning.

Will Try New Tests.

"This year we shall venture, tentatively at least, into the realm of psychological tests. These tests have become the more necessary because of the extreme simplification of our terms of admission. It was different in the good old days. Then a man had to do some real intelligence work to get into college. Josiah Royce, Harvard's illustrious philosopher, is said to have stated that profound study failed to reveal the psychology underlying college admission requirements. President Dwight anticipated psychological tests by a full generation with his offer to admit any applicant who could prove that he fully understood the terms of admission to Yale.

"We shall ask each of our applicants to take a so-called scholastic aptitude

FONCK COMING SOON FOR OCEANIC FLIGHT

French Ace Will Leave Paris Next Week to Work Here on Engines of Plane.

TWO OF THEM NOW ON WAY

American Flier May Navigate in French Pilot's Hop Home for $25,000 Orteig Prize.

Captain Rene Fonck, the world's greatest ace during the war, who will attempt a New York to Paris nonstop flight this Summer for the $25,000 Raymond Orteig prize, will leave Par for New York this week to superintend the finishing touches on the tri-engined Sikorsky plane which he will use in the attempt.

Word was received yesterday by Colonel Harold E. Hartney Vice President of the General Airways Company, that the second and third Gnome Rhone Jupiter engines, with which the plane will be equipped, are on their way here on board the steamer France. The first motor is now at the Sikorsky plant at Roosevelt Field Westbury, L. I., and will be installed in the airplane within a few days.

Captain Fonck will make the transatlantic attempt some time in June or July and will be accompanied by one other aviator who will also act as navigator and wireless operator. Lieutenant George Pond, United States Naval Reserve, has been mentioned as the second pilot, and was recommended by Rear Admiral William A. Moffett, Chief of the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics, and Major Gen. Mason Patrick, Chief of the Army Air Service, as the best man available.

The engines with which the plane will be equipped are considered the latest development in European engine building. They are air cooled and nine cylinders each, with a special carburetor for every three cylinders, so that each of the engines can function with only six, or, at a pinch only three of the cylinders in action. The radio set which will be installed in the plane will have a sending radius of 1?) miles, and a receiving radius considerably greater.

The plane will weigh when fully loaded about 24,000 pounds, made up of 7,500 pounds dead weight of the ship itself, 2,430 gallons of gasoline, weighing 14,000 pounds, 1,500 pounds of oil, radio equipment, two pilots, cameras and other supplies.

The amount of gasoline which can be stored in the reserve tanks of the plane will provide sufficient fuel for a cruising radius of 4,330 miles, approximately 700 miles more than the distance between New York and Paris. With an average speed of between 110 and 120 miles an hour, Captain Fonck estimates that he will be able to make the flight in from thirty-six to forty hours.

He plans to hop off from Roosevelt Field about 5 in the afternoon so that he can arrive in Paris in the forenoon of the second day.

WAR DEBTS PUT SECOND IN EUROPE

Before Washington Is Paid Our Bankers Will Collect on Private Loans.

DEPENDENCE ON EXCHANGE

Industrialists Enter Market to Keep Credit Here, While Nations Cannot Risk Currency Drop.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Copyright 1926, by The New York Times Company.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 17.—It has been pointed out that loans to German industries and industrials have a better chance of being repaid than German reparations to the Allies for the reason that German industry will buy foreign exchange even if forced to pay a premium, whereas the reparations payments must pass through an agent, who, under the Dawes plan, will transfer marks abroad only in the measure that he can do so without forcing down the German monetary unit's international value.

For a somewhat analagous reason the private loans of American bankers to European industries will, in the long run, come before allied debt payments to the American Government. In other words, Wall Street has a better chance of collecting than Washington.

This means that if in the coming years the Continent's ability to make payments to the United States turns out to be insufficient to meet both the debt service on private loans and the debt service on governmental obligations, the American private loans will get first attention.

Taking into consideration the rapidity with which private loans are mounting into billions and the doubt about Europe's being able to transfer more than a certain amount across the Atlantic, the importance of this correlation of European private and European public commitments to the United States becomes apparent.

Exchange a Pivotal Factor.

One may at once ask the basis of the conclusion that American debtors in European countries have a better chance of getting paid than American taxpayers to benefit from European payments on war debts. The basis of this conclusion is that private industry will be always on the alert to obtain necessary foreign exchange to meet its obligations, because it must do so.

It must do so to preserve its credit in America and to continue to do business with America, and it will be always cheaper for it to pay a premium on exchange than to default in its payments.

On the other hand, Governments, in handling their payments to America will not have the same liberty, for they will be sure to arouse public resentment if applying their purchases of exchange to pay the United States sends down local currency and thus forces up the cost of living, which is something no parliamentary government can face with safety.

But that is not the whole story. In practice how will it work out? Surely it will be found that industries will be constantly purchasing exchange and will be using their connections with exporters to obtain foreign trade credits to meet their obligations.

Since it is apparent that, after all, any country's ability to make foreign payments over a long period will depend on its trade balance, it is quite apparent that out of this trade balance industry will be served before the Government. It will come about, in the opinion of those who are in a position to make the best forecast, that the Government will find available only the foreign exchange which remains after the needs of industry have been served.

Influence of "Fresh Money."

If any country has sufficient ability to make foreign payment to cover both public and private commitments the problem will be, of course, solved. But if, as is most likely, there is a grave difficulty in meeting both categories, it will be found that the Governments will be at a disadvantage and, therefore, the creditor Government will discover that the creditors of private industries have the preference.

There is naturally another side to the question and that is that private loans of American capital to European countries go into productive enterprises and thus increase the eventual ability of the country where they are placed to reach an economic position where it can pay more abroad. It is something like lending fresh money to a bankrupt concern so as to get it on its feet again and, of course, the fresh money has preferential treatment over old obligations.

In the opinion of economists who are studying the situation on this side of the Atlantic, there is little ground for the fear expressed in America that there may come a conflict between the interests of American investors and the American Government as the creditor of European nations. They figure that the problem will solve itself through the natural course of events by Government claims coming after private claims.

FORD BUYS FIRE APPARATUS

Will Add Plymouth (Mass.) Relics to His Collection.

PLYMOUTH, Mass., April 17 (AP).—Henry Ford has added to his collection of New England relics the apparatus of an old-time Fire Department.

The Plymouth Fire Commission has sold to the Detroit manufacturer the ancient paraphernalia once used to fight fires in this historic town. Three old-fashioned hand tubs, a ladder truck and a hand-drawn hose reel make up the tally. They will be taken to Boston to be refinished.

Fire Chief Albert Hillar and Fire Commissioner Henry Walton made the sale for $310.

French Cabinet Demands Day Off Like Other Workers

PARIS, April 17 (AP).—A "day off" has been demanded by the members of the French Cabinet, who would like to enjoy the same privilege as the law grants to most other workers in France.

It is true that the Chamber and the Senate meet extremely rarely on Sundays, but a custom has grown up which robs the Ministers of their rest on that day. M. Poincaré, when Premier, did much to propagate this custom. He used to make speeches almost every Sunday, inaugurating memorials to the war dead. Other Ministers took to Sunday speaking, and later Cabinets seemed to use their members as propaganda agents throughout the country.

Now that the Chamber so often meets mornings and afternoons, and from time to time sits all night, the Sunday speech has become such a burden to Ministers and its effect as propaganda has so much worn away that the custom is to be dropped.

Henceforth Ministers will only deliver Sunday discourses on exceptional occasions and with the authorization of the Cabinet.

TRAFFIC AID BILLS AWAIT SMITH'S PEN

Four Measures That Hold All of Borough President Miller's Plan Passed Legislature.

ONE FOR EXPRESS HIGHWAY

Others to Open 12th Av., Raze the Elevated in E. 34th St. and Remove Tracks in E. 59th St.

Four bills providing for traffic relief and street improvement projects in the City of New York, which had been initiated and urged by Julius Miller, President of the Borough of Manhattan, as a part of his comprehensive plan for traffic relief, have been passed by the State Legislature and are now before Governor Smith for his approval.

The most important of these four bills, Borough President Miller said last night, is that which provides that the Board of Estimate may authorize the Borough President to construct an elevated express highway along the marginal street on the western side of the borough from West Seventy-second Street to Canal Street.

"The proposed highway," said the Borough President, "would be about sixty feet wide and about four miles long. It would serve Manhattan vehicular traffic between the upper and lower sections of the borough, and furnish a direct route for vehicular traffic between the northerly traffic arteries of the city and such important southerly traffic arteries as the Manhattan Bridge over the East River, and the Holland Tunnel under the North or Hudson River.

"The advantages of such an elevated express highway in congested Manhattan are obvious, especially because of the higher rate of speed of travel that will be possible, since there will be no pedestrian traffic or cross current vehicular traffic.

"Another one of the bills provides for the opening of Twelfth Avenue between West Forty-second Street and West Forty-third Street. Its approval will enable the Borough President to open the avenue for public use from Twenty-third Street to Fifty-ninth Street. This would not be feasible without the enactment of the bill, since it is necessary to condemn a small portion of the street railway car barn at Forty-second Street and Twelfth Avenue.

"The third bill provides for the removal of the crosstown elevated railroad spur on East Thirty-fourth Street between Third Avenue and the East River. When this structure has been removed the Borough President will be in a position to improve and widen the roadway of East Thirty-fourth Street, with the resultant improvement anticipated for the neighborhood, as occurred on Forty-second Street and upper Sixth Avenue, where similar structures have been removed.

"The fourth bill provides for the removal of the surface car tracks on East Fifty-ninth Street between First and Second Avenues, and will permit the carrying out of the plan to improve the approach to the Queensboro Bridge by the depression of the central portion of Second Avenue between about Fifty-seventh Street and Sixty-first Street.

"The four bills, which were sponsored at Albany by the Corporation Counsel with the authority of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, is the full program of legislation that was requested by Borough President Miller in connection with his plan of traffic relief.

"The elevated express highway, which, it is believed, is an important advance step in modern vehicular traffic relief, has been approved by the Port of New York Authority, and strongly endorsed by the Fifth Avenue Association, the Merchants's Association of New York, the Broadway Association, the Forty-second Street Property and Merchants Association, the Allied Business Men's Protective Association and many others."

EPIDEMIC KILLS 40 DOGS.

Canandaigua Plans a Campaign Against Meningitis.

CANANDAIGUA, N. Y., April 17 (AP).—With more than forty dogs already dead from an epidemic of meningitis, health officials of this city today were planning a campaign of inoculation to prevent further spread of the disease.

A new serum serotoxin, will be tested out on the dogs, if plans of local veterinarians are followed out.

The disease is not considered contagious, but it is infectious. Pronounced paralysis, followed by distemper, are the symptoms. The value of the dogs lost is reported at $2,500.

EUROPE APPRECIATES AMERICAN CAUTION

Thinks Nothing Will Be Lost to the League by First Removing All Suspicions.

FIRST MOVE AT BRUSSELS

Unofficial Meeting of Eight Nations There Supports the Full Locarno Program.

RUSSIA IS NOT A FACTOR

Soviet Attempt to Keep Germany Out of League Well Known to Paris and London.

By ERNEST MARSHALL.

Copyright 1926, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 17.—This week's reports from various quarters in the United States combined to create an impression that American opinion was losing what faith it had in both the desire and the ability of the European nations to set their houses in order and, incidentally, that the League of Nations, as providing an effective remedial machinery, might as well be consigned to the scrap heap of dissipated delusions.

If that be a true reflection of current American views, which may be doubted, such views will demand revision in due course.

The isolationists, it is stated, have been encouraged by the defeat of Senator McKinley in Illinois, and President Coolidge himself has seen "so great a light" that Senator Borah concludes that in the immediate future the difference between the Coolidge caution in regard to the World Court and isolationism will be so slight as to become imperceptible.

Desirable and important as is American cooperation in the Court of International Justice, it is held here that under existing circumstances nothing much will be lost by delaying American adhesion until all scruples and suspicions have been removed and have given place to a clear conception of the powers and prerogatives of that body, which, constituted under the aegis of the League of Nations, is not subservient to the League, but is an independent tribunal, qualified to render judicial decisions upon questions of international law.

Senator Borah announces that the campaign against the World Court will go forward. The eventual issue will be of much greater scope.

League Difficulties Sharply Outlined.

Meanwhile, this week witnessed various happenings in Europe which throw into sharp outline both the difficulties and the promises of the League. To begin with, there was held at Brussels a conference of delegates from countries which have formed associations to promote the aims of the League. These associations, while they possess appropriate names and rejoice, more or less, in the sympathy of the respective Governments of the countries in which they have their local habitation and name, are extra governmental. They cannot dictate governmental policy, but the influence they mean to be in a position to exercise upon national policies may be gauged by the criticisms recently heard in Great Britain of Sir Austen Chamberlain's attitude at the Geneva conference in March.

In addition to Great Britain, France, Sweden, Holland, Belgium, Poland, Japan and Germany were represented at the Brussels meeting of the International Union of Associations for the League of Nations. From brief reports so far to hand, it does not appear that the American Non-Partisan League was represented, while Germany, which is still outside the League, was.

The resolutions to which the meeting committed itself reflected what was the common opinion of all observers at the recent Geneva conference who looked below the surface of political wire-pulling and national rivalries for the real objects which the League sought to attain. They were in brief:

That Germany be admitted into the League with a permanent seat on the Council at the September meeting.

That any further enlargement of the Council be provisionally adjourned.

That a principle of rotation to operate among the non-permanent members be adopted.

These resolutions represent the desiderata which the League, in the main, has in view and which it is hoped may be attained in September next, although some doubts are being expressed as to there being adequate time in the next five months to compose the differences which displayed themselves in March.

Brussels Meeting a Stepping-stone.

The importance of this Brussels meeting lies in the fact that the opinions there given voice represent the stepping-stones upon which the League can extricate itself from the morass and once again tread solid ground. Despite the doubts of the faint-hearted, there is no real reason why September should not see the triumph of the new order over the old ideas which won a pyrrhic victory in March.

One commentator who expresses doubts of such an achievement being made possible in the limited time available admits that:

"In the Geneva break-down of March the only truly encouraging feature is the execration with which it was universally greeted by the peoples who are devoted to peace. This execration justifies the hope that the crisis in the League may prove to be a crisis of adolescence, but any repetition of month's spectacle would be fatal to belief that it is a crisis of growth."

This observer, Wickham Steed, very pertinently adds:

"Responsible statesmen must take care lest inadvertently faith in the power of the League to promote peace, for it might go hard with them and with the social and political systems which they represent should the European masses, who are determined to have no more war, be moved to look for other and more radical means of preventing it."

Mr. Steed is not the only observer who, after being inclined to scoff at the League, remained to pray.

German Opinion Solid for Peace.

Germany this week gave its formal acceptance to the invitation to attend the forthcoming discussions in regard to the future composition of the Council, in a consultative capacity. The controversy which raged in Germany before this decision was reached by the Government and the Reich cleared the air, and its final result was a satisfactory indication that public opinion in the Fatherland is solid in support of the spirit of Locarno. More than that, Foreign Minister Stresemann's reply to the League is an effective antidote to the refusal of the Soviet Minister, M. Tchitcherin, to participate in the preparatory disarmament conference, to which Russia was invited by the Council of the League.

The Russian Foreign Secretary's mud-slinging at the League is of less consequence than Germany's implied recognition that it will receive fair play from the League. For its own purposes, the Soviet Government exaggerates the failure of the March meeting of the League.

A week or so ago M. Tchitcherin was telling an American that the break-down at Geneva had increased American influence in Europe and cleared the path for a growing American penetration which was identical with American political influence. He foresaw "further subordination of Western Europe to domination by American capital."

His lessons in political economy doubtless had as little effect on American ears as his diatribes against the League this week addressed to Germany had on Teutonic ears. Soviet efforts in the diplomatic field to draw Germany away from the League have been of no avail.

Russian Negotiations Are Not Secret.

The negotiations which have been going on ever since Rapallo between Russia and Germany with a view to political and economic agreements and which have been described as "a reinsurance treaty," caused no perturbation in the best informed European quarters, although their reported culmination this week furnished some sections of the press with scare headlines.

Germany kept the British Foreign Office and, presumably, also the Quai d'Orsay, fully and frankly informed of the character of the negotiations, which were categorically described as being in no wise either contrary to the spirit of the Locarno compacts or injurious to the League of Nations.

On the balance, the events of the week show no reason for despondency in regard to the League, at least in regard to those problems with which it is more immediately confronted, among which the preliminary discussions looking toward a general disarmament conference cannot be reasonably included. Disarmament on the scope contemplated by the League must be approached by easy stages the first of which is the enforcement of the Locarno compacts by the admission of Germany to the League.

DECLARES WORKERS STARVE IN AMERICA

Rose Pastor Stokes, in Moscow Article, Holds That Most of Our Suicides Are Jobless.

SAYS RICH LIVE LIKE CZARS

Reports From Soviet Capital Tell of Insanitary Conditions and Rise in Mishaps in Industry.

A gloomy picture of working class life in the United States was painted by Rose Pastor Stokes, former wife of J. G. Phelps Stokes, for the readers of the special Women's Day edition of the Moscow Pravda, official organ of the Communist Party of Russia, printed on March 7.

Beginning her contribution to the symposium by noted women Communists from many countries with the assertion that the working women and children in the United States are exploited much more than the workingmen, and that the non-working class Government does nothing to protect them, Mrs. Stokes continues as follows:

"Suppose the American workers do get higher wages than the workers of the majority of other capitalist countries. Nevertheless, the capitalist papers are filled with reports about murders and suicides everywhere.

"Most of the suicides are jobless or starving workers who have lost all hope of bettering their condition. Among them are many mothers who at the same time kill their little children, believing this is better than to leave them behind to live under present conditions.

"In a country like America, where a small group of capitalists rules over all land and industry, the workers are never sure of the future. This does not mean that there is a lack of food in the country. On the contrary, there is more than enough. But the rich and more comfortable have it. They live like czars and princes, and their wives and daughters wallow in luxury."

After declaring that many American millionaires take delight in constructing gorgeous residences and also in paying enormous rents for sumptuous apartments on Fifth Avenue in New York and elsewhere, while hosts of workers are forced to exist in dark and insanitary tenements, Mrs. Stokes concludes by cheering up her readers with the news that, although the Communist movement in the United States is not very strong at present, it is growing, and that American women are joining its ranks in quite respectable numbers.

She assures the Russians that these women are eagerly waiting for the news some fine day of the world-wide triumph of the proletariat.

Industrial Accidents Increase.

Further confirmation of occasional reports from Russia indicating that the Soviets have still considerable work to do before their ideal of economic comfort for all the people of the union is attained, is found in items from recent Moscow papers quoted in the German Socialist press and the Berlin organ of the exiled Russian Social Democrats.

Trud, the official central publication of the Russian trade unions, is the source of many such reports. According to data cited by this paper, factory inspection is very lax and accidents are on the increase, even in such an industrial district as that of Leningrad, where the factory commissions are accused of doing nothing to see that the recommendations of the inspectors are carried out.

In 1925 there were 21,889 accidents in the Leningrad industries against 7,608 the year before, although the number of workers employed there had increased only 50 per cent. A big rubber factory in Leningrad employing about 10,000 workers, is cited by Trud as a horrible example of unguarded machinery and poor ventilation, the number of accidents there in the first half of 1925 having been 576, compared with 568 for the whole preceding year.

In the mining district of the Don the situation is said to be very bad, a special investigating committee having reported so many violations of the laws protecting labor and such insanitary conditions that the Central Committee of the Miners' Union has declared the mines menaces to the workers' lives and demanded the immediate installation of better ventilating systems, medical service, water supply and other improvements.

Conditions in Stalina, a mining centre where 18,000 men are employed in the mines, a huge steel plant and a chemical factory, are reported as especially bad, there being a lack of practically every sanitary necessity, while at the same time the cost of living is as high as in Moscow.

Moscow to Hound Up Beggars

Despite the reported construction of tenements housing 15,000 persons during 1925, the shortage of dwellings in Moscow is still great, and the local Soviet is said to have voted to spend 50,000,000 rubles (about $25,500,000) for building in the current year.

According to a report of a meeting of the Council of People's Commissars in Pravda, Commissar Beloborodof, in charge of domestic affairs, told of the desperate housing situation in the capital and other cities, and it was decided to allow material increases in the rents which the better paid tenants were charged so that there would be interest and amortization for the capital invested in houses.

Beggars and prostitutes are reported so numerous in Moscow that, according to Trud, the Department of Social Welfare of the local Soviet recently decided to take drastic steps to rid the city of them.

The professionals were to be driven out, the really unfortunate were to be helped and sent home when possible and the semi-professionals were to be rounded up and looked after in public institutions.

Too Many Bosses, Says Old Worker.

To the reasons for the lack of manufactured goods in Russia given by Premier Rykof in a recent speech in Leningrad, namely, the run down condition of the factories and the wasting of the workers' time and State funds on banquets and unnecessary advertisements, there may be added the plague of too many bosses, according to complaints summarized by an old worker in the Commercial and Industrial Gazette of March 11, as follows:

"Having worked for nearly three decades in different factories, I know the way work is being done now and how it was done formerly, and I say that it can't go on in this way. In 1900 the Neva Shipyard, with its thirty departments, had three directors and a foreman for each department. It was the same in the Don district and in the Petrovsky shops.

"Now in the Stalin shops there is a director for every department, assistant engineers, foremen and a group of gang bosses. In the construction department in 1905 there were fifteen administrative officials for 2,000 workers; now there are ninety-five.

"Every department has twelve subdepartments. Every sub-department keeps its own special records that contain thousands of entries, and in this ocean of paper we are drowning. Bureaucracy and sabotage by scraps of paper stifle all live work.

"The host of controllers and the great mass of 'accounts' weigh heavily upon productive work. Now the work is being done after a fashion in a great hurry, which ruins everything and causes waste of expensive material and of labor itself. Operating costs are increased by payments to trade union and party functionaries, who draw their salaries from the plant.

"The higher administrative apparatus is too big. There is a director, two assistant directors, a chief engineer, an assistant engineer, an administrative director, a secretary and others. With us secretaries are as numerous as the sands of the seashore.

"If Jus, of unhappy memory, the founder of the plant, were to return he would go crazy at the sight of this host of directors."

The most important week to date in the National Oratorical Contest opens tomorrow. The coming seven days will complete the winners in all the sixty-five districts into which THE NEW YORK TIMES has divided the region, and interest will particularly centre upon the two big interborough finals in New York City.

The Manhattan-Bronx Interborough final will be held at Julia Richman High School next Friday evening. It will bring together six candidates from Manhattan, who qualified at borough finals last Friday afternoon, and two candidates from the Bronx, who were similarly determined that evening. The judges who have consented to act at the coming contest are:

Joseph V. McKee, President of the Board of Aldermen; Joab H. Banton, District Attorney; Judge Martin T. Manton of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals; Justice John V. McAvoy, Appellate Division, Supreme Court, and Justice Louis D. Gibbs of the Supreme Court.

Two winners at the Manhattan-Bronx event will qualify for the regional championship at Town Hall on May 14.

Final in Brooklyn School.

The Brooklyn-Queens-Richmond interborough final will be held at Girls Commercial High School, Brooklyn, at the same hour, the boroughs being represented by six, two and one candidates, respectively. These candidates qualified at borough finals last Friday night.

The judges who will give of their time for the advancement of the civic purpose of the National Oratorical Contest will be Charles W. Berry, City Controller; Justice J. C. Cropsey, Supreme Court; Justice L. B. Faber, Supreme Court; Judge Learned Hand, United States Circuit Court of Appeals, and Charles B. Dullea, President, Staten Island Bar Association.

The three winners at the Brooklyn-Queens-Richmond event will qualify among the eight speakers at the regional championship at Town Hall on May 14.

The Manhattan meeting is being arranged jointly by Dr. Michael H. Lucey, Principal of Julia Richman High School, Manhattan Borough Chairman, and Elmer E. Bogart, Principal of Morris High School, Bronx Borough Chairman. The Brooklyn meeting is being arranged jointly by Eugene A. Colligan, Principal of Boys' High School and Brooklyn Borough Chairman; Charles A. Vosburgh, Principal of Jamaica High School and Queens Borough Chairman, and John M. Avent, Principal of Curtis High School, Richmond Borough Chairman.

Another local contest will be the interborough finals of parochial and private high schools of Manhattan and the Bronx. Dr. Henry C. Pearson, Principal of Horace Mann School for Girls, and Brother Michael, Principal of Holy Name School, the co-Chairmen of the interborough group, announced last night that the contest would be held at High School of Commerce, Manhattan, on Friday evening, with the following judges: Dr. Francis H. J. Paul, Principal DeWitt Clinton High School; Edward J. McNamara, Principal High School of Commerce; Edward C. Zabriskie, Principal Washington Irving High School; Dr. Elias Lieberman, Principal Thomas Jefferson High School, Brooklyn, and Dr. George Jay Smith, member Board of Examiners, Board of Education.

Yonkers District Finals.

The finals of the Yonkers district, in Westchester County, will be held at Hawthorne Junior High School, Yonkers, on Thursday evening, Miss M. Emma Williams, Principal of Yonkers High School and Chairman of the district, announced. Miss Williams said the judges would be Hampton D. Ewing, attorney of New York City; F. S. Hackett, Principal of Riverdale Country School; Professor F. M. McMurry of Teachers College, Professor David Muzzey of Columbia University, and Dr. Charles C. Tillinghast, Principal of Horace Mann School for Boys, New York City. The contestants will be:

Elsa Frandsen, Croton-on-Hudson High School.
Irving Epstein, Charles E. Gorton High School, Yonkers.
William Fenton, Saunders Trade School, Yonkers.
Helen Gordon Ramsey, Hastings-on-Hudson High School.
Alan Perrine, Roosevelt High School, Yonkers.
Esther Paulsen, Dobbs Ferry High School.
Elizabeth Brown, Yonkers High School.
Lillian Walker, Ardsley-on-Hudson High School.

The finals of the Morris County, New Jersey, district will be held at Dover High School on Wednesday evening, Ralph F. Perry, Principal of Morristown High School and District Chairman, announced. Mr. Perry said the following had agreed to act as judges: Samuel Libby, member of the East Orange Board of Education; Charles R. Hardin, Secretary of the Lawyers Club of Essex County; Grace M. Warner, Chairman, Public Speaking, East Orange High School; Judge Walter D. Van Riper of Newark, and Frank G. Pickell, City Superintendent of Schools at Montclair.

The remaining contests on the week's calendar show that decisive activity will take place in every sector in THE NEW YORK TIMES' territory.

ANGORA DEMANDS 'TURKEY FOR TURKS'

Foreign Banks and Business Houses Are Ordered to Hire 50 Per Cent. Moslem Staffs.

HEAVY TAXES ALSO IMPOSED

Levy of 30 Per Cent. on Hotels Will Raise the Cost of Living Above the New York Level.

By T. WALTER WILLIAMS.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 21.—There is a strong national drive on here at the present time to boom Turkey for the Turks. Foreign firms are being pushed out of business and the banks and big corporations have either to employ 50 per cent. Moslem Turks or have their businesses shut down by the Government.

Nearly all of the employes in the offices and banks in the city are Turkish subjects, but they are mostly Levantines and are supposed to be Christians. Many of these people do not know their nationality, except that they were born in Turkey or Asia Minor, under the flag of the Star and the Crescent. Hence the stipulation that the foreign banks and corporations must employ Moslem Turks.

The majority of these young men who are sent by the Government to fill posts in the foreign organizations are absolutely ignorant of any kind of business. The Ionian Bank, which is a British concern, was ordered to engage forty of these young men last week and to discharge forty of their experienced clerks to make room for them.

Complaint Made to Foreign Office.

The manager said that he had already engaged ten Moslem Turks and was trying to make them useful in some way, but he declined to take another forty, and said that the Government ought to educate them in some business methods before sending them out. The manager went to Angora to see the Foreign Minister, and the British Ambassador said he would take the matter up with the Foreign Office in London.

Another matter of concern to the British Ambassador is the closing of the English Girls' High School last week because the Principal, Miss Thomas, declined to receive a Turkish Inspector who was subject to epileptic fits.

At first it was thought that the man had been drinking to excess, and he was sent away from the school on two occasions and came back a third time with the explanation that he was an epileptic and not a drunkard. The school, which takes girls of all nationalities, had 230 pupils and had been established for thirty years.

All foreign firms doing business in Turkey have to pay a tax of 2½ per cent. on their turnover, besides a war tax, an education tax, an income tax and various other revenue charges, and new ones are sprung on them every day. They must also keep their books in Turkish. The coins are marked only with Turkish figures to show their denomination.

Hotel Bills in Turkish Numerals.

The hotels and restaurants have to make out all of their bills to guests in Turkish, and it is necessary to carry the numerals in ones pocket for reference. A tax of 30 per cent. will be imposed next month at all first-class hotels and restaurants, which will make living dearer than it is in New York for travelers. A single room at the Pera Palace costs $6 a day without bath. The new tax will bring it up to $7.80, and a room with bath will cost $11.70 for one person.

There is a little building going on at Angora and the Turks are very proud of the fact that they have drained the marsh which ran half around the town and separated it from the railroad station. It was the breeding place for malaria.

There is a through sleeping car and a dining car from Constantinople to Angora operated by the International Sleeping Car Company of Paris.

The British Embassy has a small cottage at Angora and its diplomatic representatives go there at least once a week. All diplomatic matters go through the Foreign Office in Angora and it takes usually about three weeks to get a reply.

A Port Authority has been formed to take over all the piers and dock facilities of Constantinople in the harbor, tugboats and steamers, including the Gul Djemal, which was known in New York more than forty years ago as the White Star liner Germanic.

The old Levantine crews of the tugs and other harbor craft have all been discharged and replaced by inexperienced Turks.

There is no doubt that the economic conditions here are not good at the present time, and the only hope is that the Turks will see the folly of driving the business men and merchants out of the country and get some of them to return and carry on while the young Moslem Turks are learning how to do things.

Moslem Divorces Still Held Good.

Although the Young Turks profess that they do not care about going to the mosques for prayer as their ancestors have done for so many centuries, they are observing the fast of Ramadan, which began on March 13 and lasts for twenty-eight days. They also keep Friday, the Mohammedan Sunday, and all stores and offices are shut up tight. It is impossible to buy any sweetmeats, fruit or cigarettes anywhere on that day. Under the old régime of the Sultan Abdul Hamid one could buy goods on Friday as well as any other day in the week.

Constantinople looks drab without the familiar fezes on the heads of the men and the yashmak on the faces of their women folk. At Brousse and other places in the interior of Asia Minor and Turkey the women still go about veiled. That is where their advancement begins and ends in Constantinople.

The divorce law by which a Moslem can get rid of his wife by saying to her three times: "You are divorced," still holds good. French lawyers, still in business in Constantinople, tell me that they have received letters from Americans living in Paris asking how long one must live here to get out papers as a Turkish citizen and what it entails to change to the Mohammedan religion.

There is a good deal of political unrest in the Government at Angora because of the friendly attitude of the Italian Government toward Greece. Mussolini seems to have affected Mustapha Kemal, who does not like to see any other dictators in power except himself.

Boom of Smyrna as Port Expected.

Some of the foreigners who have lived here for more than thirty years believe that the aim of the Government at Angora is to kill the trade of Constantinople and boom Asia Minor, with Smyrna as the port. So far very little has been done toward rebuilding the town along the shores of its fine natural harbor, except to sweep up the débris of the fire and erect a few small houses and stores. The Turkish Government has no money and no one will lend it any.

Admiral Bristol, the American High Commissioner, says that the problem will work itself out in time, and there will be a new Turkey in Europe which will surprise every one. He is in favor of the United States signing the Lausanne Treaty, and a petition signed by more than 200 American residents of Constantinople has been sent to Washington urging the Government to take action in the matter.

As all people are supposed to be equal under the republican Government at Angora, the hamels, men who carry pianos and safes on their backs for a few cents a mile, now walk on the side path instead of out in the road, as they used to do under the rule of the Sultans. Their lot has not changed much financially. It is a bit awkward when the hamels come along with heavy loads, especially fir trees, as people have all to get out in the road to make way for them.

Constantinople Loses Local Color.

The postal service from Constantinople is quite good, except for the habit the lower-grade Government employes have of tearing the stamps from the envelopes and throwing the contents into the Bosporus. The only sure way to get letters out safely is to carry them to the postoffice and see the clerk dab the canceling stamp on them or send them by registered mail.

The Government is poor and its employes are paid very badly, which is the reason why the ancient Oriental custom of giving backshish still prevails in Turkey.

Among the people banished from Constantinople by the edict of Mustapha Kemal are the excellent Greek guides who used to be employed by the steamship companies to conduct the American tourists around to see the sights when they arrived. They have been replaced by young Turks, who have not only a poor knowledge of English but do not know where to go or what to do. This also applies to the taxicab drivers, who have street gamins sit beside them and direct them where to go.

There is less activity in the streets of Constantinople now and fewer people than there were a year ago. Most of the men appear to be wearing out their old clothes and look very uninteresting without their fezzes. It can be said truly that Constantinople today is not Oriental, European or anything definite in character.

There is an embargo against all Russian goods and vice versa, which prevents the gourmets getting their fresh caviar at the restaurants. The bars and restaurants are not allowed to sell Scotch or Irish whisky, but good French brandy can be obtained. Nationalism is the watchword in Turkey today.

Government Sues Forbes for $10,000

CHICAGO, April 17 (AP).—Colonel Charles R. Forbes and his bondsmen were sued in Federal Circuit Court today for a $10,000 fine which the Government alleges that Forbes, serving a two-year term at Leavenworth Penitentiary, has refused to pay. The suit was brought by Assistant United States District Attorney John Elliott Byrne, who names the Hartford Accident and Indemnity Company as a co-defendant with the former head of the Veterans' Bureau, who was convicted of conspiracy to defraud the Government. The suit is a civil action, and one not often resorted to by the Government.

ASKS CONSERVATION OF FARM FERTILITY

National Industrial Board Says Soil Is Devitalized and Crop Total Falls.

SEES LACK OF FERTILIZING

Declares Europe Raises More Crops Per Acre on Land Cultivated for Centuries Than We Do.

The National Industrial Conference Board in a report on the agricultural problem yesterday called for a national policy of conserving the fertility of the soil.

"The decreased vitality of our soil," said a summary of the report issued by the board, "is clearly reflected in the declining yield per acre of the principal crops during the last quarter of the century. To such an extent has fertilizing been neglected during recent years that farming in many cases today really is not cultivation of the soil but extraction of its minerals, and thus resembles not agriculture but mining."

Many European countries cultivating soil that has been worked for centuries, it went on, are producing more per acre than the American farm.

"While it is estimated," it continued, "that our crop lands require 9,000,000 tons of nitrogen per year, only 5,450,000 tons are used, 3,500,000 tons of which are supplied by the farms themselves, resulting in an annual nitrogen deficiency of 40 per cent. The leading crops annually absorb about 17,000,000,000 pounds of ammonia, phosphoric acid and potash, valued at about a billion and a quarter dollars or about one-ninth of the value of the crops. To restore this loss, there was used in 1925 only about 2,400,000,000 pounds of plant food from commercial fertilizer, valued at about $225,000,000, while the farms themselves probably furnished altogether no more than about 8,700,000,000 pounds of plant food.

"There is left a deficiency of plant food of about 5,800,000,000 pounds, valued at least at $400,000,000, chargeable as a capital loss to agriculture, not taking into account other forms of depreciation. Fertilization is usually the first thing to be neglected in unfavorable periods. Expenditures by farmers for commercial fertilizer declined in the one year 1920-21 from $377,000,000 to $205,000,000, which decline in part, however, reflects lower prices.

"Similarly inadequate expenditures by the farmer for the maintenance of his buildings and equipment are reflected in the fact that while there were farm buildings valued at a total of $11,488,000,000 in 1920, expenditures for buildings during that year were only $333,000,000, or less than 2 per cent. of the value of the existing buildings, which is totally out of proportion to the known rate of their depreciation. Against a total equipment of machinery and implements valued at $3,594,000,000 in 1920, farmers spent in that year only $721,000,000, or 20 per cent., for both repairs and new implements. At that rate it would take fifty years for total depreciation of all farm buildings, only five years for all farm equipment, and soil fertility restoration would practically cease within three years.

"The neglect of soil fertility now apparently taking place in this country," the board concludes, "means a prospect of increasing costs for the agricultural industry in the future. Although the farm labor force (in the United States) is the most efficient in the world, the same cannot be said of our agricultural 'plant', and this is due partly to the smaller application of fertilizer, and partly to the inability in some sections to make headway against pests, disease and weeds."

SCOFFS AT "DAMNED SOUL."

Alumni Review of Rochester Scores Atheistic Society.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., April 17 (AP).—The activities of members of the "Damned Souls," an atheistic society at the University of Rochester, represent "only the frothy, surface effervescence of a very few immature minds, who think they are thinking," alumni are assured in the current issue of the university's Alumni Review.

Explaining that the society and its members are "nothing much to worry about," the official graduate publication declares editorially it cannot "condemn any one for trying to think."

"We hasten to assure our alumni that the self-styled though not necessarily 'damned souls' are really nothing much for the university, its friends and champions of the faith to worry about," says The Review. "So far as we can learn they represent only the frothy, surface effervescence of a very few immature minds, who think they are thinking, and far be it from us to condemn any one for trying to think."

Reply is due on Monday from Clinton N. Howard, lecturer, to the $10,000 slander suit filed against him by Carl Russo, Vice President of the society.

Unfrocked Pastor Ill in Hospital.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., April 17 (AP).—Guy Willis Himes, former New Bedford pastor, unfrocked at the recent conference of the eMthodist Episcopal Church, will not be physically able to plead to indictments returned against him by the Suffolk County (Mass.) Grand Jury for a month, Dr. Fenwick G. Taggart of East Greenwich, who is treating the expelled minister at a private hospital in this city, said today. Dr. Taggart said Mr. Holmes's condition was serious.

test, and shall make such use as may be of the results, promising for the present, and until experience gives greater wisdom, not to use the evidence thus gained against a boy whose credentials are otherwise satisfactory.

"There is, of course, urgent need for a less subjective and more stable measure of fitness for college. Perhaps we are in the way of finding one. We want, in any case, to do our part in this nation-wide study of measurements which is now in progress. We hope that these new tests may help us in our selection as well as in advising the boy as to his later college needs.

"They may in time tell us not only what a boy can do but what he will do. Perhaps we may then test for freshmen who will not break dishes in Commons or build bonfires in the Berkeley Oval, and for seniors who will prefer compulsory Sunday chapel to a week-end in the alluring city of New York.

Says American Students Are Behind.

"It seems to be generally acknowledged that the American student is one or two years behind his Western European contemporary in solid scholastic attainment.

"If such is our sad case it is due to three causes—the scattering of the pupil's effort over a curriculum which has little correlation or continuity and [illegible] in particular; the elimination of partial, outside tests from [illegible] and practice of our secondary schools, leaving the courses [illegible], and the general misconception of scholastic obligation.

"[illegible] system is built on [illegible] the State owes every boy an education, to be paid in currency of his own choosing. Admission to college is thus regarded as a right and not a privilege. This throws the burden of responsibility on the school and teacher rather than on the pupil, where it belongs. Limitation of numbers will tend to bring about a healthy adjustment in each of these matters and may lead to a recovery of some of the ground lost through futile educational experimentation and dissipation.

"The American public is easy game for the promoter who has something new to offer in any field of enterprise—in the healing arts, political tactics, educational methods, or even in the cure of souls. The art of selling has developed to such a degree of perfection that the ultimate consumer may just as well put up his hands when-ever an auto salesman or a Florida realtor or a professional educator holds him up.

Misplaced Salesmen.

"In the educational field there are many promoters who ought to be selling cars, or lots or bonds. We have become accustomed in politics to submit docilely to the leadership of those whose education is extremely dim and we seem in a fair way to accept similar leadership.

"We are inclined to look for educational guidance to the maker of a favorite automobile, or to one whose name is associated with numerous useful electrical appliances, or to almost any one whose manual, financial or political dexterity has given his doings news value.

"It is our American fashion to look for remedy to a new Federal bureau or to another Federal amendment, but we need neither more laws nor more bureaus nor more amendments in the solution of our educational problems. What is needed, rather, is a league of such men and of such universities as are here represented for the enforcement of collegiate ideals and scholarship standards against the encroachment of the mass production complex and assembly plant methods."

success of our Catholic Probation Bureau in reconstructing the lives of those assigned to its care is amply attested in the recognition and commendation accorded by both public and private authorities, competent to judge of the results.

In still another field progress has been made toward the working out of Catholic principles in action. In the education of our young people the principles of moral conduct must be taught along with the truths of physical science. Their spirit of faith and loyalty to God will be their mainstay in the stress and turmoil of life. The opening of our splendid new high school for girls next September means that many more of our young women will study the problems of the world in their true relation to God and the eternal interests of man. In other parts of the diocese arrangements have been made to carry on high school work in schools already constructed. In addition to this the children in our public high schools have been organized into Junior Newman Clubs, in order that they may receive instruction in the history and doctrines of the Church and encouragement in the devout practice of their religious duties.

Praises Faithful Support.

Another year is before us with its problems and opportunities. While the parish must ever remain the most important unit of the Church for the saving of souls, conditions of modern life create many problems which can be solved only along diocesan lines. Without the aid of such an organization as the Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of New York, I, as Archbishop, could not hope to meet my responsibilities toward the distressed, afflicted and needy of the fold. I am confident, then, that my faithful people will realize the necessity of perfecting this great work and will respond generously to this appeal made by their Shepherd; an appeal which is not mine, but Christ's very own.

"God is Charity; charity is kind" (1 Jn. iv, 16-1 Cor. xiii, 4) has become, thank God, a household word at nearly every Catholic fireside in the diocese. The spirit of charity has been magnanimous, the offerings most generous, and the sustained devotion most consoling to Christ and encouraging to your Shepherd, who day after day hears told and retold heart-touching incidents of our Charities' ministry of an all-embracing helpfulness. Some, however, remain indifferent to, or show but a passing interest in, our splendid diocesan organization of charities. May I plead most earnestly with such to be sympathetic with and responsive to Christ Himself, appealing for their cooperation in one of the noblest works man is privileged to perform?

Finally, I wish to remind you that 5,000 masses are said each year by poor missionaries for the spiritual and temporal interests of all who contribute to our Catholic charities. In addition to this, your Archbishop offers the daily sacrifice of the mass twice each week for the same intention.

May our risen Lord send down His peace and blessing into your homes, and may He fill your hearts with the unselfish love for others which characterized each moment of His own life.

Faithfully and gratefully, your devoted Shepherd in Christ.

Archbishop of New York.

ROME, April 16.—On reaching Rome this morning after a night's ride with my guide from Naples and after surrendering our tickets at the station gate, a guard remarked smilingly: "This is the end of your journey; this is Rome." And to Rome, or at any rate to Italy, all roads seem to lead just now, as they did in the ancient days.

A European King came to Rome on the train on which I traveled comfortably from Naples. I saw another European King at Pompeii, who must pass through Rome to reach his northern kingdom again. I also traveled some distance toward Rome with two personages who attracted much more attention than royalty when they arrived in Italy. They were Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford.

The Northern King might wander in Italy or Pompeii without attracting much more attention than the nobility got, according to Bolivar, on the night of the great disaster. The other European King might pass unnoticed among the guests in a Neapolitan hotel. But not so these artists from Los Angeles, whose films the Epicurean Latin poet Lucretius would have been delighted to see as confirming his theory of the transmission as films or images of objects and ideas.

There is, however, one figure to whom the roads of all thought seem to lead. He is at the present moment on the way home from Africa, so I have not been able to see him, but one is aware that his personality pervades and dominates the Italy I so far have seen from the siren rocks off Capri to Corso and from Umbertide to Rome, from fishermen and peasants to scholars and financiers.

I saw Italy before the war, I saw Italy during the war and I saw Italy shortly after the armistice. This first glimpse seven years later reveals a changed surface aspect. Dante could no longer inveigh against this land of his as "a hostel of woe" or as "a vessel without a pilot in a mighty storm."

If there is woe it is invisible, and not even suggested in the faces of the people one sees in the streets, in the shops or at work along the road. I have seen hardly a beggar, save a blind. Industry has seemingly become a passion.

There is no feverish haste, no sign of interference here. There is obvious thrift and absence of prodigality. Incidentally, in all the miles I have walked I have not seen enough litter to fill a bucket. All in all Italy seems—at first sight, at any rate—to be a transformed land, lifted into industry and orderliness by some common hope or purpose.

If that is the explanation, even though that hope or purpose has been stirred by a single individual, Italy has entered upon a new life that will survive the voice that animated it.

Some of us may prefer other ways of obtaining such objectives; others may believe they cannot be permanently achieved except through what are usually, if not necessarily, slower processes of democracy. But no outside observer can doubt that those to whom proclamations are addressed in posters along the ancient ways of Rome today, in grateful recognition of Mussolini's escape from death or serious injury, are for the time being in better state.

Their confident hope is that they will find this improved condition is but a preface to a permanently better state, to be attained through the self-discipline which they are practicing under leadership of their own creation—under the guidance of one who holds the reins of Justinian's refitted bridle.

DIVORCE LAW IS CHANGED.

MERIDA, April 17.—The Yucatan Congress has passed a new divorce law providing for six months' residence and service on the defendant. No grounds are required and the application may be made by both parties or by one of them.

Divorce proceedings, under the new law, are in the hands of the civil courts, when only one party petitions, whereas when application is made by both parties the civil registry retains jurisdiction.

GERMANS WILL SHUN PHILADELPHIA FAIR

Manufacturers Complain of Alleged Misrepresentations by Agents of Exhibition.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.
By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, April 17.—A decision of German industrialists not to take part in the Philadelphia fair is based on statements that they have been deceived by representatives appointed by Ascher Baker during his visit to interest Germany in the project. One of these representatives, it is said, collected money from toy manufacturers as payment on their part of the exhibit and disappeared. These firms have appealed to the American Embassy to recover their money.

One of the present representatives, Kurt Zimmermann, is criticized by the Achtuhr Abend Zeitung, which states that Zimmermann's firm, "the Reich's headquarters for culture and commercial propaganda," has no connection with the Government toward foreign exhibitors, saying that exhibits would be allowed to enter free of duty. On account of these incidents the German industrialists have decided to refuse all invitations to place exhibits in the Philadelphia fair.

EXPECT MANY ROYALTIES.

British Look for Largest Number Since the War.

LONDON, April 17 (AP).—The visits of foreign royalty, which will be common in London this Summer, have given those inclined to match-making at least three royal subjects for speculation, in which the Prince of Wales and his brother, Prince George, play prominet parts.

The largest number of foreign royalties are scheduled to visit England this coming season since the World War.

Princess Astrid of Sweden, whose name has been coupled with that of the Prince of Wales by the King's subjects, will be the first to arrive. Another Princess to visit the court will be the Infanta Beatrice of Spain, the seventeen-year-old daughter of the King of Spain, whom some think a good match for Prince George, youngest of the English Princes.

The King and Queen of Spain probably will come to England at the same time, but not on a state visit. The Queen of Spain is a daughter of the English Princess Beatrice, who lives in Queen Victoria's old residence, Kensington Palace, and they will visit there.

The visit of the young Spanish Princess is causing much stir and great speculation, but all that is definitely known is that her parents are not anxious to have her marry so young. Her father will insist on her marrying a Catholic, or at least in the Church, which, of course, may eliminate the British royal sons.

Queen Marie of Rumania, also, is coming to London this Spring accompanied by her very pretty and equally eligible daughter, the Princess Ileana, whose name has been coupled with that of the Prince of Wales more than once.

Europe's youngest Queen, who only a few years ago was attending school near London, will play a prominent part in social affairs here during the coming season.

She is the Queen of Yugoslavia, who has written to the Duke and Duchess of York that she will accompany the Yugoslavian King on his visit to England within the next few weeks. Through her mother, the Queen of Rumania, the young Queen Marie has intimate family associations with the British royal house, she being one of the numerous great-grandchildren of Queen Victoria.

Little Prince Peter is coming with them. The Duke and Duchess of York went to Belgrade a year or so ago to act as sponsors to the child.

During her visit here and in Paris as well, it has been reported that the Queen may see her brother, Crown Prince Carol, who renounced his rights to the Rumanian throne some months ago. As to this nothing has been stated officially, as the Queen's journey is more of a private nature than a public one.

The Queen is 26 years old, and, like her sister, Princess Ileana, was educated in England.

MORE PAY FOR HINDENBURG.

Cabinet Would Give President $42,857 a Year, an Increase of $18,857.

BERLIN, April 17 (AP).—The Coalition Government has decided that President von Hindenburg merits a salary increase. Under the executive budget, which has passed the Finance Committee, but is still to be submitted to the Reichstag, he will get a salary of $42,857 a year, an increase of $18,857 over his previous salary.

Although the German Executive's salary, if increased, would be about $33,000 a year less than that of President Coolidge, he would still come out ahead because of the heavy expense allotment for travel, entertainment and charity given him. The American President gets an allotment of $25,000 for this purpose, while the German President gets $95,000 annually for it.

The total executive budget appropriation as requested, is $1,000,000, an increase of $500,000 over that of 1925.

PRAGUE, April 17.—The highest court of appeal today confirmed the seizure of the three leading springs at Marienbad by the Land Office.

In an interview last night at Prague, Dr. Helmer Abbott Temple, owner of the springs, said:

"Marienbad is of international interest, as the springs are known beyond the borders of the Czechoslovakian Republic. The assumption of the springs by the Land Office clearly involves private property rights. When this happens the owners will make another appeal to the Czechoslovak Court of Appeals, and if further adverse decision is rendered, will take the case to the International Court at The Hague."

Dr. Gye succeeded in producing two fluids which, injected into an animal together, produced cancer.

MISSIONARIES' ROLE CHANGING IN CHINA

Native Control of Churches Is Coming and They Do Not Object.

REGARD IT AS GOOD MOVE

They Feel That Thereby the Christian Faith Will Take Much Stronger Root.

"ANTI-RELIGION" IS TYPICAL

Considered as Only a Sign of the Times, Seen In Many Other Lands.

By THOMAS F. MILLARD.

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SHANGHAI, March 9.—No other aspect of the intellectual ferment and social turbulence in China, which now is broadly termed the New Nationalism, is more significant than those phases embraced in the anti-Christian movement.

This movement began to take shape about four years ago, but not until within the last year did it become active enough and assume forms to give serious uneasiness to foreign and native church bodies here. For some time the mission organizations have been harassed severely, now and then threatened alarmingly, and at first they were in a quandary as to the movement and then how to deal with it. A dozen or so conventions and conferences on this matter have been held in recent months, and while the missionaries by no means feel at ease, or that the trouble is over, or even that it has reached its climax, after analysis and reflection they have arrived at a comfortable conclusion which may as well be stated at once.

It is, to quote the words of a leading American missionary, that the anti-Christian movement is "a good thing for Christianity in China."

Which seems paradoxical in view of the fact that missionaries in China feel with practical unanimity, and admit frankly, that an outcome of this agitation inevitably will be a considerable change of the status of missions and a curtailment of their privileges.

But when followed on a little the statement of that missionary has reason, for, as he put it to me:

"It has shaken us up and forced us to see that we cannot stand still while China is seething with new ideas and new forces. We must get into step with those ideas, or the part of them which are good and proper, or see our influence wane. The old positions cannot stand forever. I believe one result will be to establish the Christian Church in China firmly on its own legs, no longer dependent on foreign moral infuence for its religious inspiration and life."

Movement Takes Two Forms.

This anti-Christian movement has two forms. One is outright anti-religion. Another is the school question. They are related and interwoven, but are distinct.

Opinions among foreign laymen in China differ as to which of those issues is more important. But missionaries place the purely religious issue first; so the questions may be considered in that order.

Freedom of religious worship and practice and teaching in China was granted by the monarchy many years ago and was reaffirmed after the republic was declared. Its legal basis, therefore, is established, and at the moment there is no sign in Chinese official quarters of a disposition to change or qualify it. On the contrary, the Government (and a number of provincial Tupans, too) recently issued admonitions against the anti-Christian agitations. With a few exceptions Chinese political and military leaders profess complete tolerance of Christianity. Some prominent men in national politics are professed Christians.

Nevertheless there are elements in this anti-Christian wave which perturb some people. Christianity (the Greek Church) a few years ago seemed to be a fixed institution in Russia. Now it is circumscribed, and at times it is persecuted. Nor is Russia alone in providing evidence of a purpose among some classes of men to cast out religion from its long-established place of honor, to deny its value and validity, and to deprive it of all respect and authority.

Plainly that part of the anti-Christian movement in China which in the end is apt to be more disturbing is derived from the anti-religion teachings of Western dictionaries. It is imported. Its wellsprings are in the same countries which sent Christian missions to China and which still principally support them here.

Chinese intelligentsia who are leaders and directors of the anti-Christian movement (they term it anti-religion) admit that. They say this idea is not peculiar to China, but is world wide, and is now only moving here in sympathy with a great human liberating effort. If the propaganda here is linked at times with questions which appeal to Chinese patriotism and chime in with current issues of the new nationalism it is in order to get attention. That is, political expediency.

Also Involves Anti-Imperialism.

A survey conducted recently by a Chinese Christian for the National Christian Council of China gave three main ideas as actuating the anti-Christian movement—anti-imperialism, science as opposed to religion and the preservation and rebirth of Chinese civilization. Of ten citations given by that investigator in a classification of the propaganda I will quote the first two:

"Religion stands for the old conservatism and opposes us in our effort to develop the new culture and to make progress. Religion stands for division, while we are working for the harmony of mankind. Religion stands for superstition, while we desire the development of science. Religion stands for the attitude of dependence expressed in prayer, while we are working for self-reliance. Religion belittles life, while we are seeking to develop individuality.

"Christianity is the forerunner of imperialism. China has suffered the loss of territory and has had to pay large indemnities to other nations on account of the missionary enterprise. Those countries use Christianity as their tool in seeking to destroy the independent spirit of the Chinese race."

Of those two paragraphs the first might have been written by anti-religion propagandists in any country; indeed, it is probable that the doctrine was copied from European Socialist publications. The phraseology is that of the Chinese Christian who made the digest. It is familiar stuff.

The second paragraph gives the particular application to China of political concepts which communistic elements energetically are implanting among Chinese. But I believe it would be a great error to assume that this aspect of anti-Christianity here is due entirely to Bolshevist propaganda. Chinese anti-religion protagonists are similar to the groups of "advanced" thinkers to be found in our colleges at home and in the faculties of our universities.

It appears that the real fount of these ideas in China is a group of comparatively young Chinese college professors, some of them educated in America and Europe, who in late years by energy and sheer audacity have taken a prominent part in revolutionizing (and incidentally throwing into turmoil and utter confusion) the educational system of this country. You may call these men "parlor Bolsheviki" or anything you like. But here they are, and they are becoming a force to be reckoned with.

(At this point one thinks of the "student movement" and its astonishing manifestations, but students usually are only the sounding board of propaganda.)

Government Seeks School Control.

It is customary with foreigners out here to lump the mission schools question with the anti-religion and anti-Christian (few persons distinguish between those two phrases) movements. But a different principle applies to the school issue. My observation is that a majority of Chinese as yet are but slightly or not at all imbued with anti-religion and anti-Christian ideas. However, Chinese intelligentsia almost unanimously are with the Government in its stand on the school question.

For some years there has been a tendency of the Peking Government to bring the foreign mission schools and hospitals within the definite authority and supervision of the Ministry of Education, and various regulations have been proposed, of which these are some of the latest:

"1. All schools and colleges established and supported by foreigners shall be conducted in accordance with the standards of similar institutions under the Government Board of Education.

"2. Such colleges and schools shall state in the name used in each case that they are of a private character.

"3. The Presidents of all such colleges should be Chinese. In a case where a foreigner occupies that post there should be a Chinese Vice President who can act as representative of the institution before the Board of Education.

"4. Where such schools and colleges are under the direction of a Board of Trustees the majority of its members should be Chinese.

"5. These institutions shall not exist for the purpose of teaching religion.

"6. The curricula of studies in such schools shall be in accordance with what is decided by the Board of Education, and religion shall not be included among the compulsory subjects."

"Ha!" you may exclaim. "Nothing new in all that. It is only the old row which we have had in Europe and America cropping up in China."

So it is. It is offensive to the new Chinese nationalism to have a large number of foreign educational institutions almost wholly outside of the supervision of the Government of China. (In this instance it always must be remembered that the "foreign" schools meant are not schools for the children of foreigners in China, but are schools attended by Chinese students exclusively.) Hereafter the mission schools are to be required to register with the Ministry of Education, are to be inspected by it, and must have their curricula approved by it. This is the essence of the school question.

Foreign stand-patters here make considerable outcry about these regulations, which they regard as another outrageous encroachment on foreign position and rights.

Missionaries Do Not Object.

Oddly enough (but quite logically), the missionaries, who of all foreigners in China are most affected by the proposed regulations, find little to oppose in them.

From talking with leading missionaries and reading proceedings of their conferences and conventions and also private memoranda on this subject, I gather that their attitude is this:

Missionaries realize that Christianity and its secular educational work in China cannot always stand as a thing foreign to this nation, and that its permanent position should be and must be indigenous. It must be like ideas and practices brought to America from Europe; they may be adopted either completely or in part, but to endure they have to acquire an American character. If Christianity is to take a permanent hold in China it must be rooted in the faith and beliefs of Chinese. If foreign education is to have lasting influence and effect in China it must become a part of the educational system of the nation. It cannot live as a foreign thing grafted on these people by foreigners and held here by foreign pressure.

Nor do missionaries here make much objection even to the proposed regulations restricting religious teaching in their schools. A prominent missionary remarked to me:

"We have no purpose to continue to use our school classrooms as a pulpit. Some of the mission colleges already have abandoned compulsory chapel attendance. All we ask of the Ministry of Education is an assurance that Clauses 5 and 6 of the new regulations will not be construed to prevent our schools from giving religious instruction to students who want to receive it, or to compel us to delete or eliminate the story of Christianity that is a part of history. We realize that it is natural for Chinese to want to exercise the same control and supervision over schools in this country, even of private schools, that is done elsewhere. I do not expect any serious difficulty in arranging this school matter."

Students Make Lots of Noise.

But the students. Ah! The students! The students are the sounding board for every kind of anti-foreign propaganda, and they act on the idea that a sounding board ought to sound. Students in China surely do make a tremendous noise. They demonstrate against everything and on all occasions. They pass resolutions and broadcast innumerable telegrams. Of late they have taken to interrupting sermons in mission churches. They denounce the Government and the Ministry of Education for truckling to the foreign powers and for not at once closing the foreign schools (or taking them over) and sending the missionaries out of the country.

Viewed one way, the student agitation can be taken merely as fireworks. But I would compare it to the sputtering of a volcano before an eruption. It is nationally symptomatic.

This foreign school question in China does not seem to present any especially alarming features except to those who "view with alarm" everything which threatens to alter the existing foreign status. It only recreates against an Oriental background images with which we have long been familiar in America. Almost every angle of the question reproduces in principle our experiences at home with the same set of issues.

But the school question is embraced with the anti-religion movement, and the anti-religion trend is something to reflect about. By that association the corpus of missionary activities is being swept into the current of radical social and political forces which, for a time anyhow, may sway China.

WILL HONOR BURBANK.

Freethinkers to Hold Memorial Service This Afternoon.

The Freethinkers' Society of New York will hold a service today at 3 P. M. at 226 West Fifty-eighth Street in memory of Luther Burbank, who was an Honorary Vice President of the organization. Addresses will be made by Mme. Olga Petrova, Park Commissioner Francis D. Gallatin, Edwin Markham and Joseph Lewis. Ingersoll's tribute to his brother will be read at the meeting, and, it was announced, members of the Ingersoll family will be present.

Swami Yogananda, who, it was said, was a friend of Mr. Burbank, will hold a Vedic funeral service in memory of the dead horticulturist at the Hotel Pennsylvania tomorrow at 8 P. M.

PREPARE FOR HEAVY TRAVEL TO EUROPE

Steamship Lines Report Solid Bookings Extending Over Next Three Months.

500,000 EXPECTED TO SAIL

Cunard Predicts Record This Summer—Other Companies Announce the Season's Rush.

Approximately 500,000 persons will sail for the Old World from America within the next three months, according to Cunard Line representatives, who base their estimates on bookings on their line.

"This year will be a banner year in shipping," says an announcement by the company. "The demand for accommodation is heavy in all classes. But small space is left, and every day cuts deeply into this."

Heavy bookings on the company's new fleet in the Channel service are reported, as well as for tourist third cabin travel, three-fourths of which was sold out early in the year. The company announced that all the best rooms are engaged on its three largest ships—the Berengaria, Aquitania and Mauretania. H. P. Borer, General Passenger Manager, said:

"Americans are fast becoming a nation of travelers. London, Paris and Rome beckon and they pack up their grips for the journey. Once people talked for months before deciding to make a voyage across the Atlantic. Now we do a lot of our booking during the week before the ship sails.

"A pleasing feature of the tide of travel this year is the desire of a large number of tourists to visit Ireland, easily the scenic gem of all Europe.

"The next three months will find us doing the biggest business of our long career. At least one sailing a day will be our average. Not many decades ago it was one a week and then not every week in the year. Last year we carried nearly a quarter of a million passengers. We hope to pass this mark this year."

The White Star Line also reports that some of its larger ships have been booked to capacity weeks in advance. Inquiries disclosed that the same condition was true of the large ships of the United States Lines, which were reported booked completely on both eastbound and westbound passages.

The French Line and other steamship companies have experienced a heavy demand for accommodations, and some vessels have been booked up completely long in advance of sailing dates.

Steamship officials said that no matter how solidly ships are booked there are always reservations that become available as the press of business, illness and other emergencies force passengers to cancel their passage.

DEBATE PROHIBITION IN CURRENT HISTORY

Wayne B. Wheeler and J. P. Hill Contribute Articles on the Leading Public Issue.

NATURALIZATION A TOPIC

Clubwoman Charges Politicians Make Citizens Fraudulently to Recruit Their Voters.

That prohibition has become the outstanding issue in our national politics, that the question whether it is a success or failure is today the most vital of all public controversies, is strikingly brought out by the group of five articles with which Current History magazine leads off its May issue. Wayne B. Wheeler, as spokesman for the drys, and Congressman John Philip Hill of Maryland, one of the recognized leaders of the wets, each contributes an article from his respective viewpoint. They follow these opening broadsides with a return fire on each other's original article. Then, from the point of view of the historian, Professor William MacDonald of Yale shows how prohibition is becoming the chief political issue of the day.

Sensational because of the state of affairs it discloses is the article on naturalization, contributed by Imogen B. Oakley, a leader in the General Federation of Women's Clubs. Aliens, it appears, are given the status of American citizens despite the fact that they are entirely unworthy of such citizenship; and this because it is to the interest of politicians who seek to recruit armies of ignorant voters. There is, also, Mrs. Oakley says, a class of persons who have made a business out of naturalizing ignorant aliens by fraudulent means, which she describes, and who make systematic use of bribery and false testimony to "keep the naturalization mill speeded up."

Rose Macaulay, the brilliant and witty English novelist, whose "Potterism," "Dangerous Days," "Told by an Idiot" and other books have been as popular in America as in her own country, contributes to May Current History a fascinating study of how London has changed since 1914—not only in the externals of the place itself and the appearance of the people, but in ways of life, amusements, manners and morals. It is just the sort of delightful essay one would expect from an imaginative writer who has at the same time such a clear and penetrating grasp of social history.

United States Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas, one of the recognized spokesmen for the agricultural West, writes an article on the "Economic Causes of the Farmers' Revolt," in which he urges the adoption of various measures of relief and reform to put the business of farming on its feet. Senator Capper's contribution is accompanied by another by Professor R. L. Jones of Pittsburgh University, in which the political aspects of the farmers' agitation are discussed in a new light.

Two articles, pointing the moral from different standpoints, on the League of Nations meeting at Geneva are contributed to May Current History by the Hon. James W. Gerard and Professor William Starr Myers of Princeton.

A significant and authoritative expression of the cordial sentiments animating Canada in her attitude toward the United States comes from the pen of that distinguished Canadian, Sir Robert Falconer, President of the University of Toronto, who shows how this particular relationship has gone on steadily improving, and must continue to do so.

If proper measures are not taken to stop the wanton destruction of our forests, America is in dire peril of becoming a treeless country. Such is the prediction advanced by Stanley S. Sheip, a well-known lumber expert, in an article in which he shows how the danger may be averted.

Judge Pierre Crabites, one of the American representatives on the bench of the Egyptian International Courts, contributes to May Current History an illuminating article on the Suez Canal and its importance as an international waterway, and strongly maintains the thesis that it must be internationalized so as to protect America's interests in time of war.

The bombardment of Damascus by the French military forces in Syria last year, and the larger question of how the French are treating the people of that country, continues to be the subject of bitter controversy. In the May issue of Current History there is a remarkable account by a resident of how the French shelled Damascus and dealt with the inhabitants. This indictment is so sensational that a copy of it was submitted to the French authorities to provide an opportunity for French refutation. This was obtained from one of the best sources of information; it accordingly accompanies the resident's eyewitness description of what happened, constituting a complete chapter of history of unusual interest and value.

American women will be interested in an article in which Constance Drexel shows how and why feminism is a much more vigorous and successful movement in Europe than it is in this country.

The rebirth of Armenia since it has become a Soviet Republic federated to the Russian Soviet Union is graphically described by John R. Voris, a Near East Relief worker, who has in the course of his duties in Armenia seen for himself how the new régime has worked. It is a graphic story of the wonderful recovery of a stricken nation.

Few of us are aware of how the various kinds of paper money we handle from day to day are manufactured and regulated by the United States Treasury. An interestingly informative article on this topic is contributed by William Atherton Du Puy, currency expert of the United States Bureau of Efficiency.

W. J. Ghent, well known as a writer on the history of labor and socialism in America, narrates how the Socialist movement began to disintegrate from the time the World War began and how it finally collapsed. This article is of value in explaining in historical terms why there is practically no Socialist movement in this country today.

Professor Ernest J. Eberling of Vanderbilt University in an analysis of the anthracite problem writes an article in which the miners' side of the controversy receives full justice. This is the first of a series of articles on the question, which will include a statement of the operators' viewpoint in the next issue.

The first chemical element to be discovered by an American scientist is the principal topic dealt with by Watson Davis in his regular monthly account of scientific progress.

In addition to the other usual monthly features, the Historians' Chronicle of the World, edited by fourteen historians belonging to the Faculties of America's leading universities, and constituting Part II of the magazine—a magazine within a magazine—contains a comprehensive survey of the month's happenings in all the countries of the world.

THE finishing touches are being put on our new building at 47th Street—the last drive to clear out all furniture and rugs from our ancient shop on 36th Street has begun.

Every piece, every rug is marked for clearance—rapid clearance. In one month we open our door uptown! And one month is so short a time in which to clear out such huge quantities of good furniture as our nine floors hold, that final discounts are available from this day on!

Every single piece of furniture is reduced. We have gone through and marked many sets at reductions of ½ or more. Odd pieces are included. The values transcend anything we have ever offered. Read the tables of prices scattered all around this page.

These prices are without doubt the lowest prices at which good furniture of this type has ever been offered. It is difficult to imagine their ever being offered again, for that is almost an economic impossibility!

So, if you need a small chair, a dining room set, an upholstered set, a bedroom group, some oriental rugs, or anything that our nine floors of good furniture hold, we advise you to come and come early while the best selection of these wonderful values remains open.

CHARITY SOCIETY ASKS $30,000 MORE

Falls Short of $150,000 Goal, the Sum Needed to Complete Its Budget for 1926.

DRIVE EXTENDED TO APRIL 21

Organization Explains That It Has Only Private Aid and Gets No City or State Support.

The Charity Organization Society, 105 East Twenty-second Street, announced yesterday that it was still $30,000 short of its goal of $150,000, the sum needed to complete its budget for this year. The campaign will be continued until April 21.

"The society's workers," said a statement, "have encountered a very general belief that it is supported in part at least by the city or State. This is not so. It does not receive public funds from any source, directly or indirectly. It is supported entirely by voluntary gifts of private individuals.

"It has always preferred to gain support through quiet methods rather than by the 'buttonholing' process. Since 1914, however, it has had a small but increasing debt. The value of the dollar has shrunk while the demands upon the organization have increased steadily, with the result that its income has lagged behind.

"In March it had more families under care than in any month in the preceding ten years. Last year it had 3,655 families under its care for an average of eleven months each, besides nearly 2,000 families for which it performed minor services. In the 3,655 families 'under care' there were more than 9,000 children under sixteen. Largely through its efforts, 89 per cent. of these children were enabled to continue to live at home. In other words, the organization averted the destruction of the home life of thousands of young children.

"The society secured medical care for more than 1,500 of these families. In more than 400 cases it provided mental examinations or care for members of the families. In a very large percentage of cases the society has been able to rehabilitate families which had begun to disintegrate, to make them self-supporting, self-dependent and self-respecting. It makes no distinction of age, religion, color or nationality, but gives a fair and friendly hearing to all persons in trouble who apply or who are referred to it.

"The Charity Organization Society has learned that while temporary relief and health care often are necessary, its real job is to help people regain their lost grip on life. It takes months of patient, understanding social work to do this, and the average cost to the society is about $100 per family. That amount for prevention has proved a more intelligent and effective expenditure than much larger sums paid out later by city and State for institutions and prisons for lives broken beyond mending."

Among those who sent letters to the organization commending its work were Governor Smith, Commissioner of Public Welfare Coler, Louise Closser Hale, Morgan J. O'Brien, Franklin Simon, Elihu Root, Robert E. Speer, Bishop Manning, Health Commissioner Harris and Representative Ogden L. Mills.

TREE TO HONOR WAR HERO.

Jeff Feigl Post Will Plant Oak in Riverside Park May 4.

The Jeff Feigl Post of the American Legion will dedicate an oak tree in the Grove of States in Riverside Park, at 116th Street, on May 4, in memory of Lieutenant Jeff Feigl, first American artillery officer killed in action overseas. The dedication will be part of the ceremonies to be held in celebrating the three hundredth anniversary of the landing on Manhattan of Peter Minuit.

Memorial trees for Quentin Roosevelt and Victor Chapman, both of whom were killed in France, may be dedicated at the same time. The dedication ceremonies will be preceded by a parade from Fifth Avenue and 110th Street. Major Gen. Charles P. Summerall is expected to take part in the parade with a detachment of soldiers of the First Division, and a number of civic and patriotic societies are expected to participate in the ceremonies.

WILL STUDY PROHIBITION.

Professor Catlin of Cornell Made Head of Research Committee.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., April 17.—A leave of absence has been granted by Cornell University to Professor George Edward Gordon Catlin of the Department of Government to carry on research into prohibition. Professor Catlin has been selected by the National Social Science Research Council to head a subcommittee which is to conduct an investigation to determine available sources of information through which the social effects of prohibition can be studied.

Professor Catlin has gone to New York City to take up the work. He is a graduate of Oxford University with honors and has been a member of the Department of Government at Cornell for several years.

2,000 ATTEND DINNER OF MOUNTED POLICE

William T. Collins Represents the Mayor and Praises New York Force.

About 2,000 members of the Mounted Police Association of Greater New York, accompanied by friends and relatives, attended the association's nineteenth annual dinner in the Hotel Commodore last night. Among those present were mtany prominent in the city Government.

The speakers included William T. Collins, former President of the Board of Aldermen, now County Clerk, who represented the Mayor; W. W. Cohen, honorary Police Commissioner; James A. Farley, Chairman of the Boxing Commission; Supreme Court Justice James A. Dunne of Brooklyn; the Rev. Father Joseph McCaffery, Chaplain of the Police Department, and Deputy Inspector Maurice Hannon, who was toastmaster.

New York City was better policed and was freer of vice and crime than any other city in the world, declared Mr. Collins in his address commending the mounted men. These men, he said, deserved especial praise for their work.

Govrnor Alfred E. Smith and Mayor James J. Walker sent congratulatory messages to the mounted men.

The entertainment included musical and vaudeville acts. Dancing followed the regular program of speaking and professional entertainment.

Among the guests were County Sheriff Charles H. Culkin, Judge George J. O'Keefe of Children's Court, Brooklyn, and John C. Uminger, President of the association.

HAS RARE ART MUSEUM.

Dr. Cummins's Collection Includes Washington Mementos.

Special to The New York Times.

BELVIDERE, N. J., April 17.—The recent acquisition by Dr. George Wyckoff Cummins of this town of a number of authentic Revolutionary documents has brought to light the fact that Dr. Cummins has one of the largest private museums in this country.

Dr. Cummins, who was formerly Professor of Chemistry at Yale, has been a collector of rare books and documents and antiques of all descriptions for many years. In his home here are stored pieces that range in variety from coins of the Roman Empire to articles used by George Washington. The house itself was built in 1833 by George M. Robeson, Secretary of the Navy in the Cabinet of President Grant.

Dr. Cummins has a complete collection of the autographs of all the signers of the Declaration of Independence, an autograph letter of Queen Victoria and a George Washington letter, written after the Battle of Trenton.

The collection is varied and includes a seal of Queen Elizabeth of England, a Queen Anne lowboy, a Rearian stein of 1675, a spinet of 1782, hundreds of arrowheads found in Warren County and European coins of every century.

FAIRY TALES TEACH HEALTH

Mother Goose Makes German Children Wash Their Necks.

BERLIN, April 17 (AP).—German children are being taught to do such usually unpopular things as washing their necks, brushing their teeth and going to bed early through the use of illustrated texts of Mother Goose fairy tales. The Government is using the texts in connection with National Health Week, which begins tomorrow. The press, stage, screen, platform and pulpit have been requisitioned to carry various health rules to grown-ups as well as the youngsters.

$250,000 IS SOUGHT FOR BROOKLYN GARDEN

Citizens Committee to Try to Raise Fund to Meet Terms of the Rockefeller Donation.

Efforts to comply with the contingency of the $250,000 pledge made by John D. Rockefeller Jr. to the Brooklyn Botanic Garden to puts its educational and scientific work on a permanent basis will begin tomorrow, it was announced yesterday by Alexander M. White of Brooklyn, who heads a citizens' committee organized to complete the endowment fund. The condition of the Rockefeller gift is that by the end of the present year the committee will have raised the equivalent of the pledge by popular subscription.

This $500,000 additional endowment is necessary, it is said, because the growth of the Brooklyn Botanic Garden since its organization, in 1910, has far outstripped its available resources, and the point has been reached where continuance of the work is jeopardized.

The present plan of the citizens' committee is to raise the requisite $250,000 during the next two months. Serving Mr. White on the invitation committee to the citizens' committee are Frank L. Babbott, Frank Bailey, Edward C. Blum, the Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, Mrs. William H. Cary, Judge Frederick E. Crane, Mrs. Lewis W. Francis, Mrs. William H. Good, Ralph Jonas, Adolph Lewisohn, Miss Hilda Loines, Edwin P. Maynard, James H. Post, Mrs. Frederic B. Pratt, Herman Stutzer, John T. Underwood, Adrian Van Sinderen, Mrs. James L. Morgan, Mrs. Elsie Calder Lee, Mrs. William A. Putnam, Mrs. William H. Childs, Mrs. William P. Earle, Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, Miss Julia J. Pierrepont, the Rev. John L. Belford, the Rev. J. Howard Melish, Rabbi Alexander Lyons, Mrs. Frederick W. Rowe, Mrs. Glentworth R. Butler, Arthur S. Somers, Mathew S. Sloan, Herbert F. Gunnison and Fremont C. Peck.

RAIL OFFICIAL'S FIGHT WITH BLIZZARDS FATAL

John Rourke Victim of 'Round-the-Clock' Battles to Keep Boston & Maine Open.

MELROSE, Mass., April 17 (AP).—John Rourke, General Superintendent of the Boston & Maine Railroad, died at his home here tonight from an illness due to two "round-the-clock" struggles to keep his lines open during the blizzards of Feb. 4 and 10.

From the telegraph key on his desk, with which he directed the road's Winter battles, the brief message, "J. R. passed away at 6:30 P. M.," was tapped to every corner of the 2,200-mile system.

For thirty-six hours, starting Feb. 4, and for nearly forty-eight after dawn of Feb. 10, Rourke sat without sleep before the same key, a "master control" of the system, directing the work of thousands of men during the storms which practically paralyzed rail transportation in Northern New England.

Mr. Rourke was born in Marshfield, Mass., in 1867, and began railroading twenty years later as an operator at the Abington station of the Old Colony Railroad, now part of the New Haven system. He rose to a division superintendency on the New Haven before becoming Assistant Superintendent of the old Boston & Lowell at Boston under Charles S. Mellon.

When that line was merged with the Boston & Maine he became Superintendent of the Eastern Division. Last September he became General Superintendent.

Rummage Sale for Charity.

The A. E. Society, Mrs. Henry Weltzien, President, will hold its Spring rummage sale tomorrow at 1,303 Third Avenue, between Seventy-fourth and Seventy-fifth Streets. The society aids needy children.

An Engineering Innovation

TODAY- the criterion all others strive to follow

The story of a remarkable SIX that was a year ahead of its time

FIFTEEN months ago we announced a revolutionary new-type automobile. It was the Overland "93" . . . the SIX that has become famous.

This car embodied five years of engineering research and experiment. It was designed with an unusually low center of gravity.

At all speeds it provided a new feeling of stable-equilibrium . . . Plus a feeling of added speed never enjoyed in any car before. No side-sway. No slipping. No wandering. You hug the road and zoom past other cars in a way that thrills you to the finger tips.

That was the action of the new Overland Six.

Sales multiplied overnight. 65,000 Overland Sixes were sold in its first year. Over 92,000 are now in use. Today the Overland "93" is the criterion other manufacturers strive to follow.

Such success does not come by chance.

4 cardinal advantages motorists wanted

We gained this pinnacle place by pioneering developments the public wanted.

This car has tremendous power . . . performance-ability you have never experienced in any automobile of equal or nearly equal engine-dimensions.

Its full 40-brake horsepower is delivered in a straight line from its gravity-balanced engine through to the rear-axle shaft.

[This big sturdy Six will out-pull, outrun and out-perform anything else of its size, or weight, or price-class.]

It is a car of exceptional comfort. The big, broad doors are extra wide. You can get in or out with the utmost ease.

Seats are wide, luxuriously comfortable. There are more cubic feet of space inside than in any car of this price . . . with plenty of room for five full-size passengers. Room to stretch your legs without feeling cramped or crowded.

The rear springs are extra long . . . and underslung. They measure 52" and are made of Chrome Vanadium Steel . . . a costly metal, but its the best for absorbing the jolts and jars of the road.

Nothing has been spared to make this car a positive comfort-revelation. Owners accustomed to more expensive cars tell us this is true.

An Artist Created It

The distinguished, smart looking Overland Six you see in the illustration above is not a chance result.

An artist created it. Every line, every curve and contour is the result of painstaking craftsmanship and study.

Frankly, we took the 18 best cars of America and Europe and combined their salient features in this new-type Overland Six.

It is a strikingly beautiful automobile. Low swung . . . it fairly hugs the ground.

Even practical men call it "a superlatively handsome car". And women revel in its unobtrusive smartness, its beautiful Velour upholstery and attractive fitments.

Do you wonder that we urge you to see this car. That we ask you to find out what it offers before making up your mind.

Don't let the low price mislead you

The exceptionally low price of the Overland Six is made possible by the tremendous purchasing power and manufacturing facilities of Willys-Overland which are unexcelled throughout the world.

There is no Six built today that offers greater value . . . no car made in which finer quality of material is used or better workmanship employed.

In justice to yourself, see this wonderful car.

SUNDAY PROGRAMS IN CITY'S CHURCHES

Prohibition Will Be the Topic of Many Pastors, Inspired by Washington Hearings.

ONE WILL DISCUSS MEXICO

Present Religious Conditions There to Be the Theme of Dr. Frederick Smith, Baptist Missionary.

Many New York clergymen will preach today about prohibition, inspired by the hearings in Washington.

"What Has Religion to Do with Prohibition?" will be the topic this morning of the Rev. Dr. Finis S. Ideiman, pastor of the Central Church of the Disciples of Christ, 142 West Eighty-first Street.

"Prohibition" will be the subject this evening of the Rev. Dr. Christian F. Reisner, pastor of Chelsea Methodist Church, 178th Street and Fort Washington Avenue. He will answer questions. Beginning today the morning and evening services will be broadcast by Station WOKO. Dr. Reisner's morning theme will be "Meeting Loved Ones in Heaven."

"A Fortunate Failure" will be the subject this morning of the Rev. Dr. Daniel A. Poling, co-pastor of the Marble Collegiate Reformed Church, Fifth Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street, who is President of the World's Temperance Association. His topic this morning will be "Bitter Waters Sweetened." At the Young People's Conference at 2:30, under the auspices of the Greater New York Federation of Churches, Dr. Poling will speak on "The Potential Prodigal." The conference will be broadcast by WEAF.

"They Have No Wine," will be the theme this morning of the Rev. Howard E. Clarke, pastor of the Mount Morris Park Baptist Church, Fifth Avenue, between 126th and 127th Streets.

"My Cup Runneth Over," will be the topic this morning of the Rev. Dr. Raymond L. Forman, who last Monday was assigned by Bishop Francis J. McConnell of Pittsburgh as pastor of St. Paul's Methodist Church, West End Avenue and Eighty-sixth Street. This evening Dr. Forman will preach on "Simon Goes Fishing."

The Rev. Dr. Percy Stickney Grant will preach this morning in the Episcopal Church of St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerie, Tenth Street, west of Second Avenue. His subject will be "Are You Hitting at Nothing?" At 4 o'clock there will be a symposium on "Can Poetry Survive Modern Civilization?" The speakers will be Dr. William Carlos Williams, Chard Powers Smith, Gerham B. Munson and Maxwell Bodenheim. This evening there will be symbolic worship, "The Gift of Holy Water," followed by a "singing hour" in St. Mark's Hall.

The Rev. Dr. Henry van Dyke will be the preacher this morning in the Brick Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue and Thirty-seventh Street, of which he was pastor for many years. At 4 o'clock the preacher will be the Rev. Dr. James M. Farr, the associate pastor. The Rev. Dr. William P. Merrill, the pastor, has been serving for ten days as chaplain at the Lake Placid Club, Lake Placid, N. Y. He is due home the middle of this week.

PORTO RICO CAMP IS OVERENROLLED

700 Applicants for the 500 Vacancies in Citizens' Military Training Unit.

EMPLOYERS LENDING AID

List of Companies Which Will Send Pick of Their Employes to Camps Is Announced.

Officers in charge of the Citizens' Military Training Camp which will be held this Summer at Porto Rico reported yesterday that the camp was overenrolled, and that 700 applications had been received for the 500 vacancies. This is the second camp in this corps area to report an overenrolment.

Major Henry W. Fleet, the C. M. T. C. officer on the staff of Major Gen. Charles P. Summerall, announced that the ration allowance throughout the camps had been increased to 70 cents per man per day, and that during the first Winter fifty cooks and bakers, who will be assigned to duty at the camps throughout the area, have completed courses of special instruction at the army cooking school at Fort Hamilton.

The United States Army is known throughout the world as the best fed army of any nation, and the army ration allowance is 36 cents per man per day. With almost double this amount for students at the Citizens' Military Training Camps, officials in charge are determined that this year's camps shall remain long in the memories of those who attend as the "best feeding camp ever."

A special appeal to reserve officers to obtain one candidate each for the camps was sent out last week by Colonel Peter E. Traub, Chief of Staff of the Seventy-seventh (Reserve) Division, and already a number of officers have filed the names of their candidates.

A list of business firms that have agreed to permit their employes to attend the camps, without loss of pay or prestige, has been compiled by Colonel Traub, who pointed out that in previous years employers in every instance indicated that they felt well repaid in allowing their young men the time off to attend the camps.

"I have received scores of letters," Colonel Traub said, "in which employers said that the improvement in the physical and mental condition of young men who attended the camps was reflected in their increased efficiency in their work. All of the firms in the list feel that it is a privilege to have their employes attend the camps; they make their employes feel the same way about it and they select the candidates on their own office merit record of punctuality, attention to duty and all-round excellence in the year's work."

ORIENTAL ART TO BE SOLD.

C. F. Yau Collection Up Wednesday at American Galleries.

An Oriental collection will be offered at public sale on Wednesday afternoon at the American Art Galleries by order of C. F. Yau.

There are 230 lots in the collection, opening with jade pendants and ending in a Ming bronze animal statuette. A three-colored figure of Kwan Hsing (K'ang-hsi) over twenty-three inches tall, an erect figure with gown and imperial headdress, is glazed in yellow, aubergine and green with coppery lustre. There is early pottery, Yin Ching ware and mortuary figures of the T'ang dynasty, also yellow glazed T'ang pottery camels and bronzes, pewter and lacquered bowls and boxes. A pair of Ch'ien-lung gilded bronze Fu dogs twenty-one inches high are hung with bells. The male holds a brocaded ball, and with the female is a smaller kylin.

There are Ming, K'ang-hsi and Ch'ien-lung paintings on silk, some in needlework. There are numerous symbols of heaven—jade pi; a carved amber incense burner, a rare carved yellow jade vase carved tourmalines, green jade bird statuettes, aquamarine, jade amethyst, Indian pearl, turquoise, rose quartz and carved coral necklaces, separate or in combination, and many snuff-bottles and other objects.

ROLE OF PARENTS IN PEACE.

Question to Be Discussed at Town Hall Symposium Tomorrow.

A symposium on "Fathers, Mothers and World Peace" will be held at the Town Hall tomorrow night under the auspices of the United Parents' Associations of Greater New York. Robert E. Simon, President of the associations and member of Governor Smith's Commission on Education, will preside, other speakers including Dr. Norman Thomas, Executive Director of the League for Industrial Democracy, and Miss Anna Garlin Spencer, lecturer on sociology at Teachers College.

John Nevin Sayre of Princeton University, Secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation of Bible House, discussed the purpose of the symposium yesterday and pointed out the duties of parents toward incuicating in their children an abhorrence of war. "Our boys and girls must grow up with the same feeling against war that we have against witch-burning and the torturing of religious heretics," he declared. "The facts show that neither truth, justice nor liberty can be achieved by modern war, even by wars of self-defense."

STATE PRODUCTION OF MINERALS RISES

Geologist Puts the Value of Products in 1924 at $96,395,492.

THE OIL YIELD INCREASES

1,440,000 Barrels Obtained in Four Counties, the Largest Output in 33 Years.

ALBANY, April 17 (AP).—The value of New York State's annual output of homely, but useful minerals is approaching $100,000,000.

Cris A. Hartnagel, Assistant State Geologist, reported today that New York's mineral products in 1924 were worth $96,395,492, an increase of more than $8,000,000 over 1923, and more than three times the valuation of 1904. He estimated that the total for 1925, which will not be available until later this year, would be computed in nine figures.

The geologist said he considered of special importance the recent increases shown in the output of petroleum, gypsum, Portland cement, salt, garnet and limestone, the State's leading mineral products and the firm establishment of the zinc industry, which was started here in 1915.

The New York oil fields, located in Cattaraugus, Allegany, Steuben and Chautauqua Counties, yielded 1,440,000 barrels in 1924, the largest amount in thirty-three years.

"In view of the fact that no new oil pools or new producing oil sands have been discovered in the State in recent years," said Mr. Hartnagel, "this is very encouraging. The 1924 output was nearly double that of 1912."

Rise in Salt Industry.

Salt production amounted to 14,091,486 barrels in 1924, as compared with 14,736,014 barrels in 1923, but Mr. Hartnagel said the industry had nevertheless enjoyed a steady growth in recent years and that the present annual output was more than 5,000,000 barrels over the 1904 total.

The 1924 output of Portland cement amounted to 7,435,875 barrels, valued at $13,460,594, as compared with 8,853,000 barrels, with a valuation of $12,834,471 for 1923.

Natural gas, which has been produced for more than 100 years in the Empire State, has steadily declined since its peak year, 1914, when it reached a total of 8,714,681,000 cubic feet. In 1924 the production was 6,196,000,000 cubic feet.

The iron ore industry, with mines located in the northern and eastern Adirondacks, Orange County, and Central New York, has shown a depression during the last three or four years, Mr. Hartnagel reported. The production for 1924 is given as 303,386 long tons, which represents only ore actually shipped, as considerable stocks have been held over at the mines from year to year. The magnetite ore is of high quality. Hematite, or red iron ore, is mined in a belt extending from Herkimer to Monroe County, and there are active mines in Oneida, Cayuga and Wayne counties.

Last year was the first since 1913 when the production of brick has exceeded 1,000,000,000. The total for 1924 was 1,029,667,000, with a value of $13,582,606.

The yield of gypsum, found in Western New York, was 1,474,491 tons in 1924, valued at $14,329,246, or an increase of nearly $4,000,000 over 1923. Garnet production, confined almost exclusively to Warren County, totalled 7,428 tons, with a value of $623,472. The garnet found in this State is of the abrasive type and is used largely for grinding purposes.

Table Showing 1924 Output.

The following table summarizes the products of the State's 1924 mineral output:

Product.	Quantity.	Value.
Portland cement, bbls.	7,435,875	$13,460,594

Two Honored at Dinner.

The Harry Walkof Association gave a testimonial dinner at the Hotel Shelburne at Coney Island last night to the Rev. Father Arthur I. Keegan of St. John's College, Brooklyn, and David F. Soden, well-known Brooklyn athlete. Among those attending the dinner were Borough President Joseph A. Guider, John H. McCooey, Democratic leader of the borough, and Jacob A. Livingston, Republican leader.

GRENFELL ALUMNI DINE.

Movies of Labrador's "Niagara" Shown at Annual Celebration.

The first moving pictures of Grand Falls, Labrador, said to be second to Niagara on this continent in size, were shown last night at the annual reunion and dinner of the Grenfell Alumni Association at the Hotel Brevoort. The pictures were taken last Summer by Verick Frissell, one of Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell's volunteer mission workers. In addition to pictures of the falls the daily round of Summer work in Labrador was traced on the impravised screen.

Prior to the pictures, Dr. Grenfell addressed the reunited volunteers, all of whom had served in Labrador at one time or another. Dr. Grenfell told of his thirty years' work among the Eskimos and other dwellers of the Labrador coast. Thanking the 130 present for the work they had done, Dr. Grenfell commended them all as "Inspirations."

Among those present were: A. A. Whitman, William Adams Delano, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Holt, Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Ralphson, Allan Wardwell, Dr. D. Bryson Delavan, Dr. Rosalie Slaughter Morton, William L. Savage and S. E. Demarest.

ANSWER ON CLARK SUIT.

Senator's Children Deny Claims of Missouri and Denver Women.

BUTTE, Mont., April 17 (AP).—The sons and daughters of Senator William A. Clark have made their first legal move to block efforts of Alma E. Clark Hines, Effie Clark McWilliams of Missouri and Addie L. Clark Miller of Denver to obtain a share of Senator Clark's estate, valued at $50,000,000.

Charles E. Clark, William A. Clark Jr., Mary C. De Brabant, Katherine L. Morris and Hughette Marcelle Clark, the Senator's children, entered a statement yesterday in the District Court here denying relationship claims advanced by the Missouri and Denver women. They also filed a motion requesting the woman to file an amended complaint, setting forth the facts and circumstances upon which they base their claims.

Mrs. Hines, Mrs. McWilliams and Mrs. Miller recently filed action in the court, declaring that they were daughters of Senator Clark by an early marriage in Missouri.

EXPECT RECORD IN SEAL FUR

Officials Predict $600,000 Harvest in the Pribilofs.

Special to The New York Times.

SEATTLE, Wash., April 17.—Uncle Sam's harvest of fur seals in the Alaskan Pribilofs is expected to pass the $600,000 mark in value this season—one of the biggest years of sealing operations in the history of the Government.

This was the estimate today of Seattle officials of the United States Bureau of Fisheries who have completed arrangements for the 1926 season which begins in June, with the annual take of fur seals in the two islands of the Pribilof group, St. Paul and St. George.

More than 21,000 skins will be taken this year, all of which, packed and salted, will be shipped to the national fur market in St. Louis to be tanned and dyed before being sold at auction to fur buyers from all sections of the world. Inasmuch as the fur-seal harvest increases 10 per cent. each year, this season will witness the largest slaughter on record, with one exception of ten years ago, before present scientific propagation methods were in effect.

Harry J. Christoffers, superintendent of sealing operations, estimates the seal population of the Pribilofs at 723,000, which number is increasing at the rate of 10 per cent. each year, he said.

SEIZED LEAVING HOSPITAL.

Victim of Bullet Charged With Holding Up Shoe Store.

Henry Lucasik, 35 years old, of 311 East Sixty-first Street, was arrested yesterday as he left a private hospital on Lexington Avenue near Sixty-third Street on the charge of being one of the men who held up Nathan Cohen, manager of the Thom McAn shoe store, 1,001 Third Avenue, and stole $100 on Jan. 23. Lucasik had been treated at the hospital for a bullet wound in the right thigh. He said he had been shot while walking along Lexington Avenue near Sixty-second Street a week ago, but didn't know who had shot him or why. There was no shooting in the McAn hold-up.

The police said Lucasik was arrested in 1910 on the charge of felonious assault, but sentence was suspended; that he was sentenced to the penitentiary for larceny in 1921 and to Sing Sing in 1923 for burglary. He served two years in Sing Sing. He escaped from the penitentiary, but was recaptured and sent back to complete his term.

RARE FIRST EDITIONS OF DICKENS TO BE SOLD

McCutcheon Collection of Thackerays Also Up for Auction Two Days This Week.

The collection of first editions of the works of Dickens and Thackeray formed by George Barr McCutcheon, the writer, will be sold on Wednesday and Thursday evenings at the American Art Galleries.

The collection contains many rare items and includes copies of Dickens's "Pickwick" and Thackeray's "Vanity Fair" in the original parts, and a copy of the rare Dickens booklet "The Strange Gentleman," (London, 1837).

Another rare item, especially in the original parts, is the McCutcheon copy of the "Library of Fiction," 1838-37. "Songs, Choruses and Concerted Pieces in the Village Coquettes," London, 1837, another rare Dickens item included in the collection, bears an autograph presentation inscription by the novelist.

The Thackeray collection includes the rare "King Glumpus" (London, 1837), with three colored plates by Thackeray, the text written by John Barrow. Other Thackeray items are "Flore et Zephyr" (London, 1836), with nine lithographed plates drawn by Thackeray representing scenes and episodes in the career of a prima donna.

The collection of cookery books formed by Mrs. Claudia Quigley Murphy of New York City will be sold at the Anderson Galleries tomorrow afternoon. The collection includes the rare first editions of volumes by Sir Kenelm Digby, Alexis of Piedmont, Michael Combrune and John Evelyn.

CATTADORI ART FOR SALE.

American Galleries to Auction Gothic and Renaissance Objects.

The Cattadori collection of Italian, French, Gothic and Renaissance furniture, velvets, brocades, tapestries, bronzes and ironwork will be sold at the American Art Galleries next Friday and Saturday afternoons. There are 452 numbers, including a pair of seventeenth century Venetian wrought-iron entrance gates from the palace at Padua of Count Morosini.

There is a Jean Goujon sixteenth century French carved walnut cabinet, a Florentine carved walnut bambocci cabinet enriched with Greek mythological figures in high relief, and a Venetian Gothic carved walnut cassone.

Among the tapestries are a Tournai Gothic millefleurs tapestry, circa 1500; three Aubussons, a Flemish Renaissance panel, a Brussels cantonnière and a Flemish Renaissance, "Esther Before King Mordecai."

The collection also includes a fourteenth century Franco-Flemish alto-relief polychromed wood carved with the twelve Apostles.

Women's Historical Society Dines.

More than 500 members of the Daughters of Columbia County Historical Society attended the tenth annual dinner and dance of the organization last night in the grand ballroom of the Hotel McAlpin. It was announced that the mortgage on the society's headquarters, the old Vanderpoel mansion at Kinderhook, N. Y., had been paid off. The mortgage was burned. G. W. Boissevain, Dutch Vice Consul at New York, was the guest of honor.

SAY WOMAN SOLD DRUGS.

Detectives Arrest Mother of Three and Two Men—Get Two Addicts.

A mother of three small children, and two men, were arrested last night by detectives of the Narcotic Division on charges of violating the Harrison act by dispensing heroin. At the same time the detectives took in charge the three children and sent them to the Children's Society as a juvenile delinquents.

Mrs. Mary Daroncayk, the mother, 45 years old, was arrested in her apartment at 141 East Sixteenth Street, after, the detectives alleged, they had found a small quantity of heroin in the place and had taken from her four $1 notes they said, they previously had given to Fred Kendall of the Pythian Hotel, Fifth Street and the Bowery, in payment for two "decks" of the drug.

The detectives said that Kendall sold the drug to a man near the entrance to the tenement, and then he was followed to Mrs. Daroncayk's home. When they entered the apartment the three children, Joseph, 15; John, 12, and Helen, 10, were seated near their mother and Frank Mealski of 136 Stanton Street, who also was arrested.

While the detectives were there, Christian Clayton of the Columbia Hotel, Second Avenue and Twenty-third Street, and John Sullivan, who lives in Newark, entered. They admitted, according to the detectives, that they were drug addicts. Later they were arraigned in the Night Court and committed to the sanitarium at Hampton, N. Y.

HONORED BY POLISH JEWS.

Two Leaders; Green and Winter, Are Guests at Dinner.

The Federation of Polish Jews of America paid honor to Benjamin Winter, its President, and to Charles Green, first Vice President, at a dinner last evening in the Hotel Pennsylvania. The affair was arranged by a group of federation workers in appreciation of the successful work done by the two officers last year for the welfare of Polish Jews in Europe, and for their efforts to unite the Polish Jews in America. There were about 250 present.

The toastmaster was Dr. Jacob I. Steinberg. The speakers included Louis Lipsky, President of the Zionist Organization in America; Emanuel Neumann, general director of the United Palestine Appeal; J. George Silberstein, Dr. Sirovitch, Joseph Barondess. Jewish music was rendered by Cantor Hyman, Miss Schwartz and the Hazomir Singing Society of Newark, N. J.

The tenth anniversary luncheon of the Women's League for the Protection of Riverside Park will be held at the Columbia Yacht Club, Riverside Drive and Eighty-sixth Street, Wednesday, at 1 P. M. Cass Gilbert will speak on "Park Projects." Armand Tibbits, who studied under Jen Jensen, the well-known American landscape architect, will talk on "Riverside Park," bringing up to date the report which Mr. Jensen made for the Riverside League ten years ago. Mr. Tibbits has just completed a special survey of the park.

Francis T. Gallatin will be another speaker.

RESTAURATEUR SLAIN AS HE TELEPHONES

Shot by Two Men, Who Escape in Taxicab After Firing From Doorway.

Max Goldberg, 23 years old, was shot and instantly killed early this morning in his restaurant at 68 Orchard Street by two men who entered the restaurant, fired two shots and escaped in a taxicab.

Goldberg was in charge of the place, his partner, Louis Getzler, having left about an hour before. There were four customers in the restaurant when the telephone rang and Goldberg answered it. As he took the receiver off the hook two men ran up the stairs and, standing in the doorway, fired two shots at the proprietor. One shot went through Goldberg's head and he dropped to the floor.

The license number of the taxicab in which the murderers made their escape was taken by a passer-by, attracted by the sound of the pistol shots, and when Captain Louis K. Valentine of the Clinton Street station arrived, he gave the number to the police officer.

The restaurant was the scene of a gambling raid some weeks ago and afterward a uniformed patrolman was stationed in the place. The policeman was removed last Wednesday after a Magistrate in the Third District Court had stated he would have Inspector McAuliffe of the Third Police Inspection District summoned to appear before him.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., April 17 (AP).—F. C. Vickers, publisher of The Fredonia Censor, was re-elected president of the Western New York Publishers' Association, which closed its annual meeting here today. Merritt Landon, of The Bath Farmers' Advocate, was elected vice president, and Everett M. Blossom, of The Brookport Republic, secretary and treasurer.

DIES IN FALL FROM BRIDGE.

Man's Body F[illegible]om River by, Surgeons W[illegible]rd Splash.

A man believed by police to have been John E. Rache, 25 years old, of 8,214 Kent Avenue, Brooklyn, jumped or fell from the Manhattan Bridge promenade, about 25 feet, off the Brooklyn bank, yesterday and was killed.

Captain Charles Hale of 185 East Ninety-fifth Street, Manhattan, master of the barge Nathan Hale, lying off the foot of Jay Street, heard the splash of the body falling into the river. He threw out a hook and recovered it, as the tide carried it near the barge. The body was examined by a surgeon from the Cumberland Hospital and by police from Brooklyn headquarters. It was to be taken to the Kings County morgue for identification. The man had a membership card of Brooklyn Elks Lodge No. 22.

POLICE MAKE SIX DRY RAIDS.

Arrest Fifteen in Charge of Alleged Downtown Speakeasies.

Plain-clothes men of the First Inspection Division under Sergeant Mulholland raided six alleged speakeasies in lower Manhattan last night, arresting fifteen proprietors or bartenders, who were booked at the Old Slip Station charged with violating the Volstead act. The prisoners were locked up at the Beach Street Station.

The raids were started after two patrolmen, wearing sailors' uniforms, had visited all six places and received drinks which they poured into small bottles as evidence. The alleged speakeasies were located at 26, 29 and 37 South Street, 14 Greenwich Street, 19 Front Street and 31 Coenties Slip.

A photographer attached to the staff of United States Attorney Buckner accompanied the raiding party and made flashlight photographs of the interior in each place visited. The police said a small quantity of liquor was seized. They encountered no opposition.

EXPERTS IN FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

In the annual report of the Division of Economics and History, under the Carnegie Endowment, the Director, Professor JAMES T. SHOTWELL, outlines the progress that has been made in that comprehensive work, "The Economic and Social History of the World War." When completed it will be an enormous treasure-house of facts and interpretation. One inference is drawn by the Director bearing on present international conditions. He writes:

> Any one familiar with the post-war history of Europe, who has seen the inner working of its international affairs, must be struck with the fact that the supreme decision in international conference frequently falls to those who are trained rather as negotiators than qualified by an expert knowledge of the subject with which they deal. High office demands a knowledge of human character, but does not always provide an equally thorough knowledge of the problems of the day. The result is frequently ultimate failure without an appreciation or understanding of what goes wrong; failure while believing that success is achieved; compromise upon essential rather than unessential points, presenting subsequent difficulties when the experienced specialists of the permanent staff interpret in the light of reality the agreements reached. A certain amateurishness still characterizes great affairs, as in the old régime. Naturally this situation lends ready instruments to those whose chief interest lies in the frustration of well-meant effort. There is need for careful, non-political preparation for most of the forward-looking arrangements of international conferences.

The ideal plan would seem to be a combination of experts and practical men of affairs. Specially trained men would furnish all the pertinent material of negotiation, while those qualified by experience and skill to bring the business to a decision would attend to the necessary conferring and compromising. Undoubtedly there was a great deal of such preliminary expert work done behind the scenes at all the recent international conferences of importance. This was as true of Locarno as it was of Versailles, of the formulation of the Dawes plan as of the ratification of the London agreement. The experts are necessary, though their work is often unperceived and almost unnoticed. The glory of achievement goes to others more prominently on the stage and in the limelight. But that, after all, is a function which the true expert readily assumes. If he is able to contribute something toward getting the work done, it is to him a matter of wholly secondary importance whose name is attached to it.

ITALY IN NORTH AFRICA.

In the superfervid Fascist rhetoric, Premier MUSSOLINI'S voyage to Tripoli has been hailed as the first step toward the revival of an Italic Empire—toward the restoration of Mare Nostrum. His own mind harbors less grandiose schemes. The trip across the Mediterranean was obviously designed as large-scale publicity for a commendable enterprise—the development of Libia Italiana, comprising Tripoli and Cyrenaica, as an outlet for part of Italy's population surplus. Since the year 1920 the annual excess of births over deaths in the peninsula has been about 475,000. The United States, which in 1912 received nearly 160,000 Italian immigrants, is now virtually closed. Our present Italian quota is less than 4,000. In South America there has been no such drastic restriction, but Argentina and Brazil are far from ready to absorb the diverted overflow from the United States. The inpour of Italians into France has been large. It is estimated that there are now 800,000 Italians in that country. So eager has the Government at Rome been to find accommodations for its living surplus that far-off Australia has witnessed a notable, though numerically not yet overwhelming, increase of immigrants from Italy.

Under the circumstances it is natural that MUSSOLINI'S attention should turn to the North African coast, where the immigrants might find a home without losing their italianita. They are in fairly large numbers in Algeria and constitute the foreign majority in Tunis, where 85,000 Italians and 15,000 natives of Malta make up two-thirds of the European population. But whatever the Fascist orators may say, MUSSOLINI is not yet ready to make war on France for her North African possessions. The indicated solution is to imitate the French example in Italy's own African possessions, comprising nearly 680,000 square miles, but with a native population of less than a million. By far the greater part of this area is desert, but enough remains to furnish ample opportunity for the industrious Italian colonist. In 1914, shortly after Italy had wrested the country from Turkey, it was estimated that the venture had cost $300,000,000. If a reasonable percentage of this capital investment is given to development, it is far from impossible that North Africa may come in the course of time to absorb a large part of Italy's population surplus.

Hard work in the way of irrigation is involved before the Italian peasant can establish himself on the African coast. But Italy has a number of advantages which are not present in other colonizing or would-be colonizing countries. France lacks the drive of a population surplus. Great Britain has the surplus, but in her case it is a question of turning an industrial worker into a colonist. Italy's surplus is predominantly a peasant population, not afraid of hard work, as the record of the Italian immigrant shows everywhere. The principal factor is that the Italian has the immigration habit. Unlike Great Britain, where a new psychology must be induced to make great numbers of superfluous workers leave home, Italy has the human supply waiting and only needs the outlet. No one will begrudge MUSSOLINI his desire to restore the Roman Empire if it takes the form of reclaiming the African desert for the uses of the Italian peasant. He can avail himself, in addition to the specific factors just enumerated, of the enthusiasm which he has unquestionably aroused among great masses of the Italian people and the stern discipline to which observers testify as operating in the economic and social life. The Tripoli undertaking offers him an excellent opportunity for demonstrating his theory of the superior efficiency of the Fascist method over the cumbrous procedures of democracy.

A NEW COLLEGE.

ALEXANDER MEIKLEJOHN, late of Amherst and now of the University of Wisconsin, is distressed by the disorder that has invaded American institutions of learning as result of the vast increase in modern knowledge and in the numbers of undergraduates bent on acquiring it. The university of today, he writes in The New Republic, "has been formed and "shaped by the necessities of external "growth"; and this merely material influence has come during "a period when "all its powers were needed for the "reconstruction of its own inner meaning and spirit." To supply the defect, Professor MEIKLEJOHN proposes "a new college" specially designed to throw off the incubus of matter in mass and devote itself freely to that education which comes directly and intimately to the individual mind and spirit and character. The new college must be "small and free from growth," having not more than two hundred and fifty students and not more than twenty-five teachers. There are obvious difficulties in providing the apparatus of modern education for a body so small—library and laboratories and museums—to say nothing of great teachers in all the fields of learning. So it would be necessary to place the new college "near a large city or university "through whose institutions the use of "such equipment could be secured."

As it happens, there is precisely such a New College already in existence—no less a new college to Professor MEIKLEJOHN, it appears, than it was to the professors of Oxford when WILLIAM of Wykeham foundei it, in 1379. Then as now individual education had been sacrificed to mass education. Also, college life and sport obtruded upon the life of mind and spirit—or, as WILLIAM put it, undergraduates were "given up "to idleness and frivolous vanities, be-"taking themselves to wandering and "various insolences." "Manners maayth man," quoth WILLIAM of Wykeham—and set out to make manners. True, the type of the English college had been fixed over a century earlier, in 1274, by the statutes of Merton; but New College was none the less new, in that it came directly to grips with the intellectual and spiritual problems that are now agitating Professor MEIKLEJOHN.

It insisted that its students be thoroughly prepared, and it provided a teaching force of its own to continue their education intensively—not merely the tutorial guide, philosopher and friend, but professorial big-wigs. In time its Faculty so clearly outshone that of the university without its walls that New College, and some twenty others that followed in its path, became one and all self-centred and self-sufficient. That was eventually seen to be a mistake, involving not only a vast reduplication in the teaching force, but a sad lowering of the general level of instruction. By the eighteenth century, the university and its professors lay as if in a swoon, the colleges being everything—and not much at that. The nineteenth century brought the general "honours" examination set by a university board. The present aim at Oxford is to resuscitate university teaching and extend its field, relying on the colleges mainly for tutorial instruction.

It is not easy to see how Professor MEIKLEJOHN'S idea differs from that lately put forth at Harvard. Conceivably he would demand for his new college administrative and spiritual independence of the advanced and highly equipped university—which he yet acknowledges to be essential to it. Probably also he would insist upon flocking by himself, resenting the reduplication of analogous new colleges. Here also he might profit by a study of the six-century experiment still under way in England. As university and college are reciprocal in function and mutually indispensable, so are the multiplied college in relation to one another. A single small college tends to a dull gray monotony. So do the greatest universities when overrun, as ours are today, by undistinguished multitudes. But when organized into distinct centres of intellectual and social life, the drab of uniformity gives way to a pattern of colors. Merton, New College, Balliol, Brasenose and the rest make up an ensemble harmonious in their brilliant contrasts as a butterfly's wing. The "inner meaning and spirit" of each is developed and intensified by the inner meaning and spirit of all.

WHAT GERMANY HAS GAINED.

The period of industrial depression through which Germany has been passing, and from which she now appears to be emerging, naturally gave occasion for partisan attacks upon the German Government. These easily ran off into railings against the Dawes plan. Nationalist and monarchist organs in the German press carried a whole series of articles denouncing the Dawes plan as the source of most of the economic ills from which Germany has been suffering. And these same newspaper diatribes were also directed against Minister STRESEMANN as the man chiefly responsible for inducing the Reichstag to accept the Dawes plan, which led, according to this theory of the Nationalists, to the "exhaustion of Germany," the "destruction of the middle class," and so on.

In answer to these abusive complaints, a little pamphlet has been published and given wide circulation in Germany. It begins by showing that no one German statesman, and no political party, can be held exclusively responsible for ratifying the Dawes plan. Out of the 314 members of the Reichstag voting in favor of acceptance, no less than forty-eight were Nationalists—the party now endeavoring to shoulder the blame upon others. But this political retort is only an incidental and minor part of the German leaflet referred to. In a condensed and effective way it recites the state of the case in Germany before the Dawes plan was agreed to, and enumerates the benefits which have followed.

Before the coming of the Dawes plan everything was in confusion. The Germans were subject to continued and indefinite demands by the Allies. No one knew what would have to be paid ultimately in the way of reparations. The French were in the Ruhr, and there was no predicting where they would go next. German currency and finance were in a chaotic condition. Everything was uncertain, the people were dejected and knew not what to expect.

Now turn to the other side of the balance sheet and see what positive gains enter into the reckoning. The reparations payments have been put upon a precise basis. The sums due in the first year of the operation of the Dawes plan have been readily supplied. Furthermore, the German currency has been stabilized, and the national budget has been balanced. The French have agreed to evacuate the Ruhr. Still more important, there has been a restoration abroad of confidence in both the economic and the political future of Germany. All these things, and the others which the German pamphlet adduces, represent a wonderful change for the better. For any German Government even to think of repudiating what has been done under the Dawes plan would be consummate folly. That plan may not be perfect; it cannot be expected to endure through the years unchanged. But that it has wrought an enormous improvement in Germany and throughout all Europe cannot be denied except by flying in the face of all the facts.

LEWIS AND CLARK.

A little more than twenty years ago the Pacific Slope remembered that great adventure, the Lewis and Clark exploration of the unknown West, by holding a centennial exposition at Portland. President ROOSEVELT touched an electric button at Washington to open it. The cost was $7,000,000, and 2,545,509 persons visited the buildings and grounds, with their reminders, relics, shows and exhibits. All the school children and many of the grown-ups learned that MERIWETHER LEWIS and WILLIAM CLARK had lived in a heroic age and for their achievement were worthy of emulation. At that time their deeds cast a radiance over the whole country from Cape Disappointment to Quoddy Head. Financially the Lewis and Clark Centennial Exposition was a success, subscribers receiving dividends.

The four months' celebration at Portland stirred the pride of the American people. It was good to think that LEWIS and CLARK had been officers of the United States Army, and that their names were written high on the roll of American explorers. They were the first white men to cross the Continent of North America and to face Indians who had never set eyes on a white man. As pioneers and heralds of the Greater America their fame was for all time. The flag whipping from its staff on the exposition grounds never looked fairer; but one fancies that if the visitors had known that MERIWETHER LEWIS was lying under a "dilapidated monument "erected years ago by the State of Ten-"nessee"—that is the report of our contemporary, The St. Louis Globe-Democrat—a fund would have been raised at once to give his bones a better shrine, more in keeping with his services to the United States.

It is to be hoped that Tennessee will be able to make answer that the grave of MERIWETHER LEWIS is well tended. NOAH BROOKS, in his story of the penetration of the Western wilderness, says that "in 1848 the State of Tennessee "erected over the last resting-place of "LEWIS a handsome monument, the in-"scriptions on which duly set forth his "many virtues and his distinguished ser-"vices to his country." The place of sepulture was lonely, on the outskirts of the little town of Hohenwald, a Swiss settlement. LEWIS'S death was violent and mysterious. As Governor of the Territory of Louisiana, he was called to Washington early in September, 1809. Making his way eastward through Tennessee by way of Chickasaw Bluffs, he stopped one day, as light was failing, at a wayside log inn. There the great captain died in the night, whether by his own hand or the victim of a murderous ruffian may never be known. There were many contradictory stories. His comrade and fellow-officer, WILLIAM CLARK, a brother of the famous frontier leader and victor of Kaskaskia and Vincennes, GEORGE ROGERS CLARK, died peacefully in his bed at St. Louis Sept. 1, 1838, being at the time Superintendent of Indian Affairs.

MERIWETHER LEWIS had a sincere mourner in JEFFERSON. LEWIS had been the President's private secretary and was familiar with his plans for the exploration of the new territory. When the news came of the tragic end, the ex-President wrote a memoir of his fellow-Virginian. Reviewing LEWIS'S accomplishments and manly virtures, he said: "With all these qualifications, as "if selected and implanted by nature in "one body for this express purpose, I "could have no hesitation in confiding "the enterprise to him." The Original Journals have been made the basis of all accounts of the Lewis and Clark expedition, and, without editing, they are themselves a confirmation of JEFFERSON'S judgment. There is no more fascinating record of American adventure and observation. The naturalist, hunter, geographer and student of the aboriginal tribes all acknowledge their debt to the Journals. Pleasant it is to recall that DANIEL BOONE, at the time a veteran, bade the explorers godspeed as they passed from his sight at La Charrette, on the Missouri, "a little village of seven poor houses."

On the eve of the Philadelphia Sesquicentennial it would be fitting for the American people to consider what they owe to LEWIS and CLARK, the pioneers, and raise appropriate memorials to them.

HUMOR AND WIT IN MUSIC.

An English critic has been writing again on the old subject of what music can "express," especially in relation to the expression of humor. He comes to the conclusion that the humor supposed to exist in instrumental music is more often read into it by the listener than inherent in the music itself. Music, except in so far as its significance is interpreted or made for it by words, expresses itself and little more. It expresses "musicality." It is incommensurable with ideas outside the realm of music, ideas of another sort. What it may be taken to express more than itself is something attributed to it by some convention, some association, either natural or incongruous; some kind of hieroglyphic not essentially a part of the music itself.

A wise professor of that modern branch, "appreciation" of music, was asked by an earnest pupil what he supposed BEETHOVEN "meant" by the first theme of the "Eroica" symphony. There was the title, "heroic"; and there was the legend of its original intention to "commemorate a great man," namely, NAPOLEON. Therefore the themes must all have some "meaning" cognate with the conception of a great man. The wise professor answered that he knew just what BEETHOVEN meant; and going to the piano, played the theme with the comment, "He meant that." A truer answer never was given. Music expresses itself and means itself. It is true that composers have for several centuries tried on occasion to make it mean something else; but it never does, except by dint of explanation, hint or convention conveyed to the listener's mind by some other medium than music, which he must gain before he listens. If he offers his own explanation, he is very likely to join the very numerous ranks of those who have ludicrously failed.

The "humorous" effects of eccentric instrumentation, as the cavorting of the bassoon or the squawking of the oboe or the glissando of the trombone, are easy enough; but the "humor," as the English writer justly says, resides in the queer sound rather than in the music itself. RICHARD STRAUSS has done some brilliant things in the way of suggestion. They are successful—after you know what he intends to suggest. There are things wrought by BEETHOVEN'S drastic and unconventional temper; but they are rather abstractly humorous than evocative of any particular point; and even then are usually dependent on effects of incongruity or violent contrast. MOZART wrote a musical joke representing a band of incompetent and blundering village pipyers; and HAYDN wrote his "Farewell" symphony. But neither of these can be taken as a specimen of humor inherent in music itself; the humor is rather in the circumstances of the performance.

It would be easier to say that there is wit in music; but it is almost always some technical procedure that raises the admiration of the knowing. Those who hear "Pinafore" at the Century Theatre, and the other Gilbert and Sullivan revivals that everybody hopes will follow it, will find numerous specimens if they are willing to listen for them. At the risk of being pedantic and incomprehensible, let us point out the ensemble near the end of the first act planning the elopement, where the mysterious phrase in minor, divided among Josephine, Hebe and Ralph ("This very night—with bated breath—and muffled oar," &c.), is immediately thereafter used in major as the brilliant subject for the following septet. These be horrific words; but they describe something not difficult to hear and a joy to those who can hear it—not only because it is witty but because it is fascinating music. That, after all, is the real test. Such things are worth more than the more or less doubtful attempts at humor in music.

MUSEUM LOANS.

Conservative folk in England are alarmed at the proposal that the British Museum be authorized to lend objects to other museums. Supposing one should come to London to study a particular piece, only to find that it was temporarily on exhibition in Liverpool, would this not at the same time greatly inconvenience the visitor and in a sense be a sort of deception practiced upon him? The British Museum, it is argued, like the Bank of England and, for that matter, the entire British Empire, has a reputation for "staying put." The world relies on it, and so has reason to expect that an article known to be in its possession will always be available. Advocates of the change, on the other hand, while admitting the possible disappointment of visitors, hold that the advantages to persons outside of London in being able to see collections loaned by the British Museum outweigh the awkwardness of having things in the Museum temporarily removed.

The matter is not without interest in this country. Here the practice of loaning has long been advocated. During the last year especial efforts have been made to stimulate the exchange of collections between museums in different parts of the country and to encourage museums to lend lesser collections to schools. The purpose is twofold—to broaden the general interest in museum exhibits and to enable other centres to profit from particularly fine collections which happen to be in the possession of a certain museum. Numerous difficulties have arisen, foremost among which is the danger attending transportation, with the closely allied problem of expense and of the high cost of adequate insurance. At the same time it has been objected that, inasmuch as museums will be unwilling to lend their best things, what they can pass along will necessarily be only second rate, and so will lead to the creation of false standards.

In England this objection has also been raised, but the answe is that the big museums as a rule have duplicates of many objects, as well as a very large number of items of the same class but of varying quality. From this surplus of less fine specimens, many of which it is impossible to exhibit adequately where they are, loans can be made. It is the contention of those who favor the plan that in this manner museums outside of the great capitals may receive material much better than anything which at the moment they possess, and so can offer better opportunities for study to local visitors.

How far the museums will avail themselves of this opportunity is another question. Department heads are never partial to sending away valuable specimens. Nor are other museums overanxious to receive second-rate material even as a loan. But the experiment is worth a trial. Doubtless with certain types of exhibits it will be found impracticable. With others, however, such as etchings and engravings, it should prove of genuine value.

A YEAR'S FRENCH BOOKS.

Great complaint continues to be made by some French writers, especially novelists, of their hard case since the war. The elder ROSNY says that authors are become "pariahs." The price of everything but their labor has gone up. One ingenious gentleman suggests that men of letters organize to get publishers—and better prices from the public. Still, in 1924 nearly 9,000 books were published in France. Of these, 2,000 dealt with economic and social life, 1,200 with the historical sciences, 920 with teaching, 718 with the religions. To the science of medicine were devoted 729, to the other sciences 378, to geography and travel 334, to art 217, to philosophy 182. Two-thirds of the year's crop to serious and solid intellectual labor.

There were 291 volumes of plays or works about the drama, 358 issues of poems, 352 books about literature, 1,148 novels or collections of stories. One sympathizes with the mute inglorious Hugos and Baudelaires, but isn't the present birth rate of verse high enough in France? Some croakers would be glad to see it sharply reduced in the United States. Don't 1,100 novels and story books sufficiently supply the demand for the "creative" fairy books of today? And some of these have had, or will have, many editions. The French novel is an article of almost universal export. With no lack of sympathy for distressed novelists, we may feel less impressed by that distress than by the pre-eminence of those soberer and less remunerative studies which are a constant glory of French civilization.

BY-PRODUCTS

To Put It Briefly.

In general it may be said of the statistical evidence adduced at the wet-and-dry hearings that the final impression is the familiar one. As the result of prohibition there has been a notable increase in the number of drunken automobile drivers arrested for speeding in the direction of savings banks and life insurance companies with increased deposits amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars annually, which is equivalent to an increase of 45 per cent. over the year 1919, as against an increase of 87 per cent. in cirrhosis of the liver and 121 per cent. in the number of admissions to the alcoholic wards, only in part compensated for by the increase of 67 per cent. in the productivity of labor in 49 per cent. of all the industrial plants in the country at the end of the fiscal year 1925, during which period the number of applications for family relief to the charity agencies showed a notable decline, partly counterbalanced by the increased number of offenders in the juvenile courts, as compared with the years 1922-25 in Canada, where no law destructive of the fundamental rights of the citizen is in force. This leaves out of account, because of exigencies of space, the crime wave, the number of building permits in the Borough of Queens and the Italian debt settlement.

Still-Life in the United States.

If there have been occasions in the past when this column was tempted to question the rigorously scientific bent of the mind of Senator James Reed of Missouri, now is the time to make confession and amends. Very few recent contributions to the exact sciences will compare with the precise figures for the moonshine industry of the United States deduced by Senator Reed from the testimony of General Andrews, head of the more or less enforcement division of the Treasury Department. General Andrews having testified that last year the prohibition agents captured 172,000 illicit whisky installations, and having been further induced to estimate that this represented 10 per cent. of all the stills now functioning under the Eighteenth Amendment, Mr. Reed promptly multiplied 172,000 by 10 and obtained 1,720,000 stills, a number impressive in itself and showing up well in the headlines. A less conscientious statistician might have been tempted to say more than 1,500,000 stills or nearly 1,750,000 stills, or even 1,700,000 stills roughly speaking. But not the rigidly scientific mind. Multiplying 172,000 by 10 gives 1,720,000, and there is no getting away from the fact.

Euclid Outdone.

This stern, not to say relentless, adhesion to the truth in all its minutiæ was exhibited by Senator Reed even more impressively, if that were possible, in the field of narrative description. His comments on the blue-print of an amateur still captured in farthest Oregon insure him a high place among contemporary realists. Not a thing was omitted. You take A, an ordinary tin pail, and place it on B and C, a couple of bricks, or, if bricks are not handy, a couple of rocks—no contingency is overlooked. You put D, another brick, inside of the pail A, surmounted by a tin can, E, and surrounded by the mash F, F, F, light a fire, G, under the pail A, put a chunk of ice, H, on top of the lid, and in the course of time there ooze out into the pan I, these little circles marked K, K, K, . . . which are the drops of the heart's desire. If at the conclusion of the Washington hearings the number of stills in the United States is not equivalent to 1,720,000 multiplied by 2, it should not be for lack of precise directions on the part of the Senator from Missouri.

A Racial Menace.

It remains only to say the final word on this question of light wines and beer. The latter might conceivably be legalized without radically affecting the fundamental principles on which this country has been built up. Beer used to be, and in their original homes still is, the beverage of the North European immigrants, whose presence in this country has never been undesirable. Light wines, on the contrary, are the favorite drink of the much less welcome Mediterraneans, Alpines and Slavs, who have been properly excluded by the Johnson law as unpromising material for nation building on this continent. But what behooves it to shut out the undesirable immigrant if his habits are taken over? An American people educated to light wines might easily proceed to develop other alien disqualifications and disabilities for life in a democracy. From the biologico-ethnologico-scientifico standpoint, therefore, one is compelled to say bear, yes; light wines, emphatically no.

In the matter of the harrowing picture of moral conditions under prohibition in Pennsylvania, as drawn by one witness, just one explanation would seem to be necessary. If it is true that domestic booze has bred a crop of drunken mothers and neglected children, why is it that the number of children in Pennsylvania dying under one year of age has fallen from 88 per 1,000 births in the year 1921 to 78 per 1,000 births in the year 1924?

The Week.

New York City is reputed to be 300 years old, but no one would suspect it from the agility with which it hastens to pay $25 for an orchestra seat. . . . From no less a source than Mr. Irving Berlin comes the message that the end of jazz is in sight. . . . The funeral march will be played by twelve saxophones and twelve sliding trombones. . . . If the Senate will not hear of any restraint on the freedom of debate, perhaps the same end might be attained by removing the seat of Government to Garfield, New Jersey. . . . The World Court has suffered a severe setback in the Illinois Republican primaries, but may yet be saved by the right kind of corn and wheat legislation. . . . The logical outcome of the San Diego court-martial featuring General Smedley Butler's toothache and the defendant's indigestion would be for one of the judges to develop a severe attack of appendicitis. . . . It is expected that Brooklyn's radio burglar, now in the hands of the police, will remain static for a good many years.

Whatever may be true for the rest of the country, it cannot be charged against Herrin, Ill., that it has broken away from the good old traditions and is now adrift. Some apprehension on this score might have been felt in January, 1925, when only four dead and six wounded showed a notable decline from the record of twenty dead in June, 1922. But in April, 1926, the number has risen to six dead, and there is no basic reason for assuming that the high mark of four years ago will not yet be eclipsed. A community which has been eight times under martial law in the space of four years is nothing if not true to itself.

GREECE UNDER PANGALOS.

New Regime Defended as a Dictatorship in Appearance Only.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Nothing is more difficult than getting a clear conception of things upon which to base a just criticism of the political condition in a modern country. It seems those who write on the Greek political situation are unwilling to recognize this, and we Greeks feel grieved when we see friendly writers of ability ignoring this difficulty.

It should not be considered strange if in the midst of all her misfortunes and in the face of the European situation Greece in making a selection among her democratic political leaders preferred a strong Government under General Pangalos, whose strength and democratic ideas had been tried. The Government of Mr. Pangalos has stabilized the internal order, which compares to that in any other European country; made economies in the administration of the State by dismissing thousands of unnecessary public servants, and is carrying out a program of public works of great importance which are destined to increase the resources of the country and benefit the Greek people. Of these great works of public utility are the drainage and reclamation works in Macedonia and Thessaly, which when completed will give to cultivation large areas of fertile lands. We may here mention that preference in the concessions for the execution of these big projects is being given to American concerns.

The Greek people proclaimed by its vote Mr. Pangalos President of the Greek Republic and the reason why all acclaim Mr. Pangalos and identify him with democracy. His past history and his present policy are without doubt undisputably democratic. This is the sentiment in Greece, and a careful investigation abroad would easily show that the same is the case wherever Greeks live in any numbers outside of Greece. All the law-abiding, industrious and progressive Greeks are in favor of Mr. Pangalos. Those who are not such, with the exception of a few, and the followers of the royalist propaganda, which is pitied and laughed at in Greece, are naturally disappointed and are against this rule because it represents order, work and industry, and the security of the Greek democracy.

In appearance the Government under Pangalos is a dictatorship, but in fact nothing but a sane and powerful democracy. We do not like to draw any comparisons, but it will be remembered that even in America there had been men who accused the father of this great democracy as tyrant.

If Mr. Pangalos is compelled to strike hard at corruption and abuse of public funds, and deal severely with demagogues and trouble-makers who put democracy in danger, this may be misinterpreted by those who are not familiar with conditions in Greece, but it causes no anxiety to the Greeks who are better acquainted with conditions in Greece.

SCHOLARSHIP AND LONGEVITY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your recent note from Princeton, regarding the intimate relationship between high scholarship and longevity, is of genuine interest to all devoted to the academic ideals of the past.

The vital records of the class of 1873, at Hamilton College, offer an even more striking example than those of '70 and '73 at Princeton.

Of the six men who graduated with the highest honors fifty-three years ago, but one has passed away. Of the remaining quintet, three are in active professional life and but one is an invalid.

Of the four men at the other end of the class, but one is living. Incidentally, he has gained more wealth than any of his classmates—all by his own efforts—and is unsurpassed in his devotion to his alma mater.

A striking instance of prolonged mental alertness among the alumni of Hamilton College is exemplified by Elihu Root, the valedictorian of the class of 1864. Of the six living members of the class, he and two others wear Phi Beta Kappa honors.

Of three living members of the class of 1860, two wear the Phi Beta Key, one being the valedictorian.

IN FLORIDA.

Is this the land where his tall dream flamed red,
Who sought to bind the years, ungarlanded
Of bitter end? And was it here those maidens' breath
Blotted like mist the tired face of death?
Are these the lordly palms that knew his face—
These the bright branches matched his spirit's grace?
Here where the proud hibiscus blossoms in the sun
And blue lupin and purple bougainvillea run
In quick unending vistas—oh, not strange
Their livingness should smite him, range on range,
With sudden beauty as of banners in the night
Within whose arabesques a fountain flashed in light! . . .
O wide palms, holding laughter like a cry
And thrusting your proud greenness ever up
Into the skies' investiture, your temples seem
The painted shadow of a painted dream!
This too bright sun dwarfs sight; I cannot hear
Life's sharp-blown bugles on this soundless air.
I want my hills, I want my forest trees.
I long for winds, I cannot here have ease.
This beauty is too languorous and deep.
The dreamer's lonely ladder stands too steep
Against the skies. And yet I must remember how Here once de Leon dreamed the eternal Now—
How here his ravished vision saw them move in mist,
The dove-white maidens of the palms, sun-kissed.
And when he looked at last into a mortal sky
And old age leered and rattling skulls piled high,
Here, then, the ashes of his dream burned white,
One moon-pale, starry, song-empurpled night. . . .
And I think that out of this, his deep dream's death,
He made Reality and breathed her vital breath. . . .
And still, I think, in some far temple grove
His maidens dance and dream and laugh and love. . . .
. . . . . .
Is this the land where his tall dream flamed red?
Were these the palms that comforted his head?

MARY SIEGRIST.

PRINCE A. TORLONIA DIES ON A TRAIN

Brother-in-Law of Duchess Mary Elsie Torlonia, Now of This City.

FAMOUS WORK BY FATHER

Drained a Lake That Had Challenged Sovereigns From the Days of the Caesars.

ROME, April 17 (AP).—Prince Augusto Torlonia died today on a train while going to Milan. His age was 71. He was a brother-in-law of the Duchess Mary Elsie Torlonia, who before her marriage to Prince Marino Torlonia was Miss Elsie Moore of New York. The Duchess recently obtained a separation from her husband.

The Torlonia family, although established little more than a century ago, is allied through marriage to many of the oldest families of the Roman patriciate.

The family's most notable achievement, perhaps, was the draining of Lake Fucino, the Lacus Fucinus of the ancient Romans, which measured forty miles in circumference. Since many of the streams of the Apennines drained into it, and there was no outlet, it was constantly overflowing its borders, carrying death and destruction into the surrounding country. The city of Avezzano had suffered frequently.

Defied Rulers for Centuries.

The draining of the lake was a task which the Caesars, the Emperors of the Holy Roman Empire and the Sovereign Pontiffs had attempted in vain for nineteen centuries. Julius Caesar was the first to propose the draining of the lake, and Caesar Augustus actually began the work. Emperor Claudius employed 50,000 men on the task for the eleven years preceding his death.

It was not until the father of Prince Augusto Torlonia, the late Duke Giulio, and his uncle, Duke Alessandro, undertook the task that the enterprise was brought to a successful conclusion, thanks to their great fortune and to the skill of the French engineers they engaged.

The engineering difficulties were enormous. The greater part of a huge tunnel needed to drain the lake into the River Liris had to be cut out of rock hundreds of feet beneath the surface. The tunnel, more than eight miles long, was considered to rank as an engineering feat with the St. Gothard Tunnel or the Suez Canal. After the lake was drained an area of more than 100,000 acres was added to Italy's cultivable domain. The tunnel work required about twenty years and was completed in 1873.

Brother's Wedding Here Notable.

The Duchess Mary Elsie Torlonia was separated from her husband, Don Marino Torlonia, Duke of Poli, Duke of Guadagnola, and Prince of Civitella-Cessi, in 1925. Her marriage in 1907 aroused much interest in New York society. She was the daughter of the late Charles Arthur Moore, head of one of the city's largest machinery concerns.

The husband of the Duchess attracted international attention in 1922 when he fought a sword duel with Count Filippo Lovatelli, a Roman sculptor. The quarrel, which broke out at a charity ball under the direction of Mrs. Richard Washburn Child, wife of the American Ambassador to Italy, is reported to have originated about a statue of the Duchess carved by Lovatelli.

Sister Selina.

Sister Selina of the Community of St. John the Evangelist and connected with the Church Charity Foundation for forty-nine years, died on Friday at the Sisters' House, 492 Herkimer Street, Brooklyn. She was 83 years old and was born Selina Smith, the daughter of the late Andrew K. and Elizabeth Steel Smith. She was a nurse in the old Homeopathic Hospital for a time and at various times was stationed at the orphanage, St. John's Hospital and the infirmary in the Home for the Aged. The burial office and requiem will be said in St. John's Chapel tomorrow morning. Interment will be in Cypress Hills Cemetery.

Actors Honor Late Dr. Houghton.

The third anniversary of the death of the Rev. Dr. George Clarke Houghton of the Church of the Transfiguration (the Little Church Around the Corner) was observed yesterday by a requiem mass attended by members of the Episcopal Actors' Guild, which has its national headquarters at the church. A bride's altar will be placed in the church in memory of Dr. Houghton. Funds are being contributed by hundreds of women who were married there by the late rector and the incumbent, the Rev. Dr. Randolph Ray. A reredos also will be placed there, the gift of parishioners and other friends of Dr. Houghton.

William Henry Davy.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April 17 (AP).—William Henry Davy, world-famous boatbuilder, is dead at his home here at the age of 83. Mr. Davy came here from London in 1872 and worked in the shops of John Blakey, where the racing craft for Harvard crews and most of the professional oarsmen of the country were built. Later he went into business for himself, for many years turning out the eight-oared shells used by Harvard, Yale, the Navy, Syracuse, University of Pennsylvania, Columbia and Wisconsin, as well as building singles, doubles and fours for racing clubs of the United States and Canada.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Unimportant Stock Movement, Very Small Business—Francs at New Low Price.

With transactions of only 374,000 shares on the Stock Exchange—the smallest business, even for a Saturday, since the "bull market" began on the news of the 1924 election—the day's changes on the stock market were purely negligible. This shrinkage in business is an interesting and not illogical sign of the times; it conforms on the whole to the expectations of people who knew from experience what usually follows a thoroughgoing readjustment such as has just been applied to the speculative market.

There were only two grounds on which continued activity was predicted by any one—inrush of such heavy buying orders at the low level of prices as should cause another upward movement, or the beginning of real liquidation, based on distrust of the business outlook. So far as could be judged, however, people who wished to put their money into stocks have been able to do so without bidding for them; during the last few weeks; actual advance in prices has usually followed "covering purchases" by recent speculators for the decline. The possibility of a selling movement by mistrustful holders has no doubt existed all along; but the general public has at any rate ceased to draw the inference of trade reaction necessarily following the break in stocks, and therefore occupies a merely passive position. Ordinarily, under such circumstances, a stock market merely marks time until some definite indication is provided of the larger trend of affairs in general trade.

Yesterday's news was colorless; it included, however, a slight further weakening of the franc, which touched the lowest price of the period. This action of the French currency has been undoubtedly disappointing to those who considered recovery logical after Briand had forced his amended fiscal reform plan through the Deputies. Probably, however, artificial support during the days of crises prevented a much more considerable depreciation at that time, and the necessary reaction is now following.

Actual restoration of confidence in the currency and the exchange market can hardly come except as the result of a visible change, not only in the political situation but in the French fiscal position itself, and that is hardly to be expected before the public debt maturity of next month is provided for. In some respects, the state of affairs in France continues to recall our own not dissimilar crisis of 1894, when the Treasury was saved from a lapse to a silver basis by the bold measures of the Administration, but when recurrent embarrassment confronted it at frequent intervals until public policies had been settled by a national election.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Trading on the Stock Exchange yesterday was almost at a standstill and the movement of prices, with few exceptions, was within an unusually narrow range. Due to the absence of any pressure to sell stock, however, a firm tone prevailed and most stocks, both in the railroad and the industrial groups, ended the day higher. The automobile shares, which were depressed on Friday by the circulation of wild statements in connection with the proposed revision of the Canadian tariff on motor car imports, recovered briskly yesterday and gains of a point or more were numerous in that section. One indication of the inactivity of the market was furnished by the action of Steel common, which moved within a range of ⅞ point, with a total of only 9,300 shares changing hands.

Dullest Saturday in Eighteen Months.

Total sales on the Stock Exchange during the two hours of trading yesterday morning aggregated 374,608 shares. This is the lightest Saturday business since Oct. 25, 1924, or just before the beginning of the stock market boom which followed the election of President Coolidge. During the first hour of business yesterday sales were at the rate of more than a million shares, but the movement of prices was so narrow that brokers started to leave the floor of the Exchange long before the closing. Many of the stocks which played an important part in the recent stock market speculation failed to appear on the tape at all yesterday.

Government Bonds Again Higher.

The firmness in bond prices which has prevailed for the better part of a month continued yesterday, though the volume of trading was on the usual small week-end scale. United States Government obligations were in active demand at small advances in prices. The Treasury 3¾ per cent. bonds, for the second successive day, made a new high record, though gaining but 1-32 of a point, at 100 28-32. The largest gain in Government securities was in Treasury 4¼s of 1952, which advanced 5-32 of a point, to 108⅝. The general market showed no change from the recent conditions which have been featured by a broad demand and stiffening prices.

Price of Silver and Other Prices.

The fall in the London price of silver last week to 29 5-16 pence per ounce, the lowest figure since July of 1916, attracted interest not only because of the Oriental influence which it showed to be at work, but because a movement of silver used to be associated with the movement of commodity prices in general. There is this much of resemblance between the two that the general average of prices also stands now very near the level of 1916. During the war and immediately afterward, the price of silver moved much like that of other commodities. From 29 5-8 pence in July, 1916, it rose to 36 9-16 in the month when we entered the war, reached 49½ in the month of the armistice, advanced with great violence during 1919 and in February of 1920 had got to 89½ pence, which was the highest price in a century. The deflation movement which carried down prices at the end of 1920 and in 1921 brought silver down to 30⅝ pence in March, 1921. It recovered to 43⅜ in the Autumn of that year, which was the highest reached since 1920. Since then its movement has been irregular, but it was noteworthy that in 1925, when commodities in general fluctuated little in price, the movement of silver was confined within the limit of 2¼ pence.

Fate of the Rock Island.

Charles Hayden, Chairman of the Board of the Rock Island, and E. N. Brown, Chairman of the Board of the St. Louis-San Francisco, will leave here next Friday for an inspection trip of the Rock Island preparatory to the consideration of a plan for merging the two roads. Mr. Hayden was first reported t obe opposed to the unification, and there has been no statement from him to date that would indicate he was in favor of it. After the San Francisco announcement that a merger was contemplated subject to the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, he made clear that control of the Rock Island was still in the hands of the public.

'Trade Balance' and 'Import Surplus.'

The showing in last week's foreign trade report for March, of $124,000,000 excess of imports over exports for the first quarter of the year, comparing with an export surplus of $205,000,000 in the same months of 1925 and an export surplus of $152,000,000 in 1924, caused some calculation of the effect of this change on the country's net credit or debit on all foreign transactions. The estimate of total balances of international payments by the Department of Commerce is nearly due for 1925; it is expected to show some reduction from the preceding year in the net balance against the United States. In 1924 the department's estimate calculated a $310,000,000 credit on visible trade account, offset by a $522,000,000 debit on capital transactions. For 1923, which was a year of import surpluses, the debit on visible trade account was $228,000,000, with, however, a credit of $109,000,000 on capital transactions. In each of those years, therefore, a net debit was left against the United States on all transactions. Thus far in the year the subscription of American capital to all accounts of foreign investments has not fallen much below last year, but the difference in merchandise trade amounts to nearly $330,000,000.

Utility Control Changes.

Recent months have seen some notable changes in the control of public utilities. Most spectacular of these was the shake-up in the United Light and Power directorate. Equally interesting was the acquisition of full control in a Pittsburgh situation by the Byllesby interests, this control having previously been shared with a banking firm. The Presidency of United Gas Improvement in Philadelphia is still vacant, although a representative of Jersey Public Service has been added to the board. In view of recent events, there is conjecture in utility circles as to what the future may hold in the way of changes in control. For example, both Philadelphia and New Jersey systems are ultimately to be linked with the large Conowingo development, together with a Baltimore utility system. Needless to say, the last named situation has already caused utility wiseacres to wonder what the future may hold in this quarter.

RUN ON CUBAN BANKS SLIGHTLY FELT HERE

Nervousness in Money Market Quickly Subsided, However, With Currency Shipments.

WORK OF FEDERAL RESERVE

Bankers Say Only $40,000,000 Was Transferred—Deny Move to Stabilize Sugar Prices.

A nervous flurry in the money market, resulting from the transfer of funds to check a bank run in Cuba, furnished one of the most interesting financial developments of last week. Although the Cuban disturbance was only a passing episode, as evidenced by a return of easy money rates after only a day or so of stringency, it illustrated the sensitiveness of the market to outside influences and directed attention to an intricate yet smoothly-running machinery of the Federal Reserve system, which was called into play to deal with the situation.

The height of the Cuban bank run was reached a week ago Saturday, when crowds of depositors demanded their money from several American and Canadian banks as a result of baseless rumors that a moratorium would be proclaimed because of the depression in the sugar industry. Large new supplies of currency became necessary. The only circulating currency in Cuba consists of American money, and under present conditions this is furnished only through the Federal Reserve system. Before the formation of the system, independent shipments of currency between the United States and Cuba were made by individual banks when dictated by seasonal conditions. Now, however, this work is handled by an agency in Havana of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta.

This bank deals only with Federal Reserve member banks, but its facilities are used indirectly by Canadian and other banks in Cuba. These banks maintain relations with American banks which are members of the Federal Reserve and merely instruct their agents when new supplies of currency are desired. The National City Bank's branch in Havana was one of those on which a run occurred. It never reached serious proportions and subsided quickly.

How Transaction was Made.

The National City desired to increase its currency supplies in Cuba and did so in the following manner:

The bank notified the Federal Reserve Bank of New York of its requirements. A debit against the National City was placed on the Federal Reserve Bank's books for the amount desired and notification sent to Washington which relayed the information to the Atlanta bank, whence the currency was sent to Key West by special train and then transported by fast steamship to Cuba. The gold settlement fund, which amounts to $600,000,000, and is owned by the various Federal Reserve Banks of the system, was the basis of the transfers. This gold is held in Washington, varying portions of it being credited to the individual Reserve Banks. Settlements are made every night, covering the transfers affecting the different sections of the country. In the Cuban case, an amount of gold equivalent to the currency shipment was transferred from the credit of the New York to the Atlanta Federal Reserve Bank. The result was an increase in the Atlanta bank's note issue, compensated by an increase in its gold assets, as represented in the settlement fund. The National City settled with the New York Federal Reserve Bank through the usual channels.

It was reported last Monday that a total of $100,000,000 had been taken out of the market for shipment to Cuba, but bankers said this estimate was far too high and that $40,000,000 would be nearer the correct figure. The run was directed chiefly against the Royal Bank of Canada's branches in Cuba and that institution's banking representatives here followed similar procedure in getting money to the island. The temporary tightness in money rates was explained by the fact that banks here called loans to increase their balances with the Federal Reserve Bank and facilitate the movements of Cuba. Under these influences, the call money rate in New York advanced to 5½ per cent., but it soon reacted and late in the week ruled at 4¼ per cent., with outside accommodation available as low as 3¾ per cent. Time money ruled easy all week, demonstrating that no basic change had taken place in credit conditions. The interior of the country sent large amounts of funds to New York, which assisted in the return to lower rates.

Reflection in Stocks Here.

The Cuban flurry also was reflected in the stock market, where sharp declines in prices took place. This was apparently the result merely of professional operations, however. The Cuban depression has been well known in financial circles for months and the bank run represented no new development. It served, however, as the basis for a drive against stocks, in connection with the temporary tightness in call money.

Under the assurances of President Machado that no moratorium in Cuba is contemplated, the bank run quickly subsided and depositors after a day or two began returning their money to the banks. The situation has directed public attention to conditions in Cuba, however, and there is wide discussion of various measures designed to end the depression caused by the low prices of sugar. Chief among these is a reduction in production, and it is expected that this will be undertaken on an organized system sponsored by the Government.

There have been reports in the last few months that interested American banks would undertake a program of sugar price stabilization, but bankers declare that such action would be impossible and that the law of supply and demand must govern the situation. While testifying before a Congressional committee last week Governor Strong of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York pointed out that, while the Reserve authorities might take effective action to check advancing prices in a commodity, there was nothing they could do to halt a decline.

The banks plan to continue a policy of patience and cooperation with the Cuban sugar industry in its efforts to work out of the present situation. The reports responsible for the recent bank run—that the banks intended to begin wholesale calling of loans and foreclosures of mortgages—are utterly without foundation. Undoubtedly, however, the banks will curtail on credit that would be devoted to a further expansion of the sugar industry under the present conditions.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE.

Successive Record Lows for French Franc—Spanish and Japanese Rates Continue Higher.

The supply of French francs continuing unchecked, the Paris rate yesterday sagged to a fresh low for all time at 3.33½ cents, reached at the close. Business was comparatively small, absence of support, or covering by those who have gone "short," helping in the reaction. Spanish pesetas and Japanese yen, on the other hand, were heavily bought, with a resultant new high in each. Sight drafts on Madrid jumped 9 points, to 14.38 cents, holding most of this right up to the end. Japanese yen advanced ½ cent, to 46.15 cents, as the Chinese documents sagged to new lows.

Business in sterling and Continentals was small, rates moving over a narrow area, with unimportant changes the rule.

TO CARE FOR EMPLOYES.

Bethlehem Steel Corporation Establishes Relief Department.

The Bethlehem Steel Corporation has established a Relief Department for the benefit of employes, according to announcement made by Eugene G. Grace, President of the corporation, at the annual meeting of the Employes' Representatives. The formation of this department is for the purpose of bringing under one management employes' beneficial associations now existing at many of the plants of the company's subsidiaries, and also to provide uniform and more adequate benefits to all employes and their families in case of sickness or death.

The step comes, said Mr. Grace, as a result of requests from many of the employes in plants where beneficial associations do not exist, and requests from the members of existing associations for a system of increased benefits to meet their needs under prevailing conditions. Mr. Grace said that under the plan as worked out by the Relief Department, substantial death and sick benefits would be paid. In addition to the support which the corporation will give to the plan, employes entitled to benefits thereunder will make contributions to it. The administration of the plan will be largely in the hands of representatives of the employes under supervision of the Relief Department. The plan will become effective June 1.

Cotton Exchange Honors R. C. Allen

Robert C. Allen, who sold his membership in the New York Cotton Exchange after fifty-one years of association with the Exchange, received the "freedom of the floor" for life yesterday at the close of the market in a tribute by Samuel T. Hubbard, former President. Mr. Hubbard, after his complimentary remarks, presented Mr. Allen with a bouquet of roses, one flower for each year of his connection with the Exchange. The only other man so to be honored by the Exchange was James F. Wenman in 1909.

SOVIET TO EXCHANGE RUSSIAN SABLE HERE

For First Time Russia Permits Export of Live Animals in Trade for Silver Foxes.

LEARNS BREEDING METHODS

Faced by Extinction of the Sable, Government Studies System to Raise It in Captivity.

Plans to Americanize the Russian sable were outlined yesterday by Leo Frank, general manager and Treasurer of Rosebank Fur Farms, Ltd., who recently negotiated with the Soviet Government an agreement to exchange animals of this breed for North American silver foxes. Mr. Frank said that until now no Russian Government had permitted the export of live sables.

Mr. Frank said that in recent years the Russian sable had shown signs of becoming extinct and that in consequence the Soviet Government two years ago started experiments to breed the animal in captivity. The wish of the Soviet Government to take advantage of breeding methods developed on this side of the Atlantic caused its entrance into the situation, he explained.

Mr. Frank said the success achieved by silver fox breeders on Prince Edward Island has caused Louis Kon, manager of the trade department of the Soviet's agency at Montreal, to turn to that section for advice on the breeding of fur-bearing animals.

"At present the Soviet Government operates two experimental farms for the breeding of sables," said Mr. Frank. "Ultimately, the Government hopes to popularize the raising of sables and silver foxes by individual farmers. We have agreed to develop this project for the Government and in return we will receive a monopoly in the export of live sables, a pair of which animals would command a price of at least $2,000 in New York. The export of sable pelts will not be in our hands, but we will have first call on the animals from which the pelts are made. As part of the agreement we will ship North American silver foxes to Russia. Profits from these transactions will be shared equally with the Soviet Government."

Mr. Frank said negotiations in Russia were carried on with Elias Rappaport, Vladimir Generosoff and other officials of the Department of Agriculture and added that the Prince Edward Islan Department of Agriculture had offered its aid in the project. He expects to have the first consignments of sables to arrive here in November, although the Soviet Government's breeding scheme may not be in full swing for another ten years.

Mr. Frank arrived in Russia on March 6 and return here April 4. He traveled with a "G" lomatic passport.

"There is an atmosphere of activity in Russia," said Mr. Frank. "Germany seems to be making great efforts to advance in the Russian trade field. I discovered that a fleet of 200 German buses are operating in the streets of Leningrad.

"The Government maintains the ruble at par by extraordinary means. Foreign money may be exchanged for Russian money only at official rates. No one is allowed to take more than $300 in cash out of the country at one time, and this regulation is enforced both by customs inspectors and censors of mail. In bringing money in excess of $300 into the country arrangements must be made for taking it out again. When I drew $1,500 from a bank I was called on to explain the purpose for which it was to be used."

GENERAL MOTORS TO REOPEN IN CANADA

Stock of American Companies Recovers Partly, but Ford Motor Drops 15 Points.

The Canadian factory of the General Motors Corporation, which was closed on Friday due to the proposed revision of the import tariff on foreign automobiles, will resume operations on Monday, according to announcement yesterday. The proposed tariff revision was the cause for heavy selling of automobile stocks on the New York Stock Exchange and Curb markets on Friday. Yesterday, however, the stocks of the American companies recovered part of the ground lost, but Ford Motor of Canada, dropped another 15 point, net. This stock, which sold as low as 440 at one time yesterday, closed at 460 compared with Friday's closing of 475.

A. P. Sloan Jr., President of General Motors Corporation, issued the following statement yesterday:

"There has not been sufficient time to analyze the effect of the changes in Canadian tariff regulations in detail, but it is very evident that it means the transfer of production from Canadian factories to American factories or in other words the employment of a further amount of American labor and the elimination of a corresponding amount of Canadian labor.

"Due to the fact that prices in Canada will be reduced it is fair to assume that consumption will be increased with corresponding increased profits to American manufacturers. So far as General Motors is concerned, its operations in Canada have been of an assembling character and it is well equipped to operate on either side of the line to any degree that the economics of the situation require. So, from the standpoint of the corporation as a whole, we are not particularly affected one way or the other."

STATE BANKING RULINGS.

Department Approves Branch for Manufacturers Safe Deposit.

Approval by the State Banking Department of the application of the Manufacturer's Safe Deposit Company to open a branch office at 1,510 Broadway upon consummation of the merger of the Gotham Trust Company and the Manufacturer's Safe Deposit was given this week, according to information yesterday from Albany. The merger agreement and copies of the proceedings of meetings of directors and stockholders were filed with the department.

Organization certificates were filed for the Citizens' Bank of Brooklyn and the Merchants' Bank of New York. Authorization certificates was issued for the Bell Investment Company, whose capital is $200,000 and surplus $50,000. Approval of the increase in capital stock from $500,000 to $750,000 of the First Mortgage Guaranty Company of Long Island City was also given, as was permission granted the Irving Savings Bank to move from 116 Chambers Street to 115 Chambers Street.

August Ihlefeld of 1,944 East Seventeenth Street and Earl Harkness of 56 Monroe Place, both Brooklyn, were appointed State bank examiners from the competitive civil service list.

OPPOSE SMALLER BILLS.

Bank Tellers Think Plan to Alter Size of Money Would Confuse Many.

Opposition to the decrease in size of paper money from 3 by 7 inches to 2⅝ by 6¼ inches, as is being considered by the United States Treasury Department, has been voiced by bank tellers throughout New York City.

The tellers declare that the change in size of the American bills will be seriously misunderstood abroad, uninformed foreigners being likely to reject the new size as counterfeit. In support of this claim they point to a recent shipment of $100,000 of gold coin to South America by the National City Bank, where each coin was carefully scrutinized to make certain it carried the die with which the natives were familiar, else they would reject the coins.

Other objections were that the change would make obsolete billfolds, cash registers and tills now in use; the smaller size bills would present difficulties in counting and in being mixed among the present larger bills, in banks and in the public's hands, probably becoming lost; and that it would be many years before the Government would succeed in doing away with the present large size bills in circulation.

GERMAN FORD PLANT OPENS.

Plans Call for Output of 700 Cars in First Month at Plotzensee.

The German plant of the Ford Motor Company, located at Plotzensee, near Berlin, has started operations, according to advices received in the financial district yesterday. The plans call for a production of 700 cars the first month.

The plant has an area of two acres of floor space and has a water frontage of 1,000 feet, served from German seaport by barge canal. Equipment for the plant was shipped from the Antwerp plant in Belgium, from the display assembling line, maintained for some time at Wembley, England, and from the Detroit plant.

Norfolk Southern Shows a Gain.

The Norfolk Southern Railroad Company reports net income of $512,523 for 1925, equal after taxes and charges to $3.20 a share on $16,000,000 outstanding capital stock. This compares with $406,521, or $2.55 a share in 1924. Profit and loss surplus at the end of the year was $4,839,661, against $4,233,474.

J. L. MOTT COMPANY TO BE REORGANIZED

Plans Call for $1,000,000 New Capital and Retiring of $2,000,000 Bonds.

SALE PENDING IN COURT

Majority Stockholders Announce Project for Financing Plumbing Concern Now in Receivership.

Plans for the purchase and reorganization of the J. L. Mott Company, manufacturers of plumbing fixtures and supplies, which has been in the hands of receivers since June 28, 1924, were announced yesterday afternoon by Herbert Noble, counsel representing a committee of majority security holders.

Provision has been made for the retirement of the $2,000,000 bond issue which matures in June, and an addition of more than $1,000,000 in fresh capital will be made by a financial group which has been interested in the concern, according to the announcement.

Backers of Reorganization.

Among those who are participating in the reorganization besides Mrs. Charles A. McLean, widow of Supreme Court Justice McLean, are Sir Ashley Sparks, American managing director of the Cunard Line; James H. Post, President of the National Sugar Refining Company; Matthew Scammell of the Scammell China Company and Frederick S. Blackall, general manager of the Taft-Pierce Company of Woonsocket, R. I.

A petition was presented in United States Court in Trenton before Judge Bodine a few days ago for permission to sell the company, according to Mr. Noble. The Court directed the stockholders and creditors to show cause why the company should not be sold, returnable April 26, he said.

The J. L. Mott Company, organized more than a hundred years ago by Jordan L. Mott, for years occupied a landmark in the Bronx. At present the firm has two plants in Trenton, with an annual payroll of about $3,000,000 and controls the Mott Southern Company of Atlanta, a sales organization, Mr. Noble said.

$1,000,000 Held by Carnegie Estate.

The Carnegie estate holds $1,000,000 Jordan L. Mott 2d, $300,000, and Mrs. McLean, $700,000, of the $2,000,000 bond issue, which falls due this Summer. Mrs. McLean also holds $900,000 in preferred stock and 12,000 shares of common stock, according to Mr. Noble.

In addition to the maturing bond issue, Mr. Noble said, the company owes $1,000,000 in obligations held by New York banks, while general merchandise creditors hold claims of $700,000. Indebtedness for current bills is placed at $300,000.

Capital stock outstanding of the Mott Company comprises 9,651 preferred and 26,941 common. The Tottenville (S. I.) Copper Company, Inc., was complainant in the receivership, Mr. Noble said.

Spring Planting Delayed and Retail Trade Declines—Industry Holds Up.

STOCK MARKET TREND DOWN

Bradstreet's Records a Drop in Exports and Gain in Imports—Dun's Finds Steel Falling Off.

Consideration of the influential factors at work during the week in the business world has led to the conclusion that cold weather and wet soils have caused a recession of retail and jobbing trade and a late start in Spring farm work, according to leading opinion.

Spring planting will be retarded this year sufficiently to cause smaller areas to be planted than last year. Retail trade activity has fallen below the rate of a year ago at this time, but industr, is still holding the advantage, maintaining the record production rates, for the most part, which were reported during the first quarter. Exports have fallen off, where imports have gained substantially. The stock market, while marked by some strong spots, has, on the whole, tended downward. Money is easier after a sharp increase, which resulted directly from large shipments of gold to Cuba to cover emergencies anticipated from the recent run. Bonds are slightly higher.

Bradstreet's this week says:

"Notable happenings of the week are the reports of a slight lessening of iron and steel buying, with some reduction of output; a notable reduction in export trade for March, with a much larger gain in imports. There was a scare of the shorts in May wheat, with some sympathetic strength in the other cereals. Cement production declined, as did shipments, and there was a reported lessening of railroad traffic in the West in early April. Soft coal mining tends to sag off and it is now at the lowest rate since last August. Coke, pig iron and some lines of steel sheets are easier. In the cotton goods industry a curious contrast is offered of reports of the greatest consumption of raw cotton in history in March, with the advices that curtailment of mill operations is either under way or contemplated. No decided gain is yet perceptible in silks and woolens, although more wool is being bought in the West."

Dun's weekly review says:

"After thirteen successive weeks, during which declines in wholesale quotations predominated, a condition has been reached where profit margins in some lines of manufacture are very close, and the absence of a broad forward demand causes a curtailment of production in some directions. Such a situation exists in most branches of the textile industry, with cotton mills in New England and the South readjusting outputs more noticeably, and steel works operations are beginning to fall off.

"The value of building permits for March increased moderately over the total for that period of last year, employment of labor, on the whole, has gone up a little and domestic consumption of cotton last month rose considerably above the amount for a year ago. In contrast, exports of that staple diminished appreciably, and this decrease, together with lower prices for the product, largely explains the contraction in the nation's overseas merchandise shipments in March. Of current statistical exhibits, this week's gain of 14 per cent. in bank clearings is a favorable phase."

OCEAN CITY WATER RATE UP.

New Jersey Board Grants a 16% Rise in Domestic Service.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., April 17.—Although declining to approve a new schedule of charges that would enable the Ocean City Water Company to increase its rate for domestic service about 24 per cent., the Public Utility Commission authorized today an advance of 16 per cent. The rates as approved range from $3.75 per 1,000 cubic feet for the first 10,000 cubic feet of water consumed, down to $1.90 per 1,000 cubic feet for all over 100,000 cubic feet consumed in any one year.

The value of the property was given as $924,024, with a gross revenue required of $133,300. The gross revenue under present rates was placed at $120,000, leaving an increase of $13,300 a year to be accounted for under the increase.

The board denied to the Ocean City Sewer Company a proposed 60 per cent. increase in rates and granted permission to file a schedule which will increase the charges 40 per cent.

The board granted permission to a transfer of the majority of the outstanding capital stock of the Wildwood Gas Company to the Southern Gas and Power Corporation.

FIRE-LOSS FRAUDS TRACED TO CROOKS

Organized Gangs Operate in the Fur Trade, Underwriters' Committee Declares.

General moral laxity in New York City has been almost directly responsible for a considerable part of the city's fire loss among business houses of the city the last two years, according to the annual report of the Committee on Losses and Adjustments of the New York Board of Fire Underwriters.

The report says that there are indications that efforts of the committee are showing results in checking the prevalence of fires by careful methods of handling adjustments and by minute scrutiny of the causes and possibilities of fires. The favorable results of the committee's work are seen to best advantage in the garment trades, where there has been a steady decline of fires and claims in the two-year period.

Following the statement that of the 1925 fire losses there are still seventy-two which are under critical investigation, the report says:

"It is believed that goods in the hands of contractors are very commonly stolen and that fires are then set to hide the evidences of the theft, either with or without the connivance of the contractor. We have had recently several cases where the contractor has had no insurance himself, but even if he were not able to obtain insurance, he still has the incentive for a fire if he must account for the disappearance of goods, and an easy way is to claim that a fire has consumed them. We have had many cases where owners of goods have claimed delivery of merchandise for manufacture to the contractor, but the evidence remaining after the fire was such that the disappearance of the quantity of goods as alleged by the contractors, was an impossibility.

"In the fur trade, our information is that there are several thoroughly organized bands, including in their memberships incendiaries, hold up men and burglars, who do not hesitate to execute bold crimes of all sorts, including the setting of fires and fraudulent bankruptcies.

"Out of 935 apparel contractors' claims reported in 1925, 826 have been adjusted with a whole sound value of $7,047,114, a loss of $1,299,924, and insurance of $11,467,162. In 1924 there were 1,337 claims and incurred loss of $1,905,535 on insurance of $17,000,000."

NEW MORTGAGE ISSUE.

Affiliated Corporation of Chicago to Make First Sale Here.

A large mortgage concern is to be introduced shortly to Eastern investors through the first public offering of securities of the affiliated Mortgage Corporation, a Chicago concern which has been active in suburban developments and in financing and constructing large city buildings. The offering consists of $500,000 of guaranteed 7 per cent. preferred stock and 5,000 shares of the common stock, made up of units of one share of preferred and one of common, with each unit priced at $125.

The corporation's eastern offices are at 51 East Forty-second Street, New York City, and its directors include R. S. Bassett, T. E. Dickenson, A. O. Eberhart, three times Governor of Minnesota and President and chief stockholder of the Suburban Homes Corporation, Chicago; Henry Ericsson, W. H. Hughes, G. L. Maxwell, R. H. Moore, E. E. Shimanek and V. M. Welsh. Payment of 7 per cent. cumulative dividends on the preferred stock is guaranteed for the next five years by the United Realty Company and the holding syndicate. The preferred is redeemable at any time after a year on 30 days' notice at 105. The present offering constitutes the only securities of the corporation outstanding.

CHEMICAL MERGER FORMED.

Five Companies Unite as American Solvents and Chemical Corporation.

The formation of the American Solvents and Chemical Corporation was announced yesterday by H. I. Peffer, President of the organization. The company was formed for the purpose of merging the Everett Distilling Company of Everett, Mass.; Jefferson Distilling and Denaturing Company of Harvey, La.; Crescent Industrial Alcohol Company of New Orleans, Western Industries Company of Agnew, Cal., and the Witbeck Chemical Corporation of Albany, N. Y.

In his announcement Mr. Peffer said: "The business of the new corporation will be the manufacture, distribution and sale of solvents and chemicals. The geographical location of the plants and the facilities of the corporation are second to none from the standpoint of service to the entire trade of the country. The merger of these corporations not only makes possible many economies, but through the pooling of individual experience, development, processes, patents, &c., it gives to the trade the latest and proved results of the combined efforts of the industry."

Submit Atlanta Merger Plan.

The Atlantic Coast Line Railroad has submitted its plan to the Interstate Commerce Commission for taking over the Atlanta, Birmingham & Atlantic Railway. The Coast Line will organize a company to be known as the Atlanta, Birmingham & Coast to operate the acquired road. Its offer is being opposed by a group of stockholders of the A., B. & A.

Individual Debits Below the Week Before But $1,489,000,000 Larger Than Year Ago

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 17.—Debits to individual accounts, as reported to the Federal Reserve Board for banks in leading cities for the week ended April 14, aggregated $11,885,000,000, or 11.2 per cent. less than the total of $13,387,000,000 reported for the preceding week.

New York City reported a decline of $1,114,000,000, while other large reductions were as follows: Boston, $135,600,000; Chicago, $80,000,000; New Orleans, $47,000,000; St. Louis, $30,000,000, and San Francisco, $22,000,000.

The largest increase, $58,000,000, was reported by Philadelphia.

As compared with the week ended April 15, 1925, debits for the week under review are larger by $1,489,000,000, or 14.4 per cent. Increases are shown for most of the more important centres, the largest increases being as follows: New York, $1,165,000,000; Philadelphia, $102,000,000; Chicago, $41,000,000; San Francisco, $29,000,000, and Los Angeles, $23,000,000.

Reductions of $25,000,000 and $20,000,000 were reported by Cleveland and St. Louis respectively.

Aggregate debits for 141 centres for which figures have been published weekly since January, 1919, amounted to $11,117,296,000, as compared with $12,557,130,000 for the preceding week and $9,690,630,000 for the week ended April 15, 1925.

Debits to individual accounts were reported to the Federal Reserve Board for banks in 257 centres, all of which are included in this summary by Federal Reserve districts:

Why 8%?

Why is it that high-grade first mortgages and first mortgage bonds in sound Florida cities pay 8% when equal security in Northern cities commands an interest rate of 6% or less?

Send for our booklet "Supply and Demand" and information about our guaranteed first mortgages and first mortgage bonds.

Miami Mortgage & Guaranty Company
Miami, Fla.

Cash Capital and Surplus Over $600,000.00. Operated in Conjunction with the Miami Bank & Trust Company

The largest and one of the oldest Trust Companies in Southeastern Florida.

6½% FIRST MORTGAGE
Real Estate Notes on High Class Properties —in Washington, D. C.

Washington, as the nation's capital, enjoys unusual stability of real estate values, with positive assurance of a steady, consistent growth. Its prosperity continues regardless of industrial or financial conditions anywhere.

TIDE WATER HEAD EXTOLS MERGER

Union With Associated Makes Competition in Orient Easier, Says A. J. Byles.

TO EXPAND SALES AT HOME

Combination Enables Companies to Profit by Disparities in Prices of Separated Areas.

The recent consolidation of the Tide Water Oil Company and the Associated Oil Company, linking two properties which hold important positions on the Pacific Coast and along the Atlantic seaboard and in the mid-continent territory, places the parent Tide Water Associated Oil Company in a formidable position, according to comment made recently by Axtell J. Byles, head of the merged organization.

"The two companies," according to Mr. Byles, "supply the greatest markets in the world; namely, the Atlantic seaboard and the New England States, and California and the Pacific Coast territory. The products of the Tide Water Oil Company, as a result of its nation-wide advertising campaign, especially in regard to lubricants, also have a nation-wide market.

"In addition to the domestic markets, which are the largest in the world, the consolidated company will be in a more favorable position to expand the huge export trade both in Europe and in the Orient. Through acquisition of the California properties Tide Water products heretofore shipped from the Atlantic Coast to the Orient in the future will be shipped from the Pacific Coast, therefore shortening the distance by some 3,000 miles and releasing tankers to serve other markets. In this way Tide Water Associated will be in a better position to compete with oil producing regions such as Russia, Mesopotamia and other foreign countries.

"The merger of these two companies," according to Mr. Byles, "also places the combination in a more favorable position as regards the supply of crude oil. In the future the company can take greater advantage of the disparity which often prevails in the producing sections of the country because of flush or overproduction. If prices are lower in the California fields than in the mid-continent territory supplies can be drawn more largely from the former, or vice versa.

"With the added facilities, from a production, refining and distributing standpoint, every effort will be exerted to expand both domestic and export sales. The retail service stations of both companies, which are now recognized as institutions along the highways of the east and west coasts are being constantly increased in number. In addition, enormous quantities of gasoline, lubricants and other products are distributed through independent service stations.

"The export business of both companies is large, growing and profitable. Benefits to be derived from being able to take advantage of the lowest cost of delivery to these markets are obvious. The tanker fleets of the affiliated companies operating through the Panama Canal and elsewhere make it possible to most economically transport crude or refined oil from sources of supply to both foreign and domestic markets, including movements between the two American coasts."

The enormous production available in the California fields was the object which brought about the consolidation of the Tide Water Oil Company and the Associated Oil Company. It was also the object which prompted numerous other consolidations of late, including the merger of the Standard Oil Company of New York and the General Petroleum Company, which is being submitted for a similar fate to the recent merger of the Pacific Oil Company with the Standard Oil Company of California.

APPROVES BROOKLYN BANK.

Controller of Currency Issues Permit for New Institution.

Permission was granted by the Controller of the Currency yesterday to a group of Brooklyn citizens to open a new commercial bank in the downtown section of Brooklyn. The bank will have a capital of $300,000 and a surplus of $150,000. It will be located at 204-6 Livingston Street in a new building.

The organization work rests with A. W. J. Pohl, 200 Montague Street, appraiser of real estate and mortgage investments. The proposed directors are Harry L. Jones, Chairman of the Jones Brothers Tea Company; Thomas V. Gould, Vice President and General Manager of Oppenheim-Collins & Co.; Otis S. Carroll, 40 Wall Street, attorney. President of Brooklyn Heights Property Owners' Association; F. J. H. Kracke, United States Appraiser of the Port of New York; Edward J. Kenny, Vice President of the William F. Kenny Company; William J. Gregory, Treasurer of the Thomas Gregory Galvanizing Works; Lawrence J. Dunn and George W. Baker, Vice President of the George W. Baker Shoe Company.

P. R. R. BUYS 2,209 CARS.

C. B. & Q. Orders 500 Hoppers—Locomotives in Demand.

The Baldwin Locomotive Works has booked orders for one Prairie type engine for the Bonhomie & Hattiesburg Southern and two Mikados for the F. C. del Amaga Company of Columbia, according to the Railway Age. The American Locomotive Company has received orders for one tank locomotive for the E. B. Eddy Company of Canada and one Mikado for the Natchez, Columbia & Mobile in addition to 25 mountain type for the Lackawanna, previously reported.

The largest car order of the week was from the Pennsylvania for 2,000 automobile cars and 200 passenger cars with 25 additional passenger units still to be placed. The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy entered 500 hoppers from the American Car & Foundry Company and the Boston Elevated contracted for 75 cars with Laconia Car Company and 25 with the Watson Manufacturing Company.

National Railways of Mexico are inquiring for five to twenty each of combination postal and express, first-class coaches, second-class coaches, combination first and second-class coaches and miscellaneous express and postal cars.

MAY SUE PAN AMERICAN.

Mexican Company Likely to Take Oil Fight to Courts Here.

According to reports in the financial district yesterday the Pan American Petroleum and Transport Company expects that papers will probably be served on Monday in a suit against the company and its subsidiaries brought by Merinos Viesca y Compania, Inc., in which the American company is charged with illegally operating certain Mexican oil lands since 1906.

In connection with the proposed suit, F. H. Wickett, Chairman of the Pan American Directors, said the claim was first made some years ago and suits filed in the Mexican courts were dismissed. The action is now being taken up in the American courts. An offer to settle the case for $3,000 had been made by representatives of the plaintiffs, according to Mr. Wickett, and this offer, under advice of Mexican counsel, had been refused. Mr. Wickett added that perhaps this statement would express most adequately the views of the company as to the merits of the claim.

ELECTRICAL TRADE BRISK.

Sales of Power Apparatus Gained Last Week, Survey Shows.

Sales of power apparatus were in large volume last week and included contracts involving $500,000 placed by a central station company on the Pacific Coast, according to the Electrical World. Virtually all sections of the country experienced a strong demand for motors. The demand for rubber-covered wire was active. A number of companies, particularly motor and transformer manufacturers, reported an increase in business for the first quarter of this year, compared with the corresponding period of 1925.

Power apparatus was in active demand in the New England district. Manufacturers reported a consistent increase in the volume of sales of motors in the New York district. In the Southeast business was satisfactory. Reports from all sections of the Middle West indicated that sales were good.

B. & O. ROAD SEEKS JERSEY TERMINAL

Negotiates With the Central for Use of its Tracks After Sept. 1.

MUST QUIT PENN STATION

The Pennsylvania Needs Facilities for Expansion—Lehigh Valley Expected to Stay.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad is negotiating with the Central Railroad of New Jersey for the use of its Jersey City terminals after Sept. 1 of this year. At that time the B. & O. will cease running its trains into the Pennsylvania Station, as the officials of the Pennsylvania have decided that the facilities devoted to the B. & O. are needed to expand their own service.

The B. & O. will accept this decision without contest before the Interstate Commerce Commission although application to that body, it is believed, might result in an order to extend the lease. The Baltimore & Ohio and the Lehigh Valley were placed in the Pennsylvania Station during the war by the Government as a wartime convenience. Position of the Lehigh Valley is not believed by its officials to be insecure at the present time. The departure of the B. & O., they feel, by releasing several tracks, will give ample capacity to the Pennsylvania to expand.

The program of the Pennsylvania for the coming year calls for the expenditure of $600,000 in a national advertising campaign to increase both its passenger business and efficiency of operation.

General Atterbury, President of the Pennsylvania, recently told members of the Advertising Club that what he sought more than any other one thing in his advertising campaign was an increase in the interest of the Pennsylvania employes in their work. E. M. Statler, operator of a chain of hotels which includes the Pennsylvania, he said, had found that advertising the merits of his hotels reacted directly in improving the service of their employes.

As a first step in increasing the Pennsylvania Station's facilities the road is enlarging the booths where tickets are sold.

AMERICAN CHICLE NET RISES

Income for First Quarter Exceeds Period in 1925 by $37,533.

Net income of the American Chicle Company for the first quarter of this year exceeded that for the same period last year by $37,533, according to a report made public yesterday.

Earnings during the period this year were $293,900, after interest, depreciation and Federal taxes, against $256,367 in 1925. The income in 1926 is equal, after provision for dividends on 7 per cent. prior preference and 6 per cent. preferred stocks, to $1.21 a share earned on 186,595 no par common shares outstanding. In 1924 the income equaled $1.36 a share on 155,025 shares of common.

COLBY WINS POINT IN IMBRIE STOCK SUIT

Gets Writ Restraining Voting of Founders' Shares—Receiver Named to Hold Them.

Bainbridge Colby, Secretary of State in the Wilson Cabinet, won another point yesterday in his litigation as a stockholder of Imbrie & Co., Ltd., when Supreme Court Justice Glennon signed an order restraining the voting of 100 shares of founders' stock in the corporation and appointing a receiver to take possession of the stock until Mr. Colby's action was completed.

The receivership and injunction were applied for by Isidor J. Kresel as attorney for Mr. Colby on the ground that the Imbrie Company was retiring its other stock and that the founders' shares would then have a value of $800,000. It was further asserted that the founders' stock was issued to the Imbrie Corporation as nominee of the law firm of former State Senator Ellwood M. Rabenold, and that when the case came before Justice Levy recently he ruled that there was substantially no consideration for the transfer of the founders' shares, and for that reason Mr. Kresel argued that they should be declared void, which would leave the holders of the other stock owners of the estimated $800,000 assets of the corporation.

The application to prevent the voting of the founders' stock was made on the ground that they were the only shares carrying voting rights and that if these rights were exercised the Rabenold law firm would take action inimical to the rights of Mr. Colby. The plaintiff also demands the cancellation of fifty shares of preferred and twenty-five shares of participating stock standing in the name of the Adams Securities Corporation, also a holding company for the firm of Rabenold & Scribner, on the ground that they have been issued improperly. If this is done, Mr. Colby, as owner of 250 of preferred and 125 of participating stock, will be the majority stockholder.

The defendants contend that Mr. Colby paid for his stock with full knowledge that the corporation had a right to vote to redeem his shares after April 1 last and that he had no rights except to take payment for the stock as agreed.

AUTOS USING MORE COPPER.

245,000,000 Pounds Consumed in 1925, New High Record.

The Copper and Brass Research Association issued an estimate yesterday that the consumption of copper by the automobile industry in 1925 totaled more than 245,000 pounds, a new record for all time.

Production and registration of motor vehicles both reached new high figures in 1925. The car output totaled 4,314,636, an increase of nearly 20 per cent. over 1924, and registrations passed the 20,000,000 mark, showing a rise of 13 per cent since 1924. Both factors contributed to the increase in amount of copper consumed.

Preference for closed car models—34 per cent. of production in 1923 and 56 per cent. in 1925—has increased the copper requirements for lighting systems and for brass body hardware. The growing use of mechanical refinements, such as air filters, oil cleaners, central chassis lubrication and four-wheel brakes likewise call for more copper.

ANOTHER PROFIT OPPORTUNITY

Last Fall we directed clients' attention to the unusual profit opportunity created by the Virginia-Carolina Chemical reorganization—unusual because of the satisfactory profits in prospects, with small risk.

Those who took advantage of that opportunity have a profit of about 40% on the investment, in spite of the drastic stock market liquidation of the past six weeks.

RIGHT NOW, another combination of conditions is giving us ANOTHER PROFIT OPPORTUNITY of somewhat similar character.

THIS OPPORTUNITY, with an outline of the profits to be anticipated, has been analyzed carefully and presented to clients. Temporarily, a few copies of this analysis—reserved for FREE distribution—are available.

NEW RAILROAD HEAD ROSE FROM RANKS

J. B. Hill, President of the N. C. & St. L. Started as an Operator and Clerk in 1898.

ALWAYS WITH SAME ROAD

Had Been Assistant to President and Treasurer From 1922 Until His Recent Election.

James Brents Hill, recently elected President of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis to succeed Whiteford R. Cole, who resigned to accept the Presidency of the Louisville & Nashville, was formerly Treasurer and Assistant to the President.

Mr. Hill's rise to the head of a railroad has been extremely rapid. As recently as 1922 he was a clerk in the executive department. The years he has spent in railway work—incidentally all of them have been with the N., C. & St. L.—coupled with hard study of the general problems of railroading have equipped him for the more responsible position he has received.

It is said of Mr. Hill that no man on the N., C. & St. L. has a more detailed knowledge of the property. This railroad, while small, ranks very high in earning power, its net income in every year having been consistently large, except in 1921, when a net deficit was incurred. It is estimated that the net income for 1925 approximated $15 a share on the $16,000,000 outstanding capital stock, compared with $12.22 a share in 1924 and $10.18 in 1923. The present dividend rate of 7 per cent. has been maintained since 1917. Previously the rate had been between 5 and 6½ per cent. The road is controlled by the Louisville & Nashville, which is in turn controlled by the Atlantic Coast Line. The L. & N. owns $12,000,000 of the $16,000,000 stock of its subsidiary.

The section of the road between Atlanta and Chattanooga is considered one of the busiest in the Southeast. In addition to the six passenger trains operated over this section each way daily, there is usually a movement of twice as many freight trains. The company recently announced plans for the substitution of motor bus service at many points on the line where passenger train operation had become unprofitable and the conditions of the highways made the substitution of buses possible. This new development is expected to engage much of Mr. Hill's attention.

Mr. Hill was born Nov. 14, 1878, at Spencer, Tenn., and was graduated from the George Peabody College for Teachers at Nashville in June, 1898. Prior to that time he had his first experience on a railroad as a relief operator on the N., C. St. L. at Bon Air, Tenn. After his years at college Mr. Hill returned to railway service in August, 1898, as a clerk and operator on the N., C. & St. L. at Sparta, Tenn. He later served as a clerk and stenographer in various division offices, and in 1903 was transferred to the office of the Secretary and Treasurer. He was promoted to transfer agent and Assistant Secretary in 1915, and three years later was made chief clerk to the Federal manager of the road.

Upon termination of Federal control he was appointed transfer agent, Assistant Secretary and chief clerk to the President of the N., C. & St. L., being promoted to Treasurer and assistant to the President in April, 1922.

TRADE CHAOS IN CHINA DESCRIBED BY BANK

Effects of the Civil War on Transportation and Foreign Commerce.

Reviewing trade conditions as affected by the Chinese war, the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China reported to its shareholders at the recent London annual meeting that China "has caused great anxiety both to banks and traders. Strikes and boycotting caused a complete collapse of business in Shnghai for a couple of months, and following on this civil war, suspended for a while, burst out with increased intensity. The railways have been entirely occupied by the military. Transit of goods, whether from coast ports to the interior or from inland to the coast, has been almost impossible, and the unfortunate Chinese in inland towns and villages have suffered indescribably.

"Every form of lawlessness has been rampant, and civil government ceased to operate. The situation in North China is still very confused, but, on the whole, is now more satisfactory. Unfortunately, the trouble spread in an almost aggravated form to South China, the British colony of Hongkong and the ports of Canton, Wuchow and Swatow being chiefly affected.

"As regards South China, especially Hongkong, the serious boycott maintained against that important British colony, which boycott has its headquarters in Canton, is a very disturbing factor, and seriously menaces our trade, which has practically been at a standstill in South China for many months now. As an instance of this, I may mention that for the period July to December of last year the number of British steamers that were able to use the treaty port of Swatow owing to the boycott was only 88, whereas in the previous year 1924, over a corresponding period, some 680 British vessels entered that port.

"The shipping position at Canton is equally bad, as during July to December of last year no British steamers at all were entered, whereas for the same period in 1924, excluding river steamers, 209 were entered, representing a gross tonnage of approximately 500,000 tons."

REPORT OF COPPERMINES.

Produced 4,811,659 Pounds During 1925, Company Announces.

The annual statement of the Consolidated Coppermines Corporation as of Dec. 31, 1925, shows current assets of $601,473, and current liabilities of $101,043. Total assets were valued at $10,910,768. Capital stock outstanding amounted to $6,205,796, and the paid-in surplus was reported at $4,058,020.

The company produced 4,811,659 pounds of copper during 1925, and the copper on hand and in transit at the close of the year was inventoried on the basis of 12¼ cents a pound. During the year 236,391 pounds of copper metal was produced from leaching. The cost, including a fair proportion of overhead, was 8½ cents a pound.

FINDS FAST TRAINS STIMULATE TRAVEL

Boston & Maine Experimenting to Beat Auto Competition in Passenger Service.

LOSSES CUT BY SPEEDING

Results of Pine Tree Limited's Success to Bear Fruit in Faster Summer Schedule.

Indications that speeding up passenger trains will bring back to the railroads part of the heavy losses they have sustained in passenger travel during recent years are contained in the results of a four months' study just completed by the Boston & Maine. As a result, traffic and operating officials of that road are trying to work out further improvements in the running time of passenger trains.

Like many other railroads, the Boston & Maine in the past two or three years has been faced with a serious problem through the continued decline in passenger earnings. These losses amounted in 1925 to $1,580,000 and in 1924 to $1,720,000. The effect of a quickened service in stopping these losses has therefore been considered a matter of prime importance.

The four months' study embraced through patronage between Portland and Boston in both directions on the Pine Tree Limited and on other trains on that run which were speeded up last fall. It showed that the sale of tickets between these points increased 9 per cent., while on other divisions as a whole there were continued losses.

The loss of the entire system for the same period was approximately 6 per cent.

In the months of November and December, 1925, when the faster schedules between Portland and Boston had had an opportunity to establish themselves with the passenger public, and before the volume of rail traffic was swollen as a result of Winter conditions on the highways, travel between these points increased respectively 10 and 12 per cent.

The figures indicated that not only did the railroad gain business from the bus and private automobile, but that the faster schedules apparently are an actual stimulus to increased travel. These data are now the subject of further study by the Boston & Maine, in connection with the preparation of its Summer schedules.

The study showed that the Pine Tree Limited averaged 177 passengers per trip in each direction in January, and 187 each way in December. With the increased travel of the Christmas season the Pine Tree's average number of passengers per trip east bound in December was 214.7 with an average number of westbound riders at 161.4.

100 Pace Alumni at Luncheon.

More than 100 members of the Pace Alumni Association met yesterday for a luncheon at the Machinery Club, 50 Church Street. William H. West, President of the American Institute of Accountancy, was the principal speaker. He traced the history of accountancy, pointing out that the present system of double entry bookkeeping was originated in the latter part of the fifteenth century.

BIG EXPORT TRADE PUTS WHEAT HIGHER

Sea board Interests Say That 10,000,000 Bushels Have Changed Hands in Week.

JULY OPTION TO THE FRONT

Prices Make a Four-Cent Jump Early and Pass a Three-Cent Gain at the Close.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 17.—Wheat values were on the upgrade from start to finish today and, with general buying to reinstate lines sold out the previous day and reports of an immense export business, deferred deliveries advanced 3¾@4c to a new high on the present upturn and closed with net gains of 3¼@3¾c. May was inclined to lag and was up only 2⅝c.

Pronounced strength in Winnipeg, where exporters and mills were reported as big buyers, had considerable influence here. Winnipeg gained 4⅛@4½c for the day. The seaboard failed to confirm the Winnipeg claims of a large business. In some quarters it is claimed that Canadian mills have been making sales of flour of late equal to 500,000 bushels wheat per day.

Between the buying by mills and the export business, the surplus in "the pit" here has been absorbed, and there are no new hedging sales coming into the market.

Seaboard interests estimate that export sales of wheat in all positions the past week aggregate 10,000,000 bushels of all kinds, and that charters for ocean freight for May loading are about the largest on record.

The big buyers of May and July wheat today were the sellers of yesterday. The short interest on foreign account in May wheat has been reduced, and commitments on the long side of July and September have increased, some of the foreigners who have profits in these new crop futures were taking them at the close. There was steady buying of July and selling of September at the widest difference of the season.

Worlds shipments are estimated at 10,000,000 bushels against 11,979,000 bushels last year. New crop hard Winters are on export via the Gulf for July-August shipments.

Holland and Belgium have also bought wheat there. Supplies afloat are smaller than last year. Requests for offers of cash wheat from Duluth and Minneapolis brought no response. This was the basis for buying of May by one of the largest sellers yesterday.

Cash premiums on hard Winters were one cent lower here at 7½ to 8½ cents over May.

Primary arrivals today were 475,000 bushels; week ago 610,000; last year 263,000. Shipments were 318,000 bushels; week ago 420,000; last year 478,000.

Buying of corn on a liberal scale was attributed to shorts and Eastern operators and the close was 1 and 1½ cents higher.

Elevator interests are buying May and selling July corn and oats to turn over their hedges while in rye longs are liquidating and cash interests are taking the May and selling the July.

Oats gained ⅝ and ⅞ cent and rye 3 and 3⅜ cents for the day, with export sales of 200,000 bushels of rye reported at the Seaboard.

Primary arrivals of corn today were 452,000 bushels; week ago 464,000; last year 314,000. Shipments 395,000 bushels; week ago 498,000; last year 800,000.

Wild Wheat Market at Winnipeg.

WINNIPEG, Manitoba, April 17 (AP).—Wheat prices advanced today from 3⅞ to 4¼ cents in one of the wildest sessions of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange during recent months. Steady export buying and the inclination of the Chicago market to follow the local trend were the chief factors in the bullish movement.

RUBBER CONTINUES DOWNWARD TREND

Prices for Active Months Drop 130 Points, Canceling the Recovery of Friday.

Crude rubber futures yesterday resumed the decline which had been in effect all week, except for a brief upturn on Friday. Prices for the active months, May and July, dropped 130 points, putting them through the previous lows and establishing new record points for about a year. This reaction canceled all of the recovery enjoyed on Friday. Business on the Rubber Exchange was the most active half-session on record, 272 contracts changing hands.

The market opened weak as London cables came in showing spot sheets down 1d at 22½d. Added to this was the expected increase in shipment figures which will be made public tomorrow.

Range of prices for the active positions follow:

	High	Low	Close	Prev. Close
May	47.00	46.60	47.00	48.30
July	45.50	45.00	45.10	46.40

Dec.	44.50	44.00	43.50N	45.20
Jan.	44.70	44.50	43.30N	45.00

Other months closed: June $46, August $44.70, October $44, November $43.80, February $43.80, March $43. Spots were quoted at $47.50.

Business in the street market felt the influence of the reaction on the Exchange, all grades moving off 2 cents a pound. The turnover was very large for a Saturday. Spot sheets were quoted at 47 cents, and first latex crepe at 48 cents.

BAD CHECKS APPEAR HERE.

Better Business Bureau Says They Are Drawn on Fictitious Bank.

A warning that numerous bad checks were being circulated throughout the financial district was issued yesterday by the Better Business Bureau.

It is evident, according to Bureau officials, that either one man or a small group is floating the bogus checks, as the several which have come to the notice of the Bureau were made out in the name of the Lesser, Goldman Cotton Company, of St. Louis. They are drawn on the "Liberty National Bank of St. Louis," but inquiry revealed that there was no such bank in that city.

One Wall Street banking house within the last few days cashed one of the worthless checks for $700, the Bureau reports, and a number of them have appeared in other cities.

Beneficial Issues $1,230,077 Loans.

New loans of $1,230,077 were made during March by the seventy-nine offices in the Beneficial Loan Society system, compared with $1,185,543 in March last year. Operating profits of the society, after reserve for taxes and losses, reached $141,848, as against $122,166 for March, 1925, or more than three and one-half times bond interest.

COTTON DECLINES IN HEAVY TRADING

New Low Ground Reached in Sales of Both Old and New Crops.

Liquidation in cotton continued during early trading yesterday and carried all the new crop positions to lowest levels of the year. Covering of May obligations as that month approached 18¾c finally arrested the decline, and a later recovery of 10 points or more left final quotations 1 to 7 points lower on the day. Not only were temperatures in Southern States more seasonable but less rain fell than for some time, while generally fair weather predictions for western sections over Sunday increased the selling pressure on distant positions. More cotton changed hands than for several weeks, transactions being quite evenly distributed between the old and the new crop.

Weakness in Liverpool, where October and later months closed in new low ground for the season, had an unsettling effect at the opening of the local market. Execution of overnight selling orders furnished a large business on the call at a decline of 8 to 15 points. Pressure on both July and October broke those positions more than other months, one block of 10,000 bales of October carrying that month to 17c. Domestic and foreign mill interests became increasingly heavy buyers of May as the session progressed, and block after block of May contracts taken from the ring steadied the balance of the list.

Spot interests furnished the May wanted and took July or October in exchange. The quantity of October purchased against May sold by a few houses reached the largest totals of the year and proved the outstanding feature of the season. The spread between May and December widened to 185 points in final trading, about as wide a difference as at anytime this year.

Census figures on linters produced showed 995,000 bales, against 791,000 last season.

COTTON-SEED PRODUCT IN 8 MONTHS LARGE

Increase in the Country's Crushings Since Last July 837,969 Tons.

WASHINGTON, April 17 (AP).—Cottonseed crushed in the eight-month period from Aug. 1 to March 31 totaled 4,973,534 tons, compared with 4,135,565 in the same period a year ago, and cottonseed on hand at mills March 31 totaled 415,277 tons, compared with 323,806 a year ago, the Census Bureau today announced.

Cottonseed products manufactured during the eight-month period were: Crude oil produced 1,434,833,682 pounds, compared with 1,247,507,697 in the same period a year ago, and on hand at mills 90,620,925 pounds, compared with 88,024,672. Refined oil produced 1,155,891,529 pounds, compared with 1,044,864,846, and on hand at mills 303,678,337, compared with 372,378,714. Cake and meal produced 2,320,380 tons, compared with 1,895,299, and on hand at mills 348,496 tons, compared with 182,737. Linters produced 995,566 bales, compared with 791,620, and on hand at mills 209,822 bales, compared with 127,198.

Exports of cottonseed products during the eight months were: Crude oil 31,290,861 pounds, compared with 19,414,141 for the same period a year ago; refined oil 19,397,247 pounds, compared with 21,774,658; cake and meal 308,008 tons, compared with 398,639, and linters 67,280 bales, compared with 130,102.

COTTON GOODS CUT LIKELY.

South Carolina Manufacturers Find Future Demand Poor.

Special to The New York Times.

SPARTANBURG, S. C., April 17.—Drastic curtailment of production of cotton goods by South Carolina manufacturers is imminent, it was disclosed yesterday in an important conference between approximately 100 manufacturers and approximately twenty leading commission houses.

Following the meeting J. C. Ivans, President of the South Carolina Cotton Manufacturers' Association, who acted as spokesman for the closed meeting, said that a dangerous situation for manufacturers of cotton goods has been created because the futures market has been selling below the spot market for sixty days.

Commission men brought to the attention of the manufacturers the fact that buyers of cotton goods feel, under present conditions, that the cloth market will be lower in the future than now. The demand for cotton goods is now extremely poor, resulting in complete paralysis of the market.

SUGAR MARKET STRONGER.

Cuba Asks Limit on Grinding to 90% of Original Estimates.

The firm tone of the sugar market was augmented yesterday by reports from Cuba that the Government had sent out questionnaires to all central mills asking the officials to limit their grinding to 90 per cent. of their original estimates, and that a majority of the mill owners had agreed. The Cuban Cabinet recently decided to ask mill owners to restrict their output 10 per cent.

Offerings were held yesterday at 2¾c with buyers at 2⅝c, at which the final sales were made. Arbuckle Brothers purchased 10,000 bags of Cubas in port and 5,000 bags of Porto Rican due April 23, on this basis. New developments in refined sugar were absent, the price remaining at from 5.25c to 5.60c a pound.

BROOKLYN MARKET STRONG AND ACTIVE

JUDGE SHERMAN HOME SOLD

Apartment Planned for the Site—Good Demand for Private Dwellings.

The Brooklyn market, which has been active from both a speculative and investment standpoint during the past week, closed strong yesterday with a number of important transactions.

In the Columbia Heights section, where many of the fine old residences are disappearing to make way for modern structures, the home of the late Judge Sherman at 176 Columbia Heights and 179 Furman Street adjoining in the rear has been disposed of.

Occupied now by the old three-story and basement brick and frame structure on Columbia Heights, between Clark and Pierrepont Streets, and by a three-story and basement building on Furman Street, the plot measures 150 feet deep and is a little more than 27 feet on the street front. The purchaser is the Gottark Realty Corporation of New York, the sale being negotiated by the Leverich organization, with Harvey Miller Company as co-broker.

The Merchant's Point of View

PROSAIC as it may seem, the principal factor affecting mercantile business during the past week—and, for that matter, since the beginning of the calendar Spring—has been the persistence of cold weather. In men's garb it has influenced all wearables from underwear to overcoats, while in women's garments it has held up purchases of what would be regarded as seasonal ones. A few days of continuous moderate temperatures would produce a quick change and hasten the buying usually incident to this period of the year. There is no way of hastening this result, and so there is some anxiety on the part of those who have been producing goods that ought to be selling. Not yet, however, is there any disposition to cut prices or start clearance sales, because quite a little time still remains before really hot weather is likely to set in. Retailers are waiting for consumers to act, and, while doing so, are backward with their orders on producers or wholesalers. Way back on the line are the primary markets which are in waiting for the buying impulses to come their way. Nobody appears to be willing to take much of a chance, more especially because there persists an impression that any change in prices is more likely to be a reduction than an advance. It looks as though it was a state of mind that needs changing rather than any alteration in general conditions, which, according to the best reports, are mostly favorable.

Also Hit by Piecemeal Buying.

In most of the discussions that have been evoked by the hand-to-mouth buying policy, stress has been placed on the plight of the producer. This is markedly true in the case of textile fabrics. It would appear, however, that there is another factor by whom the burden of the policy in vogue is also severely felt, and that is the converter or finisher of cotton goods. The grievance he has was given utterance to at a joint meeting here, the other day, of the National Association of Finishers of Cotton Fabrics and the Converters' Association. The speaker was M. J. Warner, President of the last-named body. In certain branches of the converting business, he said, an interval of five months elapses between the time when contracts for a fabric are placed and when it is delivered. Of old, the jobber used to take his merchandise in November and carry it until February, when he would receive his orders from the retailer, who would indicate the fabrics in favor for the coming season. This information would be given by the jobber to the converter, who would prepare additional supplies of such goods. The initial order of a big mail order house would be for 40 per cent. of the goods required and the producer would pledge himself to furnish the other 60 per cent. if needed. Now that same house orders 10 per cent., or less, of its requirements. If the business is accepted the converter must supply the remainder of the goods that may be needed, and in order to do so must prepare for it in advance. If goods are not taken and pile up on the converter's hands, the latter is at the mercy of buyers who can fix their own terms. It results in business being more or less of a gamble. Conceding the correctness of all this, the way out of the difficulty is not made apparent. How is the buying policy to be changed, or by whom?

Figures of the Country's Foreign Trade.

Foreign trade figures for March, which were published during the past week, caused a little surprise. It was not so much so that the merchandise imports exceeded the exports, because this happens every once in a while. But March was the third month in succession for this to happen, and such an occurrence is very rare. In 1923 each of the four months, March, April, May and June, showed a preponderance of imports over exports of merchandise. But the differences then were a little more pronounced than since the first quarter of this year. In this last period the imports were greater than the exports by $123,331,566, while in the 1923 period the excess totaled $151,874,021. Every one recognizes that under ordinary conditions the merchandise exports from this country should exceed the imports. The reasons why they have not done so during the first quarter of this year are not far to seek. To begin with, there was an increase in the value of the imports, as well to some extent in their quantity, while there was a decrease in both the value and quantities of the exports. The imports included mostly raw materials, such as rubber and silk, which are ordinarily large items but which, especially the former, loomed up rather more than usual because of high prices. The biggest item in the exports in March to show change was cotton, of which about 220,000 bales less were shipped out than in the same month last year, while the price was decidedly lower. Grain shipments were also less. The large increase in imports of raw materials is a token of the increased prosperity of this country. But it is safe to assume that an excess in the value of merchandise imports over exports is only a temporary condition liable to change without notice.

A Rise in Duties on Taximeters.

As far back as May 4, 1923, the Tariff Commission started an investigation of taximeters on the application of a Pittsburgh concern which wanted the duties increased under the flexible section of the tariff act. On the 12th day of December, 1925, President Coolidge issued his proclamation increasing the rate from 45 per cent. ad valorem and 5% additional specific duty to 27.1 per cent. on the American selling price, plus the same specific duty. In plain English this means an increase from a little over $20 to nearly $41. A pamphlet on the subject just received from the Tariff Commission is rather illuminating on the methods leading to the result. From this it appears that there are now two concerns in this country which manufacture the machines. It also appears that the number of taximeters imported have been steadily decreasing and that some domestic ones are exported. All told, the number and value of the imports are comparatively trivial. In 1924, the latest year for which the commission gives figures, there were imported 842 machines valued at $26,780. A queer way of estimating the relative costs of the domestic and foreign meters is resorted to. Thus the price of the foreign ones does not include the cost of affixing them to vehicles, which is included in the price of the domestic, nor "transportation, import duty and relatively large items for mechanical adjustments, marketing expense and installation." None of the figures of cost is recent, the latest harking back nearly three years. It is manifest, under the circumstances, that there was no basis for estimating the difference in production costs of meters between here and abroad. Still this proved no bar to an increase in duties for the benefit of two domestic factories. A few more instances of the kind will be sufficient to force the flexible provisions of the tariff into the discard.

Limits to the "O P M" Business Way.

There is a chance that an expression recently coined in England may find its way to use in this country because of its fitness in describing succinctly a method of doing business which has become quite widespread here. It arose in this way: A speaker on economic conditions in the United Kingdom, in calling attention to certain hazardous trade practices, said that one of the dangers was in doing business on the "O P M" plan. By this he said he meant operating with other people's money. This had reference not only to the usual credit methods, but was more especially directed to the increasing amount of buying on the instalment plan. There is no criticism of this plan when payments are contracted to be made for the purchase or equipment of a home, provided always such payments are restricted to amounts commensurate with the income and fair prospects of the one making them. It is a different matter, however, when it comes to the buying of luxuries or needless articles or of such as are likely to be used up and rendered worthless before the end of the instalment period. Some recognition of the danger back of the instalment purchases is voiced at different times by bankers and credit men who have been pointing out the widespread disaster likely to follow should there be a serious setback to business or industry. The matter has also been taken up by trade bodies, which are establishing more rigid rules governing contracts of the kind. Among the more recent of these organizations to take such action is the Retail Furniture Association of California. Perhaps, one of these days, even the automobile dealers will find the need of putting some check on purchases of their wares. The "O P M" has its safety limits.

Supplies of Cotton and Cotton Goods.

Taking the course of quotations on cotton during the past week, the trend was apparently downward. Even the figures of consumption by domestic mills during last month, made public the other day, which showed increased use of the staple, did not help matters. But the showing made was a very good one. As compared with March, 1925, the increase in consumption was over 51,000 bales of lint cotton and nearly 2,000 bales of linters. The number of spindles in operation during the two months, however, was about the same. It is recognized that the great drawback to an advance in cotton prices is the comparatively small amount of the exports, which is particularly potent because of the great quantity of cotton available. On the basis of two-thirds of the year's consumption it is estimated that the world's carryover into the next cotton year will be at least 10,000,000 bales, which is a large overhang. Nor is the outlook, so far as the next crop is concerned, reassuring to those who are looking for higher prices. It seems to be agreed that there will be again a large acreage planted, though some of it will be rather belated because of untoward weather conditions. Less is heard, also, about the possible ravages of the boll weevil. Though the data available on the new crop are merely conjecture at this time, more interest than usual seems to be centred in weather and soil conditions. A second large crop of 16,000,000 bales or over would depress prices amazingly and the reductions would be shown before the present crop could be disposed of. This is a circumstance made much use of by buyers of cotton goods, who keep holding off their purchases in the hope of getting lower prices. Gray goods, especially printcloths, have been coming down in price in consequence, and there seems to be easing on certain finished goods as well. But business in all kinds of cotton goods continues to be dull as a result of the persistent cold weather. This is shown not only in fabrics but also in knit underwear, which remains dormant.

Situation in Wool and Woolens.

No public wool sales of any special consequence took place during the week just closed. The next one of note will be the auction at London next week. Private sales in this country, as well as abroad, are comparatively trivial. There is not much disposition to buy wool while prices appear to be as unsettled as they are. Domestic mills, in view of the dullness of business, are under no urge to buy the raw material. Imports have begun to lessen in volume. In the goods market the bulk of the buying of fabrics for Fall is yet to take place. The next three or four weeks will indicate how large the volume is to be. A large number of the manufacturers of men's clothing opened their Fall lines formally last week, and representatives of practically all of them are on the road soliciting orders. As responses come in, indicating the kind and quantity of goods desired by the retailers, the manufacturers will put in their orders to the mills. There is still a disposition to delay on the part of the retail clothiers, who feel they have yet a fair margin of time before committing themselves on goods to be sold six months or so hence. Within a week or so the last of the manufacturers catering to the women's wear trade will have their fabrics on the market. A notable opening on Thursday was that of the Forstmann & Huffmann Company on sports and travel weaves. They are offering several novelties. Their other lines are yet to be shown. These, it is said, will not include the so-called Bolivia cloths which this concern was the first to place on the market.

DRY GOODS JOBBING WAS FAIRLY ACTIVE

Mail Orders for Georgette Crepe and Crepe de Chine Were an Especial Feature.

More retail buyers were in the local dry goods market during the week just closed than in the week preceding, and this fact was evident from the increased number of callers at the jobbing houses. According to the special review of Clarins Incorporated, the response from the road men was better and the total charges for the week were a little ahead.

"Reports from our travelers and out-of-town retailers were largely to the effect that business has been held back considerably by the peculiar backwardness of the weather. All seemed to agree that more seasonable temperatures would result in a decided and general improvement in demand for practically all lines of dry goods.

"Silk sales, while slightly less than the same week a year ago, were fully up to our expectations, considering the Winter weather that has prevailed over a great part of the country. Some outstanding changes in demand were noticeable, particularly the call for silks for coatings. This included satins, failles, bengalines and heavy crêpes. The colors sold were mostly blacks, but included liberal quantities of navy, sand, silver and rosewood shades. Light shades of 'Copen' and green also sold well.

"An increase was noted in the demand for rough weaves or Shantung for sport clothes. Washable silks in unusual colorings and novelty effects, including borders, are developing satisfactory volume. The real centre of attraction is the renewed interest in printed silks at reduced prices. Those retailers who are alive to the special sales possibilities of these goods are taking advantage of the bargains now obtainable. A larger number of mail orders for silks was received during the past week than in any previous week on record. These orders were mostly for georgette crêpe and crêpe de Chine.

"There was also a moderate increase in the number of orders received in our wash goods department over those of the week previous. Individual orders continued small, although the aggregate was fairly large. Printed voiles, in small effects on pastel grounds, and solid and solid-color voiles showed quite a bit of activity. English prints continued to sell well, as did plain, printed and woven rayon fabrics. There was also a good call for silk and cotton crêpes and plain fabrics of all descriptions. A good demand still exists for all grades of percales, principally in small effects.

"Mail and road orders on laces have been fully active. White and ochre 'Vals' appeared to be the best sellers, and a good quantity of orders for May delivery was booked. Narrow venises, binche and art laces in white and ochre shades were also wanted.

"Road sales of handkerchiefs for future delivery have kept up remarkably well and are, in fact, ahead of those for the same period last year. Mail orders also showed an improvement over the week previous. Novelty handkerchiefs of French linen and crêpe, as well as of Japanese silks and crêpe, both for men and women, have been among the most active items.

"Drapery fabrics in general have not been very active, and a good volume of orders have been booked for ruffle curtains and cretonnes. In ruffle curtains a very popular seller has been a plain rayon marquisette of natural color. Cretonnes in a variety of patterns, including large, medium and small designs, continued to be quite active."

VARIETY OF GOODS BUYERS ARE AFTER

Dresses, Coats and Capes as Well as Jewelry, Bags and Men's Neckwear Ordered.

In their special market report covering the buying activities of retailers and the style trends in wanted merchandise Kirby, Block & Fischer, resident buyers, say: "An active demand for light colored georgette dresses continues, the rose and tan shades being wanted mostly. These garments are tailored or lace-trimmed. Some sleeveless sport dresses are being featured and they will probably be popular in the small sizes. Calls have been received for cotton dresses, which we have filled with assortments of plain voiles and plain and colored voiles combined. Linen and voile dresses trimmed with embroidery and a few dresses of printed voiles in light and dark colors are also being shipped.

"Twill coats to sell between $15 and $25 are meeting with an increased demand. The sizes wanted most are 38 to 48, the best colors being tan, rose, gray, green and blue. Manufacturers are offering concessions of $5 up on the better coats, the amount of the concession depending upon the desirability of the coats.

"Some of the better firms are showing crêpe Elizabeth capes with fringe designed to retail at $39.50 and up. Coats with three-quarter length capes are popular. These are developed in frost crêpe, bengaline and moire, trimmed with such furs as mole fox and ermine.

"Most jewelry requests are now 'for sale' merchandise, as the general demand has fallen off substantially. There is a slight call for the higher-priced pearl necklaces, but there is little interest in those of the lower ranges. Types of necklaces recently very popular have had a marked falling off in demand.

"Leather bags are ordered daily, with every evidence of a continued demand. Indications are that smaller bags will be featured, as they are now being shown to a small extent by several leading manufacturers. So far, however, there has been no definite demand.

"Large orders are being received for men's neckwear in foulards and crêpes in bright patterns and colors. There is a constant call for failles in neat coin-spot and figured designs, and also for batiks in high-colored ombre effects. Silk and wool crêpe ties and moires have fallen off in demand. The best selling items in boys' neckwear are bright colored crêpes, failles and foulards in printed designs. These come with matching handkerchiefs. There is also quite a call for ready-made sport bows in bright colored regimental stripes and novelty effects."

AT THE AUTEUIL RACES.

What the Women Visitors Wore There, From Hats to Shoes.

Dresses topped by a separate matching cape dominated the styles worn by prominent Parisians at the recent Auteuil races. Cloths of soft, loose weave in mixed colorings were outstanding. Plaids and checks stressed tone on tone colorings, the jacket of suits in these materials frequently emphasizing a contrasting color, or the boldest shade in the fabric design. Invisible stripes and checks in men's suitings served to point forcibly to the increased interest in the severe tailleur in recent weeks, according to a special bulletin issued yesterday by the fashion service department of the Botany Worsted Mills.

"Gray and black wraps in more formal cloths were noted, the collars being of luxurious furs," the bulletin continues. "The silk dress held first place, but there was greater competition given by woolens, notably wool mixtures similar to men's suitings, tweeds and plaids.

"In shoes, patent leather pumps took precedence over all other types of shoes. They were worn in plain or fancy effects and in combination with colored kid, lizard or gold kid. Oxfords were also conspicuous in plain and fancy effects, in from one to three color combinations. Contrasting heels were very noticeable on patent leather shoes and also on colored suede. Gray suede shoes, for instance, with red kid heels and rim of red kid, were worn by one of the smart women. Next in favor to the patent leather shoe was the one of colored kid, in which the rose beige tones dominated, followed by navy.

"In hosiery, all shades of rose beige, from the light flesh tints to the dark, sunburnt tones, continue in vogue, and all stockings as worn by the Parisiennes are decorated with fine open-work clocking.

"In millinery the beret stood out as the conspicuous note. All the new beret shapes in felt and in straw, featured by Agnes, Reboux and Georgette, were being worn. Grosgrain hats were a marked note. They are made in two and three color effects in cubist designs. Monotone stitched grosgrain hats were also conspicuous. Pink was the outstanding color note, notably pink on black. Pink cock feathers on a black straw cloche from Reboux were worn. Jeweled pins were used to adorn hats of all descriptions, from the simple grosgrain sport hat to the high-crowned stovepipe black straw sailor."

TENDENCY IN THE GARMENT INDUSTRY

While there may be unsettling developments in the ready-to-wear industry that to some appear alarming, the trade at present is passing through a transition period that will bring with it a more unified and yet more specialized industry within the next few years, according to a manufacturer well known in the market here. He said yesterday that many people in the industry are so close to actual happenings in the trade that their vision into a period not so far ahead has become clouded. The result is that, very often, a difficulty in the trade looms up far larger in its immediate importance than it should and the real growth and progress inherent in the situation is hidden.

"It is only necessary to remind the 'squawkers' in the trade about the remarkable progress that the industry has made in the last decade," he continued. "Ten years ago there were also those who had little or no faith in the development of the industry. That they were extremely shortsighted is evident as one now sees the immense growth of the industry during that time, growth in every direction, both ethical and material. There is no need for any one now to lose faith in the industry. It is here to stay, despite recurring labor troubles, and will develop and progress exactly as the various individual factors making up the industry progress. I believe this will be along lines of unification and specialization, although the terms may sound dissimilar.

"The distinct trend toward unification in ready-to-wear is visible in many directions. I do not mean mergers of firms into single selling units, but the closer welding together for common aims and purposes of a larger number of manufacturers so that their joint action may accomplish whatever is for the benefit of the trade.

"Let no one say that the spirit of such cooperation is weaker than it was. To say this is truly to admit that the trade is to sink back to a state of 'dog-eat-dog' competition. The contrary is rather true. Cooperation is increasingly manifest, with the result that more worthy efforts for the correction of evil influences in the trade are at work today than ever before. In time unhealthy competition also will come under the control of cooperative influence and individual education.

"One of the most outstanding things about this cooperative spirit is the greater respect for the industry as a whole that it fosters. The industry no longer is just a thing from which profits can be sweated. It is an undertaking to be proud of. That's the big, helpful thing, 'pride in industry,' and I mean pride taken by those inside the industry as well as that measure of respect which consumers give any advancing and highly organized American industry.

"So much for unification through cooperation. The other side of the picture, as I see it, portrays an increasingly sharper line of division in the market between style merchandise and merchandise made with the price end primarily considered and style a secondary matter. Indeed, real progress and growth in the industry depend more on this division than possibly on any other single factor. It will happen because the consumer will force it through demands for style merchandise that will meet her increasingly particular demands.

"For some time past we know that such a division has not been sharply drawn in the trade. The aim of a very large part of the industry has been to produce merchandise at a price that will sell in volume. This movement has been fostered actively by the retailers through their hand-to-mouth operations and their strong insistence on merchandise at prices that will enable the stores to beat their last year's figures. They, too, have been insisting on turnover, although for more logical reasons than the manufacturer has. It has now been definitely proved that for the manufacturer a large turnover does not mean correspondingly large profits; indeed, it has frequently meant a loss.

"But now the situation has reached the point where the retailers are beginning to complain about the sameness of styles in the market. They are talking about mediocrity of production, when they themselves in fact are to a large degree responsible for the situation. The manufacturer has a strong case to back up his contention that the retailer has no real reason for complaining of present conditions.

"The significant thing about the development is that retailers are at last seeing that the woman consumer is no longer satisfied with the merchandise that the stores are showing. A more than substantial amount of the merchandise offered her is bought with the price end in view, but the consumer is not solely interested in cheap merchandise. She wants style and then thinks of price. She is willing to trade up and buy better and more stylish garments if given the chance, but the stores apparently are only now realising this.

"Now the industry cannot continue to progress on a dead level of mediocrity in style with price the dominating influence. Price undoubtedly will play its rôle, but not to the extent where style is pushed out of the picture and only a handful of real style producers are left in the market, whose sole function seems to be to provide the garments from which the cheaper merchandise is copied.

"My belief is that there is developing within the industry a revived style impetus that will eventually result in a greater specialization into style and price producing units. There will spring up a greater number of style houses than now exist, and they will have the support of the retailers, which they now have only to a limited extent. This sharply drawn division will have to come if the consumer is to find her needs and requirements fully met. If she does not find her needs at the stores she patronizes she will have garments made to order.

"Volume will not prevail against style for much longer. The basis of price is not to rule, but style plus price will be the mainspring of the demand. There will be houses supplying garments at a price as now, but the progress of the entire trade will not have to be held back because they dominate the market. Style houses will come into greater trade recognition and will forge ahead to a place of real leadership in the more specialized industry that is gradually evolving."

RAW SILK MARKETS.

Conditions Said Not to Favor Fixed Prices at Present.

Dullness combined with weakness were the features of trading in raw silk during the past week at Yokohama. Selling on the Bourse was very heavy yesterday, the turnover being 3,000 bales, which brought about a drop in price of 48 yen for futures and almost the same for spot silk. Officially, quotations in the open market are only 20 to 30 yen lower, but it may be possible to buy double extra A cracks on the basis of 1,600 to 1,610 yen. Total sales for the week on the Bourse were 6,775 bales, while those in the open market amounted to only 2,740 bales, reflecting the smallness of the actual buying interest. Yen exchange held steady during most of the week at 47¼ cents for ninety day's sight draft, New York, but yesterday moved up to 47½ cents, a rather sharp gain within a few hours' time.

The heavy selling on the Bourse yesterday, together with the "unofficial" drop in prices in the open market at Yokohama, were deemed by factors in the silk trade here to illustrate the practical impossibility of any fixed price for raw silk being maintained under present conditions for any length of time.

At Shanghai there was little new to report. Prices are a shade easier on what silk there is available, but the market for the most part is sold up. The new crop is not likely to be available in quantity much before July. Canton is also quiet. Prices are about unchanged on a letter of credit basis of $4.25 to $4.30 for 14-16s and $3.85 to $3.90 for 20-22s.

The level of prices at Milan continues too high to interest the American trade. Reports reaching the market here indicate that reelers are complaining about the high costs of cocoons.

In the local market, according to A. P. Villa & Bros., Inc., the waiting attitude of manufacturers is being maintained. Fall lines are being held back for the anticipated later season Spring demand. Buying of raw silk continues on a hand-to-mouth basis and the indications are that the consumption figures for April will show a marked drop.

JAPAN'S FOREIGN TRADE

Affected by New Tariff and by Fluctuations in Exchange.

The impending increase in the Japanese import tariff and the fluctuations in foreign exchange had a noticeable influence upon that country's foreign trade last month, according to a report to the Department of Commerce by Acting Commercial Attache Calder of Tokio. Exports for the month reached a value of 157,300,000 yen, against 160,900,000 yen in February and 151,000,000 yen in March of last year. Imports amounted in value to 284,400,000 yen, compared with 243,900,000 yen for February and 317,000,000 for March, 1925. The excess of imports of 97,100,000 yen brings the unfavorable balance for the first quarter of this year to 219,300,000 yen, which is a decline of more than one-third in comparison with the same period of 1925.

The outstanding factor in the import trade was the new tariff law, which passed the Diet during the month and went into effect on March 29. There was a rush to obtain the benefit of the lower rates of the old tariff, according to Mr. Calder, as the new duties were expected to be substantially higher on many commodities. This was especially evident in iron and steel products and machinery, all of which showed the heaviest imports for any month since the Spring of 1924. Imports of wheat, which are subject to a marked increase under the new tariff, also were affected. Imports of raw cotton during March increased over those of the preceding month, but showed a very marked decline as compared with those of March, 1925.

Notes on Trade and Industry Abroad

American Lumber in France.

Orders for American hardwoods, particularly for oak, continue restricted in France, owing to the substitution of native and central European woods. The demand for imported softwoods is fair; less difficulty than was anticipated has resulted from the exchange situation.

To Electrify Brazilian Road.

The Brazilian Government has passed a decree authorizing the signing of a contract with the Metropolitan Vickers Company, Ltd., for the electrification of seventy-three kilometers (about forty-five miles) of the Oesta Minas Railroad.

Increase in French Duties.

The French Chamber of Deputies has approved the bill providing for a 30 per cent. increase in all specific import duties except those applying to tobacco and newsprint. The declared purpose of this horizontal advance is to compensate for the depreciation in the exchange value of the franc.

Undershirts for Filipinos.

The knitted cotton undershirt is the only item of underwear that is imported into the Philippine Islands in considerable quantities. Imports of this article are valued at approximately $2,000,000 annually and about 85 per cent. of the total is supplied by Japan. Germany and the United States provide the bulk of the remainder.

Depression in Czechoslovakia.

There was no change during the past month in the mild business depression prevailing in Czechoslovakia. Industries are generally curtailing production, with consequent reduction in the number of their employes and a considerable increase in the number of part-time workers. It is thought that any great improvement must be dependent upon economic adjustments in neighboring markets.

Metal Production in Belgium.

In spite of the settlement of the Charlerol strike, metallurgical production in Belgium is still below normal, leading to restricted demand in the coal industry. General business is not strong enough to surmount this depression, and industrial dullness may be expected to persist until a moderate revival occurs in these two industries. The restoration may be accelerated by the increase in export demand consequent on renewed currency depreciation.

Building in Johannesburg.

A remarkable demand for more modern and expensive office accommodation has arisen in Johannesburg in the last few years. In 1925 several modern office buildings were erected at a total value of over $1,000,000, and there was a good demand for lumber and building material. New building schemes in hand at present are more numerous than at any previous time in the history of the city, so that 1926 expenditures on office premises may well exceed the 1925 figure. The value of the city's ratable property has increased by $20,000,000 since 1922, a gain of $5,000,000 having been added in 1925.

Italian Iron and Steel.

Intensified activity has marked the Italian iron and steel industrial situation since the opening of 1926. The present output is exceeding that of 1925, a peak year for Italian siderurgy, when the production of steel was 1,685,000 metric tons—a considerable improvement over the 1,458,000 tons in 1924. Likewise, the production of pig iron shows a big increase, from 287,000 tons in 1924 to 490,000 tons in 1925.

Cape Town's Hosiery Factory.

A factory for the manufacture of men's, women's and children's hosiery of cotton, silk and rayon is being established in Cape Town, South Africa. It is expected that the factory will begin operations in October. Local cotton will be used, and silk supplies will be obtained from England, Japan and the United States. The United States at present furnishes about one-fourth of the hosiery imported into South Africa.

Australia's New Capital.

Building at Canberra, future Federal capital of Australia, is going ahead at a rapid rate, according to The Manchester Guardian. About 3,000 workmen are occupied there at present constructing Government buildings and home for housing legislators. To date £3,000,000 have been spent and it is estimated that £1,250,000 will be expended during the present year. When the seat of Government is transferred there, late in 1927, it is expected that the present population of 4,000 will be increased to 10,000.

South American Air Line.

An air mail and passenger service between Montevideo, Uruguay and Buenos Aires, Argentina, was inaugurated on March 1 by a German company under permits from and assistance by the Governments of those two countries. One metal Junkers hydroplane, with limousine cabin having capacity for carrying mail and four passengers, has been put into service, it being planned to increase the number of planes if traffic warrants. Round trips are to be made on Monday, Wednesday and Friday of each week, the passenger fare each way being 50 Argentine pesos.

Watch Factory for Prague.

The first factory for the production of watches and wrist watches has been established in Prague by a firm which heretofore has produced only watch cases, buying the necessary mechanism from Switzerland. Under the present methods, purchases from Switzerland will now be limited to certain parts, and the factory itself will produce the watches. A Swiss expert is at the head of the enterprise, and the workers have received instruction from Swiss experts. It is expected that this factory will soon have in its employ 200 workers. The capital was furnished by Czechoslovak interests.

TRADE CONDITIONS IN SOUTH AFRICA

Commissioner of the Union Clears Up Some Misconceptions of the Country.

"With a view to increasing its exports of raw materials and agricultural products to this country, as well as to acquainting Americans and American business men with various facts concerning South African commerce and affairs, the Union of South Africa opened an office at 11 Broadway, this city, early this year and placed Eric H. Louw in charge, with the title of Trade Commissioner in America. In a talk with a TIMES reporter yesterday concerning the activities of his office since its establishment here Mr. Louw made some interesting and informative statements. One of the first things he mentioned was the surprise he felt on his discovery that most Americans with whom he came in contact, many of them substantial business men, were almost entirely unacquainted with South Africa.

"Perhaps the most amusing experience I have had since I have been in this country will illustrate what I have said about the lack of knowledge the average American has of South Africa," Mr. Louw began. "A prosperous-looking business man from a near-by city called at our office soon after it was opened and asked to see me. As he came into my room a look of surprise came upon his face, and he stared at me rather intently all the while we were talking. Just before leaving, he told me somewhat sheepishly that he had not expected me to be a white man.

"While the lack of information on the part of the average American concerning South Africa does not stand out so prominently, perhaps, as that of the business man to whom I referred, it is apparent that one of our principal tasks will be to acquaint the people of your country with ours. Except for the relatively few exporters and brokers who have done business with the Union, it appears as if Americans know South Africa only as a place where diamonds, gold and ostrich feathers come from. How surprised most American women—and men, too, for that matter—would be if they were to visit Cape Town or Durban, for example, and see South African women wearing apparel fully as smart as that seen on Fifth Avenue here. Wealthy South African women wear Paris styles, just as American women of the better class do. In fact, due to the reversal of the seasons, our women get the coming season's fashions ahead of those living in London and New York.

"In only one important respect does their clothing differ from that of the women of this country. Few South African women possess fur coats, simply because the climate makes them wholly unnecessary. Yet fur-trimmed cloth coats similar to those that have been worn during the Winter in this country are now being played up in the advertising of South African merchants, for it is now Auutmn down there.

"The mention of advertising brings to my mind one very important fact that should not be overlooked by any American exporter who seeks to build up a market for his products in the Union of South Africa. He must not overlook the fact that it is a bi-lingual country, and that, if he does not want to have his product passed over by about half the inhabitants, he must advertise it in the Dutch papers as well as the English. Failure to do so not only restricts the market for his product, but is likely to offend the Dutch portion of the population and prejudice them against it.

"Another thing that must be done if the American exporter is to get a maximum distribution of his product in South Africa is to follow the sales lines laid down by British exporters and push his goods through local representation. This can be done either through the establishment of branch offices or through representation by manufacturers' agents. In many instances it probably will not be necessary to open branches to get South African distribution, but to attempt to obtain it without some form of local representation is practically impossible, if not actually so.

"While the purpose of opening our offices here was primarily to increase the flow of South African products to the United States, we are pleased to render all the service we can to the American exporter. For that matter, a very large part of the correspondence of our office with American business men has had to do with questions looking to increased exports from this country to the Union. These questions have dealt with a wide variety of topics.

"One manufacturer, for instance, asked us to give him the number of houses in South Africa that are wired for electricity. Letters asking the names of South African houses dealing in various goods and articles have been numerous. One letter that we could not answer as desired by the writer asked for trade information concerning Liberia. That was another example of the lack of information about the Union that has hampered our preliminary work in this country considerably.

"One thing that I should like to get home to American business men and to Americans generally is that the Union of South Africa is a highly civilized country. There are no more lions and natives running wild in the streets of Cape Town and other cities of the Union than there are Indians scalping people on the streets of New York or Chicago. For that matter, big game hunting in South Africa is a thing of the past. We have four universities that give courses in law, medicine, engineering and theology, and world-famous artists frequently dance, sing or play for us.

"It is obvious that, without a proper understanding of South Africa, trade between the two countries cannot be increased as it should be. Without a proper understanding of our resources and products, the American importer will not buy as much from us as he should, nor will the American exporter sell to us in the volume that is doubtless possible. How will your exporters of silk hose and lingerie, for instance, find a satisfactory market with us as long as they look upon the Union as an ideal place in which to dispose of traps for tigers and elephant guns?

"In closing, I should like to repeat that we will be pleased to give all the aid we can to American business men interested in South Africa, whether they be exporters or importers. In our office files of our leading papers and magazines, both in English and Dutch, are kept and they may be consulted without obligation of any kind. There is also a wealth of miscellaneous data concerning the natural resources, agriculture, pastoral industries, mineral resources and industrial development of the Union that may be seen for the asking. A cordial invitation to make use of them, as well as other facilities of our office in looking to the increase of commerce between the two countries, is extended to any and all who may be interested."

TO SHOW SUMMER STYLES.

Models From Forty-one Houses to Be Displayed on Tuesday.

Forty-one manufacturers will exhibit at the Summer season Fashion Show to be held at the Hotel Commodore on Tuesday night under the auspices of the National Garment Retailers' Association. These exhibitors, it was announced yesterday by John W. Hahn, Executive Secretary of the association, will display 120 models, each created specifically for the Summer season. One of the featured novelties of the show will be a bridal procession.

Mr. Hahn added that more than 1,500 people, including retailers from all parts of the country, are expected to be present when the manikins begin their parade down the runway. In his opinion the interest displayed by the entire trade in this show easily equals that manifested in the Spring and Fall events staged under the auspices of the organization of retailers.

"Beyond question," continued Mr. Hahn, "the models shown will set the style standards for the new Summer season. Retailers will be pleasantly surprised by the many evidences of newness that have been developed by the style creators. Great stress is placed on the fact that the garments will be distinctively different from those produced for Spring.

"Manufacturers and buyers who have seen the colors to be sponsored at the show have said they are enthusiastic over the probabilities of their being overwhelmingly accepted by the trade and consumers. These hues—Sunni, June rose and coral sands—are light summery shades, ideal for sport wear and other apparel to be worn during the warm weather months."

Perth Amboy
The Port of Opportunity
Invites Manufacturers to its Industrial Benefits

RIGHTLY termed "Portus Optimus." A Royal Grant by King James to the Duke of Perth saw the beginning of this historic city. Today Perth Amboy together with its neighboring population of 150,000 is regarded as the hub of the Raritan Bay District. It is the commercial and financial capital of this vast area whose manufactured products total 280 millions yearly. Perth Amboy is the converging center of the metropolitan area, bisecting incoming and outgoing merchandise to all parts of the world. Four railroads and ample deep water docking facilities for ocean-going vessels make Perth Amboy the logical center for the establishment of industries. MONEY - MAKING PROPOSITION

This advertisement is intended to interest a capitalist, or preferably an apparel manufacturer.

If you are familiar with the sensational success made by Credit Clothing Store Organizations within the past few years; if you appreciate that this field is practically untapped, you know that a handsome profit on your investment is absolutely assured.

The men who are inserting this advertisement have been in this field all their lives; have an enviable reputation and have reduced credit store organization, management and administration work to an exact science. These men formerly served several of the biggest and most successful chain credit store companies in important executive capacities. These men now serve several hundred credit stores and have some astounding sales and profit records to their credit. These men have enough confidence in their ability and in their business to invest part of the necessary capital.

If you are financially responsible and seriously interested write to Box 8 CSS Times.

POTATOES SOARING TO NEW HIGH PRICE

Cauliflower Advances With Brisk Demand—String Beans in Decline.

CANTALOUPES COMING IN

Asparagus Plentiful and Rhubarb Is Limited—Creamery Butter Down —Eggs Unchanged.

Prices of potatoes which have soared until housewives in some sections of the country, particularly Massachusetts, were asked to boycott that vegetable, attracted heavy supplies to the New York markets toward the end of last week. The heavy receipts caused a slight drop in prices, according to the weekly review of local food markets made public yesterday by Dr. Arthur E. Albrecht, New York Director of the State Department of Farms and Markets.

The review says that prices here dropped 50 cents a bag on Friday. Up-State potatoes sold at from $3.25 to $3.50 per 100-pound sack. New crop Bermuda potatoes of the red variety sold from $16 to $18 per barrel. Potatoes of all varieties are from 25 to 67 a bag higher than at this time last year.

"Most varieties of fresh vegetables from the South and West were in abundant supply this past week," the review continues. "Wholesale prices, however, varied greatly owing to the irregular condition of most of the produce.

"New York City's lettuce is now coming from California, Arizona, Florida, Texas, Georgia, Louisiana, North and South Carolina and New Jersey.

"The brisk demand on Friday for fancy, large cauliflower resulted in an advance in prices. Receipts were moderate. The best California offerings brought $3 to $3.50 and fair quality $2.25 to $2.75 per crate of nine to fourteen heads.

"Florida string beans were in liberal receipt. A large percentage, however, was not very attractive and in consequence low prices featured the market.

"The season's initial carload of Mexico cantaloupes arrived. The shipment consisted of 1,067 crates containing approximately 18,000 cantaloupes. The quality and condition were fair. Crates of fifteen to thirteen sold at $3.50 to $4 and those containing eighteen sold at $2.50.

"Florida cucumbers are now beginning to arrive in carlot quantities. Asparagus was again plentiful and sold retail at continued low prices. Increased supplies of California green peas for which there was a slow demand resulted in a decline at wholesale.

"The limited supply of California rhubarb sold rapidly and higher prices were obtained. Boxes of 35 pounds extra choice grade, sold at $3.75 to $4. Long Island rhubarb brought $1 to $1.50 per dozen bunches.

"Daily receipts of butter were liberal and prices declined two cents per pound wholesale and at retail. At the end of the week most chain stores sold the finest creamery butter at 43 cents. The egg market was steady with prices practically unchanged from last week."

The following table shows wholesale prices on Friday and the corresponding date last year:

PRINCESS OPENS A SHOP.

Duke de Rohan's Sister to Sell Books and Serve Tea.

PARIS, April 17 (AP).—Princess Lucien Murat, after writing articles on fashions and women's questions for the press, has opened a shop, an act which has made some stir in France, where the blue-blooded have not as yet entered retail business.

The shop is a house in the Place Dauphine, once inhabited by Mme. Roland, who was guillotined at the time of the French Revolution. The rooms will be stocked with fine editions of books and paintings for sale, and tea can be had from 5 until 7 each afternoon.

The new shopkeeper is the sister of the present Duke of Rohan Chabot, whose family history is ancient. Her husband descends from the second son of the first prince Joachim Murat, son of a plowman, who became a Prince, Duke and even King (of Naples) through marrying Napoleon I's sister, Caroline.

"Times are hard," says the Princess, "and incomes diminish daily with the franc. And, furthermore, I believe that it's going to become more and more difficult to live without working. I shall be at my shop every day and I hope that artists and collectors will make a habit of coming here, so that I can be of some benefit to modern painters whose talent I admire. The rooms are small, but I hope to see them a centre of artistic life."

MAY DEPOSE INDIAN RULER.

Government Charges Mir of Khairpur Gambled With State Finances.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 17.—The Bombay Government is considering the question of depriving the Mir of Khairpur of his powers and placing the administration of the State in other hands, according to dispatches from Bombay published here. It is alleged against him that he brought the State to the verge of bankruptcy by "insensate and wanton extravagance."

Heavy gambling on the turf is charged, and the whole of the State revenues are said to have been involved and the Treasury is "totally depleted."

Khairpur is a State of 6,050 miles in the Upper Sind with a population of more than 220,000. The present ruler, His Highness Mir Ali Nawaz Khan, is 41 and succeeded his father in 1921. The last recorded revenue of the State was £163,000.

BRITAIN PREPARED FOR GENERAL STRIKE

Government Refuses to Yield to Miners, Preferring to Fight Rather Than Surrender.

FATE OF SUCH MOVEMENTS

Despite Ephemeral Advantage to Labor, Ultimate Victories Are With the Governments.

By FREDERICK CUNLIFFE-OWEN, C. B. E.

While the coal miners' threat to subject Great Britain to the manifest disadvantages of a general strike by the Federation of Trade Unions and Labor Organizations, in the event of the refusal of the colliery owners and employers to continue to pay the war-time scale of wages and to maintain the same hours of work per week, led the British Government, last Summer, to accord to the employers a subsidy amounting to about $100,000,000 in order to permit them to continue for the following nine months, ending on May next, the amount needed to comply with the demands of the miners, it is improbable that any Conservative Administration will ever again allow itself to be terrorized in this fashion. The Baldwin Administration did this in the face of much opposition, on the part even of its own followers, which has been strengthened by the report just presented by a strictly non-partisan Parliamentary Commission, which pronounced itself in the most unequivocal manner against any further surrender either by the mine owners to the miners, or by the Government to either of the parties in the conflict.

There is no doubt that the present Administration, which has not been idle, and which has been making elaborate preparations to meet a general strike, is in a far better position today to deal with any such industrial conflict than it was last year or in 1921, when the Government of the day submitted to a compromise. Indeed, the Secretary of State for the Home Department, the Right Hon. Sir William Joynson-Hicks, now popularly known not alone in Great Britain, but all over the world as "Jix," is renowned for his determination to resist to the utmost the demands of everything in the nature of communism of international Bolshevism and of the Socialist pretensions of the Labor Party.

The Measure of Success.

The fact is that a general strike, in order to accomplish anything permanent, must be a success and of distinct advantage to the parties by which it is organized and engineered. A mere temporary advantage can prove of no lasting benefit to communism, socialism or labor. It merely serves to arouse popular sentiment against these forces, and to give the Government time to marshal its powers, which both from a material and financial point of view are illimitable.

No general strike has ever proved successful, in the long run, and the most striking illustration thereof was given some seventeen years ago by Sweden, which at the time was considered by the international labor leaders to be the best organized nation in the world from a labor point of view. It demonstrated the fact that a general strike is very difficult, nay, almost impossible, to engineer, and that a community driven back on its self-reliance, can get along without the help of large sections of the population that are normally its collaborators.

The present menace of a general strike, by which Great Britain is confronted, has had its origin in connection with the mining industry. The Swedish dispute arose in connection with the paper, woolen and cotton trades. In July and August of 1909, a gradually increasing number of workers, reaching at last near 200,000, were locked out by the employers' association on the ground that their unions had not lived up to certain definite contracts. While the quarrel was developing, the Swedish Government by means of an official committee of mediation proposed a compromise, the basis of which was accepted by the employers, but was rejected by the leaders of the employed. Not only was it turned down by the latter, but they induced the General Federation of Trade Unions of Sweden to proclaim a general strike throughout the country.

Schemes Went Wrong.

The arrangements for the general strike made by the General Federation were both far-reaching in their incidence and plausible in their moderation. The most elaborate preparations were made to cripple capitalism. What have since become known as "essential services" were to be carried on. Violent methods, though not ruled out of the program, were not allowed to form an actual part thereof; were in fact retained as a threat, though unused as a weapon. It is instructive to note, for the light thrown on the problem of organizing a general strike, how the well-laid schemes of the Swedish General Federation of Trade Unions went wrong.

Some classes of workers who were instructed by the latter to strike remained at their posts. Others who should not have struck went out. Most of the railroad men, for instance, continued to run their trains in spite of the strike orders to the contrary, while on the other hand the scavengers, who were instructed by their leaders to continue their share of essential service, grumbled and resisted the idea of being held to their daily task. Men in the gas works and electric stations absented themselves from their duties, in total disregard of the Federation of Labor's directions and employers' contracts. They were as prompt to cease from toil as the tramway men, motor and hack men, carters, butchers', bakers' and grocers' assistants, &c.

Sextons, dispensed from striking under the Federation of Labor scheme, went on digging graves in one churchyard and laid down their spades in another, leaving corpses unburied, while the peasantry absolutely refused to allow their crops to rot. Saloons and dramshops were closed, for the Government supplemented the orders of the Federation of Trades Union by issuing decrees suspending the unrestricted sale of liquor and at the same time preventing excessive thirst—artificially produced—by banning salted and smoked delicacies. Light beer or wine could only be obtained in conjunction with at least 15 cents' worth of cooked food.

Not Altogether "On Their Own."

The mass of the people, against whom the general strike was directed, were not therefore cast wholly on their own resources. But they were thrown upon them as much as people ever are likely to be under similar compulsion or circumstances. What happened is exactly what is certain to happen elsewhere under analogous conditions. Sweden found plenty to eat. Her water, gas and electricity supplies were kept going. Her streets were kept clean and her tramcars were run. In effect, the people declared to the Federation of Labor that two could play at the latter's game, and proceeded to furnish the proof. In Stockholm and in other cities and towns public security brigades were formed, in which nobles, officers of the army and navy, bankers, merchants, professional and business men, clerks and students quietly enrolled themselves and rendered of their own free will and without remuneration the services which the strikers had refused to perform.

Of course, the trade and industry of the country suffered temporarily. No doubt the volunteers, after the first novelty had worn off, would sooner have been at their usual avocations. Sweden was not as happy a land as under normal conditions, but the saner elements of the community "carried on," and in so doing furnished a public demonstration of the fact that the people at large are not so helpless as the advocates of a general strike would prefer us to believe. The result of this healthy display of independence was that the general strike, which had been started in July, collapsed early in September, its failure having become obvious long before it ceased.

The Swedish Government's attitude throughout the conflict was extremely instructive. It had begun by putting forth a reasonable effort to settle the textile, or what may be described as the sectional, strike before it developed into the General Federation of Trades Union strike. When the latter had been running for about three weeks, a petition was presented by the Liberal members of the Riksdag or lower house of the National Legislature begging that the authority of the Government should be directed toward the ending of the conflict, "in the interests of trade."

Government Declines to Listen.

The Government peremptorily declined to lend an ear to the prayer. It contended that the general strike had become a danger to the life and to the functions of society; that it had destroyed confidence in the sanctity of solemn contracts by openly encouraging men to break them, and that it had assailed the State itself by endeavoring to induce the railroad employes, who were servants of the State, to betray their trust. The contest was no longer a mere trial of strength between the employers and the employed, but an onslaught on the community at large. The Administration could not and would not attempt to get any sort of concessions for the strikers, that is to say for the men who had deliberately aimed a blow at society. It was necessary that such men should learn that the interests of society as a whole were above those of any class, even above those of the working classes.

This general strike in Sweden seventeen years ago came upon a Government and a nation that was entirely unprepared for any such crisis. It was a general strike for which the most elaborate and carefully organized preparations had been made throughout the country by the trades and industrial unions. And Sweden at that time was universally regarded as the best organized country in the world from a labor point of view. Moreover, Sweden is a nation of relatively limited national resources and of small population. Compared to her the resources of Great Britain are illimitable.

Moreover, England's Government has had nine months or more to organize, and to prepare regardless of cost, measures with which to combat in behalf of her entire social system, the threat of a general strike on the part of a mere section of the community. Every attempt that has been made until now to accomplish the aims of communism, socialism and the unjust and selfish demands of labor extremists, has always met with ultimate failure. And any advantages that appeared at one moment to have been derived therefrom by the employes as opposed to the employers have always proved to be of a merely ephemeral nature.

It is because the real leaders of the National Trades Council, and even of the Miners Federation, are aware of this contingency that they are hesitating to definitely throw down the gauntlet to the British Government. And in coming to a decision they are having recourse to the advice of the International Socialist and Labor Congress which has been meeting during the past week at Brussels, where naturally political as well as economic considerations have played their rôle.

High Wage Tax on Coal.

Just merely the maintenance of the miners' wages in Great Britain at the price which they extorted from their employers during the great war and which they have managed to retain ever since, and the adherence to the then arranged number of hours per week, involves the cost of nearly $1 a ton on all coal mined, which the mine owners cannot afford to pay, and which the national treasury refuses to pay any longer in the form of a subsidy to the employers.

Some of the leaders, with the experience of former great contests between labor and capital bhind them, and fearing for the ultimate outcome of the conflict, are showing a disposition to compromise. But the rank and file of the miners will not hear of any surrender of the wage increase and of a reduction in the hours of labor which they won during the great war. They have become accustomed since then to a style of life and existence for themse es and their families which they are unwilling to modify or to sacrifice in the slightest degree. They as well as the masses of the working classes are firmly imbued with the power of labor to overcome all opposition on the part of the national treasury. It is against the latter rather than against the "coalocrats" that their animosity is directed.

They are perfectly satisfied that the employers cannot continue mining operations on a paying basis if there is to be any reduction in the slightest degree either in the post-war rate of wages or of working hours. Only they are firmly determined that the loss is to come out of the pockets of the Government instead of out of their own. And inasmuch as the British nation at large is firmly opposed to the notion, and is prepared for a Homeric contest between labor and capital in the form of a great general strike, it is difficult to foresee the immediate outcome, though one can depend on the ultimate result when, as in past cases of perhaps lesser magnitude, the victory will rest with the Government.

The latter has paid close upon $500,000,000 in one way or another to the coal trade since the beginning of the great war in 1914, and the British taxpayer is already so heavily burdened with dues to the extent of nearly 70 cents of every dollar of income, that he is firmly determined not to permit the continuance of this intolerable imposition on the nation for the benefit of merely one class of the population, namely, the coal miners.

CITY BREVITIES.

Company G, 106th Infantry, N. Y. N. G. (the old Twenty-third) of Brooklyn, will hold a dinner and reunion at the Arkwright Club, 320 Broadway, on Wednesday evening, April 28. The company, first known as the Brooklyn City Guard, was organized in 1842.

A course of lectures for American students will be given at the University of Leyden, under the auspices of the Netherland-American Foundation, 17 East Forty-second Street, from July 5 to July 10. The lectures, which will be free, will include subjects of a scientific character.

The French Government, through the Minister of Public Instruction and Beaux Arts, has conferred the Palm of Officier of Public Instruction upon Edward L. Bernays of 9 East Forty-sixth Street, for services rendered to the French Government, according to announcement made by the French Embassy yesterday.

Lieut. Col. H. Edmund Bullis will give an illustrated talk on Borneo, "The Land of the White Rajah," at the Brooklyn Museum this afternoon at 3:30.

A post-Lenten card medley and reception of the Jesuit Mothers' Guild of Greater New York will be held next Wednesday evening at the Waldorf-Astoria for the benefit of the Jesuit Seminary Fund.

WISCONSIN CITIES THREATENED BY FLOOD

Section of a Block Connecting Fox and Wisconsin Rivers Breaks Near Portage.

PORTAGE, Wis., April 17 (AP).—Four Wisconsin cities are threatened with floods as a result of the collapse tonight of a section of the Government lock connecting the Wisconsin River and Fox River near here.

The War Department has been appealed to for aid. A special train is on the way with 5,000 bags of cement. The Wisconsin River threatens to flow into the Fox River and the cities of Oshkosh, Neenah, Menasha and Appleton are in the path of possible high water.

Hundreds of men are working to provide temporary barricades.

HELD AS HOTEL PROWLERS.

Prisoners Were Seized After the Roosevelt Sent Out Alarm.

Two Porto Ricans, said by the police to be employed as housemen by the Hotel Commodore, were held in $7,500 bail each yesterday by Magistrate Albert Vitale in the Yorkville Court on charges of suspicion of burglary. They were arrested on Friday night on the eleventh floor of the Hotel Roosevelt by detectives of the East Fifty-first Street Station, who said they found a three-ounce bottle of ether and a number of keys in the pockets of the men.

The police said that about 10 o'clock on Friday night, J. Wephy, a guest of the hotel, was taking a bath in his suite on the fourth floor when the two men entered. Wephy yelled for help and the intruders ran out. Wephy then telephoned to the room clerk. The management posted guards at all exits of the hotel and telephoned to the police, who found the men after a long search.

The prisoners said they were Cruz Vazvazgues, 20 years old, of 237 East 110th Street, and Repituto Rios, 20, of 54 Hick Street, Brooklyn. According to the police, the men could not give a satisfactory explanation of their presence in the hotel.

GUIDE TO LONG ISLAND CITY.

New Booklet Corrects a Confusion in Queens House Numbers.

A new street guide of Long Island City was issued yesterday by Clarence W. Norwood of the staff of The Daily Star of Long Island City.

Mr. Norwood said that an incorrect form was frequently used in referring to house numbers in Queens. Newspapers used the form "12,103 138th Street," he said, when the correct form called for "121-03 138th Street." A number such as 121-03 signified, said Mr. Norwood, a house near 121st Avenue on any given street or near 121st Street on any given avenue.

BROOKHART OPENS FIGHT.

Campaign Against Senator Cummins in Iowa.

Special to The New York Times.

DES MOINES, Iowa, April 17.—Colonel Smith W. Brookhart, ousted Senatorial insurgent, began his attempt to win the expiring chair of Senator Albert B. Cummins by a direct attack tonight on the drafters of the Esch-Cummins bill and the Railroad Consolidation bill.

These two acts, with what he called the half-way measures of the Federal farm loan, were blamed by Mr. Brookhart for the depleted condition of agriculture in Iowa. His speech consisted almost entirely in contrasting his record on these and the McNary-Haugen bill with that of Senator Cummins in an effort to show that he and not Mr. Cummins had done the most to remedy deflated farm values.

The Esch-Cummins law constituted a yearly tax on Iowa land of $1 an acre brought about by exaggerated railway values that now guarantee excessive rates, he said, and added that the consolidation bill sponsored by his rival would guarantee the continuance of this condition.

He said the Federal Loan Board was only partially retrenching the situation, and that he had endeavored to make this movement effective, but received only animosity from Senator Cummins.

While the insurgent was pleasing the audience in his home city, Washington, the regular Republicans were delighted at the progress of the Democratic State Convention.

The greatest fear of the Cummins men had lain in a threat made by members of one Democratic wing to choose a representative and vote scatteringly for him at the primary while packing the Republican vote boxes with approvals of Brookhart in the hope that the insurgent might be defeated in the finals.

The decision to leave the ticket open and to fight whoever is presented on the belief that a reputable Democrat can beat any Republican in the State this year while endeavoring to build up the party is a move in Senator Cummins's favor.

AID "OLD IRONSIDES" FUND.

Judge and Mrs. Gary Contribute Toward Saving Constitution.

More than $200 was raised at a meeting of the Bureau for American Ideals held at Public School 17, 225 West Forty-seventh Street, Friday night toward the fund for the preservation of the frigate Constitution (Old Ironsides). Among those who were present and who contributed were Judge and Mrs. E. H. Gary, each of whom gave $50.

Miss Elizabeth Baldwin was Chairman of the meeting, and the speakers included Professor William B. Guthrie of the City College, Judge John Jerome Rooney and Captain Walter Joyce of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

"I would not exchange it— said Andrew Carnegie

for all the millions ever amassed by man"

What Is "It"?

CARNEGIE knew the value of millions, but there was one thing which he valued even more.

As a young man he worked for Colonel Anderson, a man of wide culture and fine tastes. Colonel Anderson took an interest in him, welcomed him to his library, guided him in his reading and choice of books.

"To him," said Carnegie, "I owe a taste for literature which I would not exchange for all the millions ever amassed by man. Life would be quite intolerable without it."

What Colonel Anderson did for Carnegie, Dr. Eliot, for forty years President of Harvard University, has done for busy men and women everywhere. The free book offered below gives the secret by which anyone may acquire a real taste for literature; it gives the scope and purpose of the most famous library in the world.

You know something about this great library already, but you owe it to yourself to read the whole story in Dr. Eliot's own words. The story is printed in a free book "Fifteen Minutes a Day."

This handsome and famous book tells how Dr. Eliot, from his lifetime of reading, study and teaching, selected for you the few really great books that everyone must know to be well-read, and how in only fifteen minutes a day you can gain from this wasteless library the broad viewpoint and the culture that are the tools of success in modern life.

But let the free book tell the story. There's no obligation—just mail this coupon today, and it will come to you by return mail.

WHEN WILSON DEFIED THE BOSSE

James Kerney's Illuminating Study of His Formative Political Years

THE POLITICAL EDUCATION OF WOODROW WILSON. By James Kerney. 486 pp. New York: The Century Company. $4.

By ALLEN SINCLAIR WILL

LITERARY signs and portents indicate clearly that the personality of Woodrow Wilson is one of the most engrossing themes for history, biography and memoirs that has developed in many a day. The temporary passions which he, like all provocative men, aroused have not been sufficient to stay the eagerness with which the assayers and appraisers of character have leaped to the task. Already the stack of Wilsoniana in any fairly complete library has mounted to proportions which might not have been attained in a generation in the case of a less intrinsically interesting man.

There was in Wilson, evidently, more than a story of acts in high place, victories, defeats, coups, blunders—the stock in trade of all historical characters who have been endowed in a crisis with official power comparable to his own. His is a story of flux, evolution, contradiction, passion, strength, weakness, heights and depths, with pathos freely intermingled and no lack even of touches of humor. It is unlike any other story.

It will be a long time before such a character is ready for a "soul portrait" by Gamaliel Bradford or ironical interpretation in sweeping rhythms such as Strachey has given some of the Victorians. The materials must be accumulated before the ultimate artificers can begin within their processes of skilled work. Whether Wilson is praised or blamed for this and that is not of the first importance now. It is not unlikely, indeed, that a new Wilson, different from any that would be readily recognizable at present, will emerge, when all the secret data, including his letters, are made available and when the progress of events has set the perspective. A new Lincoln appeared years after his death, and still another, in which the critical is to be emphasized, seems about to appear now. There has been recently the phenomenon of a new Cleveland, due to the fine insight of Rhodes and Professor McElroy.

For permanent purposes it is more important, obviously, that the materials about Wilson shall grow in quality than quantity, and they happen to be growing fast in both. There is available in print the testimony of House, Houston, Lansing, Daniels, Tumulty, McCombs, David Lawrence, Henry Jones Ford and others who knew him intimately, as well as careful estimates by some, such as William Allen White, whose contact with him was less close. Each of these has drawn a picture which differs in important respects from every other picture of Wilson. His nature was no simple product of human alchemy to be scanned and conned at a glance, and set down in terms of uniform description by different observers. Its reactions in various individuals must be studied comparatively.

As Lawrence truly says in his biography, Wilson "died as he lived, unexplained and unrevealed." It was remarked often in his lifetime that he could not dramatize himself, and no one has been able to dramatize him so far. The difficulty of the task enhances its fascination as the enmities that he caused are lulled by the passage of the years.

There is a little group whose testimony must be invaluable in the shaping of the mature verdict on Wilson. That group is composed of New Jersey newspaper correspondents and editors who watched with discerning eyes the hatching of the politician from the professorial egg and the development of pin feathers until the eagle's wing appeared. Some of this group were men of marked talents, as their subsequent careers have shown. They talked with Wilson, counseled him, traveled with him on campaigning tours, watched him in every move with the kindly glance of neighborly interest, for he was then a meteor in the local political sky. Some of them remained among his intimates until, broken with the agony of frustration, he died in his S Street home in Washington.

One of these newspaper men was James Kerney, editor then as now of The Trenton Evening Times, and he has produced a vivid book, which no historian or biographer of the future who writes about Wilson can afford to disregard. He has shed clear and abundant light upon the decisively formative period of Wilson's life, a period which, biographers now agree, should receive ample treatment in the story of any individual's career. In many cases this period is childhood, or early manhood, but Wilson, different in this as in some other things, came to it in mature years, when he was chosen President of Princeton University. The part of his career previous to that had been merely a prelude.

It was then that he was translated from the world of thought to the world of action, and, in many respects, transformed. He confronted large issues, wrestled with large men in his fight over the student clubs and began to shake off impatiently the philosophy of the cloister. Tasting combat, the blood of a berserker throbbed within him for the first time. It was a strange and almost an ecstatic feeling. Mr. Kerney says:

Whatever his promptings may have been, Wilson turned the university contest into a great battle for democracy. It was the first time that he displayed those marvelous fighting abilities so conspicuous in his political career. * * * Wil never admitted to himself for a mom that he might be wrong. He had the t fighter's cold and merciless fury. His ar gant methods alienated many who m have otherwise helped with the reform Princeton. But it was both his weakn and his strength to take a worthy cau and divert it into a personal quarrel.

When the tide turned against him Princeton, Wilson was disillusioned, reali beating about for some avenue escape. Colonel Harvey saw chance. Mr. Kerney sets the s of New Jersey politics for an i mate presentation of the combina of circumstances which caused State boss, ex-Senator Smith, to a ready ear to the proposal to thrust political disaster by mak Wilson the candidate for Governo 1910. The Princeton President called from the golf field to rec the acclaim of the State convent at Trenton, ten miles away, wh nominated him in passive acqu cence in the will of its master.

The author tells from first-h knowledge that Wilson had made effort to influence delegates in favor, as Professor Ford, who more intimate with him at that ti had asserted before. Perhaps was uncertain what his own fut course would be. At least he w cautious, accepting opportunity the hands of the boss, but leavi himself free to follow his own b after the election. He had shrewdness to remain in the pre vention campaign in the atmosph to which he was accustomed, "co fortable educational seclusion," Mr. Kerney puts it, in which he developed an "aristocratic outlook life." He was a conservative wished Mr. Bryan "knocked into cocked hat" and who regarded initiative and referendum, which was soon to espouse in a pu speech, as little short of devices stituted by the powers of darkness

In previous writings or utteran he had been outspoken in opposit to the regulation of corporations Federal and State commissions had declared himself "a fierce pa sax of the open shop." Hence hope of the bosses, who did not the workings of his mind. But n all his ideas were being revised to along with the powerful current liberal thought which accompan the revolt of public opinion again the Taft regime. Mr. Kerney writ

Those of us who lived in t inner Wilson circle while he w playing the political game saw him change from a conservati Democrat to a very militant tw fisted radical, and, with the com ing of war, into an equally t fisted autocrat. * * *

Wilson was gazing on the Tren convention as a novice in practi politics, although he was a master the scholarship of theoretical po tics. The author says:

As student and professor, for u ward of thirty years, he had be writing and preaching fundamen sermons on history and politic To his intimates, from time time, he had let it be known th his great ambition was a profe sional politics career. But e though he had then lived tweat four of his fifty-four years. Princeton * * * he had nev attended a State or county poli ical convention. Nor was he ev present at a national political convention Until the day of his inauguration as Go ernor he never put foot in the Sta House.

In the political affairs of Princeton Bo ough he manifested no interest. He d not own any real estate, and he fr quently failed to vote, neglecting ev Presidential election. The official recor disclosed that he had not voted in 19 the year preceding his nomination.

The Thoughts of Youth Are Long, Long Thoughts"

Irwin Edman Interprets the Idealism of the Younger Generation

ARD KANE LOOKS AT LIFE. y Irwin Edman. 219 pp. Boston and New York: Houghton Mifflin mpany. $2.00.

y PERCY A. HUTCHISON.

R. EDMAN (Professor Irwin Edman he is, of Columbia University) might with all propriety have used for his title that fine old phrase Horace—"Virginibus puerque." But nowadays so few of maidens and young men read ce Mr. Edman may have feared ould not be understood. And s. Stevenson established a prior other reasons, too, perhaps, ojection was wise. Mr. Edman's cupation is philosophy, his offi- occupation, that is, for when takes off his academic self he ows also poet and humanist. ophy when considered as a for- ment has much about it that ills the lay mind, especially the nd between the adolescent and adult years, and young maidens men would be easily frightened book palpably aimed in their tion. And so with this tact he led the issue. Nobody picking om the bookshop table "Richard Looks at Life" and from a chuckling of the pages finding omething in narrative form, d come to any other conclusion that here was one of the latest s. It was a fine sense of tact, repeat, the regret of sensitive intance with the intellectual emotional shyneases of youth, prompted Professor Edman to ate his intention, and we hold, there, that his publishers showed tact of perspicacity when they the whole thing away by in- g on the jacket, "A Philosophy Youth." But as their action ves the reviewer, pretense may dropped and the book examined its philosophical merits.

will be evident on even the most ht glance at Mr. Edman's book the author is one of that small precious group, fortunately leav- the faculty of every college, to mbers of which is vouchsafed apacity for establishing human ions. Clearly, his students like instructor in philosophy's chair have than one of them has fa- him with friendship, that reti- friendship of youth from which learned to receive. "Richard " himself is undoubtedly a com- n figure; his biography a com- biography. But one is equally inced that there is no departure essential fact. Mr. Edman, as ve said, is of that group which le to establish personal contacts, ating established such contacts ndfully came to the conclusion there had been forced on him a y—the duty to make as clear to rs as might with him lie, not t he taught to students, but what had taught him.

d these students of his had ht him much—they had revealed ir emotions, intellectual aspira- , reactions to the life of which y formed a part, not merely the emental life of the campus, but rger life of the age. And how d he pass this on, the older man had been taught by youth? Es- ially, how could he pass it on in way that would best gain it a ring? In "Richard Kane Looks Life" youth is teaching youth; Edman is but the refracting ncy. To borrow a figure from present—a figure which, recent , has already been overworked Edman is the broadcaster. best could the broadcaster put "the air" the message he de- d.

is our guess that the precise n the book should take only came the author after many months of eration: the fictitious biography student—"Richard" is at the et a student—who goes in quest his soul. If this be considered a sentimental as a way of putting matter, let us say a student who tually "finds himself." The se- on of the author's problem may e been a stroke of intuitive in- t; but once conceived, the proj- was matured to a rare mellow- . If certain of the maidens and young men are frightened away by the revelation on the book's jacket, it may be surmised that their elders will the more quickly snatch it up.

Richard—the supposititious Richard—is of the great American middle class, of those that dwell on "an island of comfortable respectability." The father is not a millionaire, but the problem of earning money is one about which Richard does not have to trouble himself.

His father was a cotton merchant of adequate income and success, and there was nothing of distinction in his life, his interests, his ancestry, or his career. Commutation absorbed him more than Titians, and aside from a weekly journal of current events and a novel which he borrowed from the book club and did not read, he read nothing. Mrs. Kane's life was bounded by bridge in the Winter and plans for the Summer. Mr. Kane's horizons had latterly expanded to golf.

Richard is quickly admitted to a fraternity; but he never becomes truly a part of it, although "For a little while he had swallowed the adolescent delusion that a trio of Greek letters could cement a miscellaneous group of American youth into a mystic sodality of sympathy and interest."

Increasingly Kane seeks for intellectual companionship; at first, most shyly, he merely stays behind after a lecture to ask a none too relevant question; then, as the opportunity is given him to call on his instructor, he makes these visits with increasing frequency, and extends the duration of the call. The influence of an instructor in literature assumes great importance. "Language with him became a wonderful mystic vehicle of communion, loaded with shaded meanings and overtones Richard had never before known were possible to words." Richard himself tries to write poetry; and a little later a course in fine arts "gave him a pair of eager eyes to look out upon the shapes and colors of the world." The young man, we perceive, is growing a soul; or, supposing that he always had a soul, is beginning to come within hailing distance of that member. But there is peril here: poetry and cotton, Rembrandt and the daily ledger, do not mingle. Richard's absorption into beauty ends in rendering him an esthete. A year in Europe, his college course finished, widens the chasm, and when he has returned to the United States it is only to drift from job to job, his unfitness for any being, of course, manifest.

It may be objected that Edman has brought his composite character down here to too narrow a figure, but we think the objection will vanish if carefully considered. The majority of Richards would probably, upon graduation, go into their fathers' factories or banks or offices and become more or less an exact replica of the parent; if necessary, they would voluntarily blind themselves to the wider vision of beauty gained in the mystic years. But there would still always remain something of yearning, something of impatience and dissatisfaction with the life in which they had become involved. Mr. Edman has merely found himself confronted with the problem facing every dramatist—that of keeping a character at one and the same time both in the universal and the particular. If the composite character of Richard becomes momentarily a bit too individual, it is because he must become so or lose reality.

It will not be possible to follow Richard in every step of his progress. It is hardly necessary to say that he goes through such experiences as are, with more or less variety of detail, common to most. The author of the book implants his protégé in Greenwich Village, "in a little apartment on one of the side streets." But Mr. Edman has no interest in the blare and the glare of the Village: he takes it, we gather, rather as a symbol than for any reality the locale may possess. And it is also our opinion that in two score words he has come nearer than all the novelists of the Floyd Dell school to making clear just why there is the annual migration of youth, from every part of the country, to just that particular, and rather restricted, area of Manhattan Island:

It gave him the thing he had missed ever since coming back to America to join his family, a sense of being a personality and of living a life that was in external fact, as it had long been in essence, his own.

And it is for many another such observation as this, sensitive, penetrating, justly balanced, sagaciously humane, that Mr. Edman's Odyssey of youth will be cherished. One would like to make an anthology of them, but that is impossible. Two, however, may be thrown in, although quite irrelevantly. One is of those Village gatherings of the Intelligentsia:

The references to Moussorgsky, Marcel Proust, the Group of Six and Matisse made Richard feel he was moving in the very hum and centre of pioneer intellectual interests. And the febrile plunges these people made, via the newest psychology, into the dank places of the soul, made Richard feel both advanced and uneasy.

And the other concerns the girl whom eventually he marries:

It was among actualities that Helen lived, human and physical things. On walks into the country she would not babble of complexes and inhibitions, of imagism and introverts. Her conversation was touched off by actual flowers, birds, shapes and colors. Her eyes were not turned always vaguely on inward confusions, but specifically on outer things. Helen was naturalizing him again in the peace of the actual world.

The final battle of our young crusader, the last stretch of the journey of his soul, is a hunt to find God. And the same display of literary skill that has been evident throughout is apparent here. To make the discussion as impersonal as possible, Mr. Edman has recourse to the epistolary method. "For a time Richard had tasted of religion as a connoisseur sips wines." What he finds, what he comes to, the reader will best get from the letters to his former philosophy teacher. In conclusion the author quotations:

Would Richard succeed in making a religion without a God, and a poetry out of loyalty to ideals he had found in his own soul?

It would be difficult to overpraise this book. In its peculiar sphere "Richard Kane Looks at Life" is a unique contribution. It may be that the book preaches; if so, the wind is tempered to the most shorn of lambs. And we doubt if the consensus of judgment will be that this book does preach. It seems, rather, one of those inspirational things, but inspiration submitted to reason and rarely mellowed. The literary charm and flavor are undeniable. And to the present writer, who has found himself transported by Mr. Edman back to the instructorial chair he once occupied for a short time, although some years since, the exactitude with which the idealism of youth is interpreted seems both impressive and enlightening.

Arthur Ponsonby Appeals for Peace

NOW IS THE TIME: An Appeal for Peace. By Arthur Ponsonby. Portrait frontispiece. 183 pp. New York: Thomas Seltzer, Inc. $2.50.

It is manifest that Mr. Ponsonby's whole heart and deepest convictions went into the writing of this book. He makes such a moving appeal to people everywhere to set their faces sternly against war and to begin now to make another war impossible, and his purpose so thoroughly enlists the sympathy of any right feeling person, that one hesitates to point out the many things in it that seem to ignore fundamental facts of life as it is now organized and of human nature. From his point of view a something which he calls "authority," by which he seems to mean what the British call "the ruling classes," looms mountain high as the cause of wars, and his chief means for the prevention of war is to educate the masses of people, as opposed to "the ruling classes," into the conviction that they must and will and can refuse absolutely to do any of the fighting. Behind all martial wars he finds another conflict which he calls "the real war," and the enemy in that conflict must be conquered before international war can be ended. He does not say frankly that this "enemy" is capitalism, but apparently that is what he means. Mr. Ponsonby has been for many years a member of Parliament, and during the short-lived Labor Government of Ramsay MacDonald he was Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs. He has long been well known as a pacifist and a Socialist, upon both of which subjects he has written much. In his conclusions as to the methods which will best further the cause of peace and be most forceful in preventing war he rates high the preaching of Socialist doctrine, and he asserts that disarmament and peace cannot be "permanently established except on the basis of a socialistic society."

It is said that many editions of this book have been called for in England, and doubtless it will appeal strongly to those readers in this country who accept his fundamental contentions, while others who feel the importance of his thesis that now is the time to put forth every effort that will help to forestall future wars will find much in his book that is moving and forceful and eloquent.

A number of readers answered this request and several contributed copies of the poem, one of which has been forwarded to our correspondent.

FRANK HOPKINS, Syracuse, N. Y.—The poem asked for by M. L. T., in your issue of March 21 is, "An Order for a Picture," by Alice Cary, and begins:

O, good painter, tell me true,
Has your hand the cunning to draw
Shapes of things that you never saw?
Ay? Well, here is an order for you.

A number of readers answered this query, not a few of whom contributed copies of the poem, one of which has been forwarded to our correspondent. The poem is too long to publish, but it may be found in No. 5 of One Hundred Best Selections, and also in No. 8 of One Hundred Choice Selections.

"Planning and Plotting"

EFFIE I. DENEL, Philadelphia, Pa.—I think that the poem I enclose is what H. K. wants in your issue of March 28:

THE POOR LITTLE GUY.

While the legions are locked on the deadline,
While the dreadnoughts are glooming the seas,
While horrors of rumor and headline
Give a tang to an evening of ease,
Let us kneel in the dust of all faction,
Let us pray to the peace from on high
For a small unspectacular fraction—
The poor little guy!

In the fangs of the tangling wire
He slips in the slime of the dead;
He blinks at the spume of the fire
And the scream of the stream of the lead;
And yet—he knew nought of the plotting;
And nought can he profit thereby;
But his is the dying—and rotting—
The poor little guy!

Let us pray for his kine in the stable,
For his ass and his ox and his swine,
For his chair and his plate on the table,
For his cornfield and orchard and vine,
For the tilth where the women are plying,
For the bed where he never shall lie,
For the ache that is worse than the dying—
The poor little guy!

A pitiful pawn of Vienna,
Of kaiser, of king or of czar,
He is pushed to the pit of Gehenna,
To the slide of the great Abattoir,
He goes as the wailing denial,
As the infinite, travailing cry
Of the peace to be born from his trial—
The poor little guy!

The peace of the pure consummation
Foretold in the ages before,
When nation shall strive not with nation,
Nor shall they learn war any more.
But, Jesus!—the carrion faces
That glare at the pestilent sky,
And the trench at the foot of the glacis—
The poor little guy!

"Great Deeds"

SARAH M. SEARING, Auburn, N. Y.—The correct quotation of the verse inquired for by E. H. B. in your issue of March 28 follows:

Work for some good be it ever so slowly;
Cherish some flower, be it ever so lowly;
Labor!—All labor is noble and holy;
Let thy great deeds be thy prayer to thy God.

The entire poem of six stanzas (eight lines each) is entitled, "Labor," and is by Frances S. Osgood (1812-50). It may be found in "Songs of Three Centuries," edited by J. G. Whittier (Houghton Mifflin Company, 1878), and also in No. 7 of "One Hundred Choice Selections" (Penn Publishing Company, Philadelphia). The lines quoted above are the last four of the poem.

"A Thousand Feet Below"

FRANK HOPKINS, Syracuse, N. Y.—The lines:

We checked our pace, the red road sharply rounding;
We heard the troubled flow
Of the dark olive depths of pines resounding referred to by J. B. J. in your issue of March 28 are the opening stanza of "The Hawk's Nest," by Bret Harte. The poem appears in Vol. 12, page 156, of "The Writings of Bret Harte," published by the Riverside Press, Boston.
A thousand feet below.

E. H. Kronhage, Milwaukee, Wis., also answered this query.

"My Crown"

PHILADELPHUS—L. H. B., in your issue of March 28, refers to the lines, "my crown is in my heart, not on my head," which may be found in Shakespeare's "King Henry VI" (part 3, scene 1).

Louella D. Everett, Boston, Mass.; W. J. Orum, Montgomery, Ala.; P. J. Joyce, Proctor, Vt.; James S. Tryon, Providence, R. I.; Malcolm Graeme Olson, LeRoy, N. Y.; J. W. Simpson, Rutland, Vt.; George D. Chesson, Springfield, Mass.; D. M. Holbrook, Suffern, N. Y., and Frank H. Coughlin, Scranton, Pa., also answered this appeal.

"The Eternal Shore"

LOUELLA D. EVERETT, Boston, Mass.—I can supply the poem for which R. E. D. inquired in your issue of March 28, but I do not know the author's name. It follows:

WHAT IS DEATH?

What is death? A little broadening of a ripple
Upon the Eternal shore.
A little loosening of the bands that cripple—
This and nothing more.
What's death? A parting of the cloud above us
Which hides the sun,
A golden vision of the souls that love us
And labor done.
What's death? The opening of a perfect flower;
No watcher sees the silent spirit, who at twilight hour
The bandman frees.
What's death? God's mercy strange
Uncomprehended;
The undiscovered goal;
The land of promise when the toil
Is ended—
The day-dawn of the soul.

"Beside the Silent Sea"

ANNA BUSH, East Orange, N. J.—Answering L. A. K.'s request in your issue of March 28 for the lines: "And so beside the silent sea I wait the muffled oar." They are contained in the nineteenth stanza of Whittier's poem, "The Eternal Goodness," which may be found in any of his collected works and also many poetry anthologies.

A number of readers answered this query. Mrs. H. W. Tinsman, Washington, D. C., contributed the poem which has been been forwarded to our correspondent.

"Mencken, Nathan and God"

BERTON BRALEY (Players Club), New York.—The verses, "Mencken, Nathan and God," which your correspondents have been asking for, are a parody of Eugene Field's poem written by me and originally published in Don Marquis's column in The New York Evening Sun about five years ago. I can send a copy if you want it.

"A Word at Random"

J. B. GAVIT, Albany, N. Y.—The lines:

Oh, many a shaft at random sent Finds mark the archer little meant!

wanted by V. C., and slightly misquoted, are from Sir Walter Scott's "The Lord of the Isles" (canto 5, stanza 18), and may be found in any edition of his collected works.

Mary J. Parker, Worcester, Mass.; Louella D. Everett, Boston, Mass.; M. C. Brandt, Hoboken, N. J., and V. D. Stocking, West New York, N. J., also answered this request.

"Johnny and I"

SARAH M. SEARING, Auburn, N. Y.—In your issue of April 4 C. E. B asks for the recitation entitled "Johnny and I." I wonder if "Crossing the Moor" is meant. The first four lines are:

I am thinking of the glen, Johnny,
And the little gushing brook,
Of the birds upon the hazel copse,
And the violets in the nook.

If this is the poem wanted by your correspondent I will be glad to send a copy. It is by Mrs. S. E. Mayo and may be found in "Poems of Home Life," collected by H. P. W., and published by the American Tract Society, New York.

"The Town of Ballymoney"

LOUELLA D. EVERETT, Boston, Mass.—The song M. P. asks for in your issue of April 4 is, "The Ballymoney Conversazione," published by Pigott & Co., Grafton Street, Dublin, Ireland. The Ditson Company (music publishers in New York) could, doubtless, import a copy for M. P. It begins:

If there ever was a place
'Twas the quiet little town of Ballymoney,
Where the people lived in space
Till a person with a mind
Of the fashionable kind,
Suggested we should have a conversazione.

JUST PUBLISHED!

OR—SPEAKING SERIOUSLY, we're delighted to announce Series 5. Exactly two years ago we brought out the first Cross Word Puzzle Book ever published. We've sold over a million copies in America and England on a money-back guarantee. And the demand hasn't slackened yet. Even hard-boiled booksellers (as well as our own office staff—who might well have become calloused by this time) are taking home copies as a sort of perpetual insurance against boredom.

Church and State Still Wrestling in Eternal Rome

Pius XI and Mussolini Typify the Rival Popes and Caesars of a Thousand Years

THE POPE. By Jean Carrère. Translated by Arthur Chambers. New York. Henry Holt & Co.

By P. W. WILSON

TO read this brief but exuberant book on the Papacy has been a pleasure. It deals with that "Roman Question" which interests at once the Vatican and the Quirinal. And it appears at a moment when the Eternal City happens to be living under a dual dictatorship, the one spiritual and the other temporal, which brings two powerful personalities, Pope Pius XI and Benito Mussolini, into immediate but still undefined contact. It is in the light of this situation that we invite attention to these pages.

Many years ago, Jean Carrère, a journalist of France, went to Rome as correspondent of Le Temps. There he found a town at first sight like the rest, with houses similar to all other houses in Europe and men with powers like those of other men.

In the appearance of the churches, there was "nothing peculiarly mystical." Outside were beggars and within were beadles. "What?" he asked. "In Rome nothing more than this?".

As months passed, he felt what he calls the "grip" of Rome, "calm and unhurried" but "irresistible"—that Rome which is at once ancient, medieval and modern, a continuous trinity, three in one:

When you leave the station you come at once upon Constantine's Thermae, the Basilica of S. Maria degli Angeli. If you go to a cosmopolitan hotel you will find it resting against the wall of an old convent. If you visit the Palatine you will hear through the crumbling ruins the hum of an electric factory. If you cross the town on foot, the porch of a Renaissance church or the steps of an imperial palace will serve you as a refuge from a passing motor car or tram. All this is such an integral part of Rome that one ceases to feel surprise at seeing news vendors displaying their aggressive placards against the portico of a pagan temple or on the steps of a pontifical basilica.

Like Goethe, then, M. Carrère cries, "O Rome! thou art truly a world." And, indeed, he goes further. For he can see no world outside Rome. "All things," he declares, "circle round this crest." And since the days before Romulus, "there is no great act, no great man whose beginning or end was not Rome." Even Athens "was only a bright stage in the onward march," and "in Paris, Berlin, New York, Vienna, Madrid—curiously M. Carrère forgets Sianfu, Damascus and London—"one is conscious of the ephemeral, the individual." These "cities of swell and spray" are no more than "moments in centuries of onward moving history." And "in Rome alone, one realizes the eternal and the universal."

To examine a hyperbole so refreshing is a necessary but an ungracious task. Yet does not M. Carrère answer himself? For he asks why the Roman Empire—this "most splendid form of organization"—became "morally and materially, only a heap of ruins." According to Nietzsche, it was because the "anarchist saints," as "an act of piety," played "the vampire" and drained old Rome of her red blood. M. Carrère, however, denies this. He tells us that if Rome collapsed it was not because she was permeated by Christianity, but because she failed to be comprehensive. In the view of M. Carrère, "the empire could only continue to live by continual expansion." Unless the barbarians beyond it became citizens, they would become invaders. It is a theory that explains why the British, holding India, are also in Mesopotamia; why the United States is in Panama and the Philippines; and why a League of Nations, meeting in Geneva, includes Japan. But it is a theory that shatters Rome's claim to have been universal.

Rome at her greatest was not even German or Abyssinian, much less Persian, Tibetan and Hindu. Her use of the phrase "orbes Terrarum" is a joke of geography. And scarcely less extravagant is her boast of antiquity. Compared with the illustrious cities of China, India and the Near East, Rome is recent. What we gather from M. Carrère's rhapsody is, then, that, having lived in Rome he has learned to talk as Mussolini insists that Romans shall talk. And to M. Carrère, as a Latin, the language is—if not his mother tongue—at least the language of grand maternity. It is French two generations back.

If the Roman Empire were no more than a local phenomenon, the fault lay—so M. Carrère tells us—with Augustus, the first Caesar. Lacking vision, he "saw tomorrow but not the day after" and limited the sway of Rome by "natural frontiers." But why was Caesar Augustus so stupid? It was because he knew the range of the weapons in his armory. Not only was he limited to the use of force but the force itself was limited by ignorance. For the rapid movement of troops and the instant transmission of news that is, "two forces working in common for the reign of justice upon earth." But M. Carrère sees Peter not as the successor to Caesar, still less as his colleague, but as his challenger. Caesar wields "the sword of Nimrod and Nebuchadnezzar in all its forms." Peter "represents always the word of Jesus," "gospel." And Caesar is "the real anti-Christ," between whom and Peter is "absolute antipathy and consequently a perpetual struggle, from which Peter is destined to emerge the conqueror."

To M. Carrère, then, with his mind bounded by the limits of Augustus, it seems that Caesar is still anti-Christ, that Constantine has still to see the cross in the sky and that Henry has still to stand barefoot at Canossa. What precisely he would say of Calvin Coolidge we do not know. Calvin Coolidge and all he means lie wholly beyond M. Carrère's horizon. But we can scarcely refrain from asking how Benito Mussolini, the successor to the Caesars, appreciates a compliment so delicate.

After all, the dictator might ask questions on his side. Is it really a fact that the State, merely because it uses force, is an organized iniquity? Has not the Church herself used force and inspired the use of force in others? And can we say that "the word of Jesus" is heard more clearly in the dungeons of the Inquisition and in the massacre of St. Bartholomew's Eve than in a postoffice which, though secular, delivers a letter from a son to his mother and hands out a pension to the aged? Of the errors of the Church in the Middle Ages, M. Carrère offers an explanation at once mystical and, we believe, true. With a delightful charm he tells the story of St. Peter's life, revealing him as a man subject to sudden impulses and sudden lapses. So has it been, he argues, with the Church of which St. Peter was "the founder." If the Church used the sword, so did the Apostle; the persecuted were as Malchus who lost his ear; and as Caesar was pardoned, so are his successors.

It is not the persecuting Church that fascinates M. Carrère. In his pages we can discern how powerful has been the spell of Pope Pius X whose "whole soul vibrated in response to the breath of suffering humanity." We read:

He was, without doubt, of all the Popes the one who, in courage, robust goodness and sweep of soul, approached nearest to the fisher of Galilee. Every time I saw his pale, virile, yet gentle face, his deep, tender eyes and his smile tempered with pity, I was moved as before some being of a higher order, and I remember the tears trembling in my eyes when, one beautiful April day in 1909, in the decorated basilica, I saw him suddenly seize the banner of France brought for the beatification of Joanne d'Arc and unexpectedly and spontaneously kiss it. He was full, of these sudden, splendid inspirations, which mark heroes, geniuses and saints.

That the tragedy of August, 1914, killed this Pontiff may be accepted as history. Only over the details is there doubt. One story has been that Pius X wrote to the Emperor Franz Josef a letter, begging for peace and that the Emperor refused to see the Papal Nuncio. Certain it is that when the Austrian Ambassador called on the Pope and asked him "to bless the 'necessary' enterprise of the Central Powers," he was "much surprised and even indignant," and said, "I bless peace, not war."

But the actual collapse came when there was neither electricity nor steam available. And the troops, when moved, had no explosives.

It was, then, force that failed. And M. Carrère insists that Rome survives today because for force she has substituted a faith. Authorities like Taine, Gibbon, Léon Daudet and Gregorovius, all quoted by M. Carrère, express this by saying that the ecclesiastical Rome of today is merely "the heiress" of the imperial Rome of yesterday. But to this theory M. Carrère issues a spirited denial. "It is," he writes, "exactly as if one were to say that the monks who founded an abbey in Capri on the site of the palace where a Roman Emperor had held his orgies, could be called the heirs of Tiberias." The old Rome thus died. And the new Rome is a resurrection from the dead.

It is here that M. Carrère comes to close quarters with Mussolini. For the ideal of Mussolini is essentially the dream of Dante. In the mind of the poet, Church and State were "those two halves of God"—

About Books, More or Less: Newspaper Realists

By SIMEON STRUNSKY

DEPENDING upon memory both for the date and the precise text, it must have been nearly a dozen years ago that F. P. A. hailed the vernal equinox:

The backbone of Winter is broken,
The river is running with sled,
The phrases of baseball are spoken
In pictures by Briggs and by Ted.
In short, it is Spring.

Since that time the world has had its way with many of the cartoonists; reinforced in the case of Clare A. Briggs by golf. The seasons come and go with a minimum of pictorial comment except from the specialized artists of the sporting page. In Briggs, Tad, Webster, Ding, Fontaine Fox, Goldberg, the march of the equinoxes and the solstices has been shoved upstage by the permanent human comedy. The cartoonist has ceased to be timely, save for the minimum requirements. Obviously, Mr. and Mrs. will not debate fur coats in August and Andy Gump will not run for President in March. A certain amount of formal deference is still paid to New Year's Day, the cherry tree anniversary, straw hat day and the Fourth of July. But these are only the prescribed scenic variations within which the cartoonist frames the traits of a constant humanity. Mrs. Mutt loves her husband with the same rollingpin in November as in May. Joe and Vi talk far into the Summer nights and the Winter nights. Jiggs and his Maggie live their lives independently of the calendar. Aunt Eppie Hoxx surmounts Spring freshets and February blizzards with the same resourcefulness. The cartoonist has largely ceased to be a journalist. Escape from the fret and fever of the news columns is to be sought precisely in the eternities of the cartoon and the strip.

WHAT John T. McCutcheon has said of Briggs in the preface, Briggs himself says of the outstanding men in his profession in the text of "How to Draw Cartoons" (Harper and Brothers): "his cartoons of family life are cross-sections of the family life of every average American household." The newspaper comic has made notable progress toward the ideal of the comédie humaine. The emphasis is no doubt on the comedy, but the hint of deeper and sharper things is there. A flick of the pen or the crayon may open up scope of those vistas and horizons and mysteries for which the remorseless school of realism in literature is in the habit of probing with the aid of a crowbar and a stick of dynamite. Some time before the surrealists declared war on the taboos encompassing American life, the cartoonists were hinting at the existence of realities and problems. It is rather absurd to speak of a time when the American reading public really believed that married people lived happily ever afterward. The enormous rôle played by the rollingpin in our earlier newspaper art would be sufficient evidence to the contrary. Briggs rejoices at the virtual emancipation of the cartoon from the classic tradition of the woman who balances her domestic budget by going through her husband's pockets at night. We may rejoice with him, and at the same time acknowledge that here was at least a suggestion of that economic dependence and independence of woman which is now a matter of serious and detailed inquiry.

Not that Briggs directly advances such high claims for his profession and his art. He is concerned with nothing more than "the funny little twists in our makeup." He warns against cynicism. He insists on good nature. But he insists, too, on real people, and he counts it to the high credit of a man like Tad that the latter's grotesqueries are derived from an intimate acquaintance with the mass life. Briggs's generalizations do not emerge as part of a cohesive philosophy of the cartoonist's art. They enter naturally into the plan of this very honest and delightful book, which is just what it professes to be: A guide, in so far as theory ever can be a guide for the aspiring youth who want to learn how to draw and sell cartoons. One specific point in the author's mind is obviously the problem of the correspondence schools, against which his message is, on the whole, a warning. Very few such schools serve their purpose or their public, and they are not the ones which advertise a guaranteed position at $100 a week upon the completion of the course. Compared with the number of aspirants the $100 positions are scarce, and the bigger prizes, though dazzling, have been rendered inaccessible to all but the very few by the syndicate system. That system has greatly cut down opportunity for the beginner. His local editor can buy a syndicated comic strip for a dollar a day if that is all his circulation will permit. It will not be a very good strip, but it is enough to clutter up the path for home talent.

NATURALLY the beginner will refuse to be discouraged. Therefore, having done his duty in the way of suggesting that there are times when it is best not to learn how to draw cartoons, Briggs proceeds to tell him how they may be drawn. It is not very often that a guide which does not profess to be a textbook will descend to such concrete and intimate instruction, backed up by personal example. The technique of draftsmanship receives comparatively little attention, because in the author's view that is a secondary matter. "Anybody may learn to draw, whether he be talented or not." "Drawing is not the chief essential in cartooning; the ability to draw is needed only to the extent of being able to put over the idea in an effective manner." As between a good, general education and artistic talent, Briggs is almost willing to dispense with the talent. The beginning and the end is the "idea," which, of course, the correspondence schools cannot teach. Briggs admits that there is plenty of evidence against him when he asserts that the newspapers still hope for brains in newspaper comics; nevertheless, he insists that brains, originality and a fine imagination will be the "big winner" in the long run.

One might carry the argument further. There are times when Briggs seems to hold that in a cartoon the important thing is not the picture at all but the accompanying text. Is the dominance of the cartoon and the comic strip to be classed with the picture tabloid as symptoms of a decline in the prestige of the written word? Is visual communication destined to supplant verbal communication? According to our author the trend, as reflected in his own profession, is the other way. He has an entire chapter on the subject of ballooning. The "balloon" is the little package of human speech issuing from the mouths of the pictured characters, human or unhuman, as the case may be.

Formerly the contents of the balloon were highly standardized. Most of the climaxes in American life and emotion, as visualized by the comic artists, found adequate utterance in "Plop," "Bam," "Boom," "Bang," "Zip" and "Zowie" emanating from some distance off the right hand side of the page and approximately five feet five inches in front of a pair of marvelously rigid and aligned human feet rapidly retreating. This horizontal and greatly condensed vernacular is still practiced on a large scale in the funnies, but on the lower levels of the art.

IN the bigger and better cartoons the primitive ejaculations have been supplanted by a natural, racy and, within the limits of balloon space, quite elaborate discourse. Briggs says that he cannot emphasize too strongly the conversational feature in cartooning. For himself, he has gone so far as to concentrate, after his first penciled sketch, on the talk. "I ink-in the conversational matter before I draw the faces in the final form, because of the supreme importance of the talk." Sidney Smith's Gumps "are truly adventures in conversation." That would be true of Briggs's own "Mr. and Mrs.," of Webster's studies in the civilization of bridge and poker, of Tad's Indoor and Outdoor Sports.

This conversation of the people as portrayed in the comic artist's "balloon" is realistic, with the proviso that holds for every form of art: the effects are, of course, deliberately heightened. Andy, Joe and Jiggs are more incisive, more reflective and certainly more amusing than the people one overhears in the subway and on the bus. But when the inevitable discount is made, they are far truer to their model than the average presentation of the real life of the American people, between cloth covers, at $2.50 a copy. Cynicism, says Briggs, must be avoided by the cartoonist, whose mission it is to amuse. In that case the cartoonist is fortunate enough to have his professional interests coincide, roughly at least, with the realities of the world he deals with. Andy Gump is closer to the facts when Sidney Smith has him running for office than he would be in the act of delivering a speech before the Chamber of Commerce in the pages of a contemporary novel.

In the life of America—as, for that matter, anywhere else—the "funny little twists" make up a far more important body of experience than the higher "realism" is willing to admit. That drear monotony of the common life which our literature has been so insistent on exploiting is in large measure the result of a theory and a method. If you set out to discover a "Manhattan Transfer," you will, I assume, find what you are looking for. You will obtain one form of "beauty." But the corrective is supplied in part by, let us say, Tad, who discerns in the common life a capacity for laughter and other human exercises which the sterner realists are so greatly inclined to deny. The citizenry of the comic artist is the answer, and the sufficient answer, to the fetid mass of existence into which the other kind of artist delves for his own peculiar intimations of beauty.

EITHER it is no coincidence, or else it is a happy coincidence, that the cartoon is so closely associated with the sporting page, even when it has no concern with sport. Life as a game, life as a sport, life as an adventure, emerges from those studies of the funny little twists of human character depicted between the latest returns from the Miami race track and the latest returns from Mr. McGraw's Spring training at Sarasota. There are two ways of picturing the Polo Grounds. One way is to leave out the excitement and concentrate on the empty benches after the game. In the litter of peanut shells and pop bottles and score cards and disheveled newspapers, there is sufficient material for a devastating picture of how the people amuses itself, sufficient material for the more recondite form of beauty. But after all, there was a game, and a great many thousands of ordinary men were uplifted out of themselves to something of that "ecstasy" in which life, according to the accepted text, finds its only meaning. If you are a newspaper realist you will probably fix your attention on the ninth inning, with no prejudice to the ironic human aspects which a ninth inning will reveal. If you are a stern realist you will fix your attention on the peanut shells and the pop bottles.

Because the American cartoon was practicing a modified realism when the American novel was trafficking in syrup, the cartoon has escaped the lurch of the pendulum from syrup to gall and wormwood, unlike the contemporary American novel. Because the cartoon at all times recognized the presence in life of the marital rolling pin and the Katzenjammer Kid, it is not overwhelmed today by the problems of sex in marriage and the strife of the generations. At any rate, the American citizen today is a feller who sadly needs a friend's good services against the remorseless and unhumorous realists of the Spring and Autumn publishing season; and such services are forthcoming in appreciable measure from the daily cartoons, yes, and even the Sunday comics. I am not at all certain that in the matter of maintaining a human proportion the comic strip is not a higher form of art than the Biff, Wham and Bang of the remorseless realists.

Here is "Beatrice"
Following the acclaim of "Fraulein Else," the publication of Arthur Schnitzler's new novel "BEATRICE" is significant news

BEATRICE is the name of Arthur Schnitzler's new novel, just published.
BEATRICE is the story of a mother who sets out to protect her son from the wiles of a beautiful adventuress and finds herself embarked on her own greatest adventure.
BEATRICE, in any other hands, might be merely an intensely dramatic story—perhaps even sensational, but—
BEATRICE, in the hands of Arthur Schnitzler, becomes, like its predecessor, "Fraulein Else," an unforgettable masterpiece—we quote The New York Times—"an opal flawlessly cut."
BEATRICE is aglow with the enchantment of Vienna and the nuances that make the style of Schnitzler difficult to describe and impossible to imitate.
BEATRICE is printed and bound in the same distinctive format as "Fraulein Else".
BEATRICE—again like "Fraulein Else"—is so beautifully translated by Agnes Jacques that you forget it is a translation.

Queries and Answers

This department is designed to assist in the location of complete versions of poems and their sources, the names of authors, &c., which cannot be found through the usual channels of anthologies and books of reference. THE TIMES receives a great many more queries than it can publish. It endeavors, therefore, to select those of the greatest general interest. Queries should be addressed to the Editor of Queries and Answers, NEW YORK TIMES. They should be written on one side of the paper only, and must contain the name and address of the writer as evidence of good faith.

QUERIES

"Take Me All"

MT.—I have read somewhere a little poem by Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the gist of which is, "Lord, when Thou takest me, take me all." I would be grateful to some one who would tell me where I might find the lines in their entirety.

"In Paradise"

P. M. W.—Would some one complete the poem and tell me the name of the author who wrote these lines:

Her spirit slumbered through the day
And waked not at its close,
But slept the long, long night away
In statue-like repose.

"Years Long Vanished"

J. C.—Can any one tell me the name of the author of these lines and where they may be found?

Oh, go back across the years long vanished,
To have the words unsaid, the deeds undone,
The errors canceled, the deep shadows banished,
In the glad sense of a new world begun.

"The Ship That Never Returned"

J. E. G.—I would appreciate information as to where I may obtain a copy of the poem, "The Ship That Shall Never Return," written by William F. Kirk, at the time of the Titanic disaster.

"A Paltry Wish"

H. E. F.—Would some reader furnish the complete old poem and author's name, which begins:

I wish a paltry wish indeed—
My purse were somewhat fatter,
That I might cheer the child of need
And not my pride to flatter.

"My Brother With Me Played"

W. H. McD.—Forty years ago I learned a poem which contained these lines, "While my brother with me played would that I had loved him more," and I would like to know where to find the complete poem and also the author's name.

"Ads We Used to Know"

C. V. C.—The following lines:

The ads that once we used to know
Of Bacchus' fountain free,
Are now, alas, no more, and oh,
The difference to me!

are the last stanza of a poem that I have seen which refers to the similarity between literature and advertising. I should like to obtain the entire poem and to learn something about the author, whose name I do not know.

"People People Marry"

B. B.—Where can I find the poem that contains these lines, "But the people people marry are the queerest folk of all."

"The Mortgage"

W. G. M.—Can any reader furnish the rest of the lines belonging to a poem printed many years ago entitled, "The Mortgage," the first part of which runs like this: "He bought in 1625 a farm of stumps and stones, his name was God-be-glorified, his surname it was Jones"?

"A Centipede and a Frog"

C. P. W.—Please tell me from what poem the following verse is taken and who is its author?

A centipede was happy quite Until a frog in fun
Said, "Pray, which leg comes after which?"
This raised her mind to such a pitch,
She lay distracted in a ditch,
Considering how to run.

"The Brotherhood of Man"

A. C. E. S.—Can any one tell me where to find the poem by Viebach, entitled, "The Brotherhood of Man"? It contains thirty or forty verses and deals with the origin of man and religion and general progress.

"An Essay on Water"

J. W.—Some time ago I heard a very interesting humorous essay on the subject of water. It outlined the various forms of water, such as that formed in the crystal spring, in the morning's dew and even in the baby's tear. After describing water in all its forms the essay closes with a reference to water as a drink. Can any one give me the reference to this essay and where it may be found?

"From Soul to Soul"

C. B. H.—Can any one tell me where to find the poem containing this line, "Our echoes roll from soul to soul"?

"Maud Muller"

H. A. A.—I would like to have a copy of a parody on Maud Muller that was published about fifteen years ago.

"On Choosing a Mother"

R. C.—I want to find a poem and the author's name that appeared in a Pasadena paper several years ago. It was written by one of our modern poets and the idea was the spirit of an unborn child telling of the mother it would choose.

ANSWERS

"The Grace of God"

FREDERICK H. SHEPARD, Buffalo, N. Y.—In your issue of April 4 M. W. R. asks whether it was John Bunyan or Bishop Wilberforce who said, "There but for the grace of God goes ——." The Dictionary of National Biography credits it "traditionally" to John Bradford (martyr, 1510-1555) on the strength of the 1853 edition of his writings (Vol. 2, page 43). It has been attributed to Richard Baxter, John Wesley and others.

Several correspondents write that the quotation has been credited to Bishop Latimer, John Howard, the English philanthropist, and John Newton, an English clergyman.

Charles J. Chapman, Brooklyn, N. Y.; John Meylert Mullin, Slingerlands, N. Y., and Sarah M. Searing, Auburn, N. Y., answered this appeal. The quotation is a fugitive one which has never been authoritatively traced.

B. B. Valentine

(Sept. 7, 1843—March 30, 1926.)

LOUELLA D. EVERETT, Boston, Mass.—If space permits, could the appended poem, "The Commandments," by B. B. Valentine, be printed? So many readers must treasure clippings from Queries and Answers wherein Mr. Valentine identified elusive quotations for them, that I think they would all like to have this poem from his own pen as a memorial. Let us hold him in grateful remembrance.

THE COMMANDMENTS.
B. B. Valentine.

I am God! thou must adore me,
No other gods shall be before me.
Thou shalt not ever make to thee
A graven image that may be
Like aught that's in the heavens above,
Or earth beneath if God thou love;
Or waters that are underground,
Or in the lowest depths profound.
Before such shalt thou ne'er bow down,
Then need not fear God's wrathful frown.

Forever, too, thou shalt refrain
From taking God's great name in vain;
For guiltless held thou wilt not be,
But punished for eternity.

Holy keep the Sabbath day—
Remember that the Lord did say:
Six days may thy work be done,
One day to rest for every one.
In it must there no labor be
For servant, man, or maid, or thee;
Repose for cattle, ox, and ass,
As well for stranger who may pass
That Sabbath in thy home, or stay,
For God hath blessed this holy day.

Be sure thou keep'st this fifth command
For length of days upon the land,
Of which the Lord is gracious donor,
Thy father and thy mother honor.

Remember 'tis against God's will
To murder, slay, assault, or kill.

Adultery is a grievous crime,
Forbidden by this code sublime.

Thou shalt not rob, nor trick nor steal,
Or wrath divine thou'll surely feel.

Against thy neighbor have a care,
False witness thou dost never bear.

If thou wouldst lead a godly life,
Thou must not covet neighbor's wife,
His house, his cattle, nor his land.
Break not this last and tenth command,
And envy not his fame or health;
Let him in peace enjoy his wealth.

"A Prince Was Drowned"

LOUELLA D. EVERETT, Boston, Mass.—The poem wanted by E. G. H. (March 21) is, "He Never Smiled Again," by Felicia D. Hemans (1794-1835). Henry I had crossed to France to secure the allegiance of the Norman barons and was returning in triumph. Prince William, the King's favorite son, did not sail aboard his father's vessel, but followed in the White Ship, commanded by Fitz-Stephen, the royal hereditary pilot. Somewhere in midchannel the White Ship separated from the fleet and went down with all on board on Nov. 25, 1120. King Henry I is said never to have been seen to smile again.

Dante Gabriel Rossetti has also told the story, in his poem, "The White Ship," to be found on pages 192-200 of his poetical works, published by T. Y. Crowell Company.

HE NEVER SMILED AGAIN.
By Mrs. Hemans.

The bark that held the prince went down,
The sweeping waves rolled on;
And what was England's glorious crown
To him that wept a son?
He lived, for life may long be borne
Ere sorrow breaks its chain;
Why comes not death to those who mourn?
He never smiled again.

There stood proud forms before his throne,
The stately and the brave;
But who could fill the place of one—
That one beneath the wave?
Before him passed the young and fair,
In pleasure's reckless train;
But seas dashed o'er his son's bright hair—
He never smiled again.

He sat where festal bowls went round;
He heard the minstrel sing;
He saw the tourney's victor crowned
Amid the knightly ring.
A murmur of the restless deep
Was blent with every strain,
A voice of winds that would not sleep—
He never smiled again.

Hearts, in that time, closed o'er the trace
Of vows once fondly poured,
And strangers took the kinsman's place
At many a joyous board;
Graves which true love had bathed with tears
Were left to Heaven's bright rain;
Fresh hopes were born for other years—
He never smiled again!

Many readers who answered this query tell us that the poem was contained in McGuffey's Fourth Reader. It may be found in Stevenson's "Home Book of Verse." A copy has been sent to our correspondent.

"A Sigh Too Much"

JOHN MEYLERT MULLIN, Slingerlands, N. Y.—The lines requested by S. F. in your issue of March 28 are from George MacDonald's poem, "Down the Lane" (from Phantasies). It is given in full herewith:

Alas, how easily things go wrong!
A sigh too much, or a kiss too long,
And there follows a mist and a weeping rain,
And life is never the same again.

Alas, how hardly things go right!
'Tis hard to watch in a Summer night
For the sigh will come, and the kiss will stay,
And the Summer night is a Wintry day.

And yet how easily things go right,
If the sigh and a kiss of a Summer's night
Come deep from the soul in the stronger ray
That is born in the light of the Winter's day.

And things can never go badly wrong,
If the heart be true and the love be strong,
For the mist, if it comes, and the weeping rain,
Will be changed by the love into sunshine again.

A number of readers answered this request, not a few of whom sent in copies of the poem. One has been forwarded to our correspondent.

"Little Foxes"

MRS. W. V. HAWKINS, Wheeling, W. Va.—In reply to the query of M. T. P. in your issue of March 28, a poem, "Little Foxes," by Robert Burdette, may be found in "Best Selections, No. 15," published by the Penn Publishing Company. Another of the same title was written by A. H. Morrell and may be found in "Little People's Speaker" or "Poetry and Prose for Young People," both published by the Penn Publishing Company.

"The World Is Like a Book"

MRS. LAURENCE JONES, Bangor, Me.—In answer to the request of G. E. L. in your issue of March 28 for the lines:

It's like a book. I think, this bloomin' world,
Which you can read and care for just so long,
But presently you feel that you will die
Unless you get the page you're readin' done,
An' turn another—likely not so good;
But what you're after is to turn 'em all.

They are from Rudyard Kipling's poem entitled, "Sestina of the Tramp Royal," and is contained in his collected verse. The poem is too long

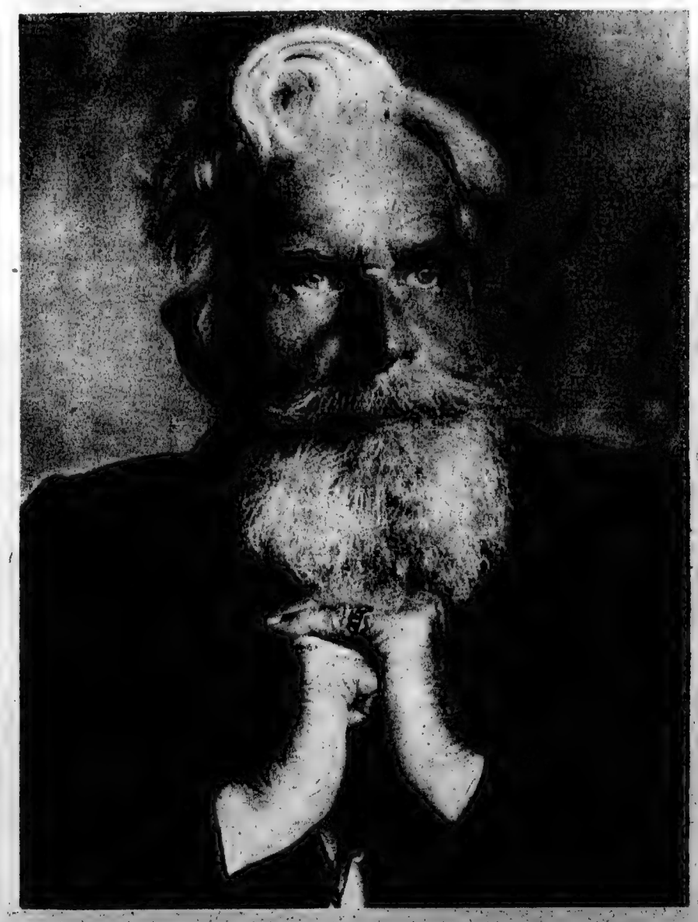
Havelock Ellis, to Whom Life Is a Dance

Isaac Goldberg Supplies the First Full-Length Picture of The English Thinker



Havelock Ellis.

HAVELOCK ELLIS. By Isaac Goldberg. 359 pp. New York: Simon & Schuster. $4.

By EVANS CLARK

HAVELOCK ELLIS is not a powerful sort of person; he is shy, dislikes social life and abhors a controversy. So great is his reserve that his riance is rarely direct. "In that silent passivity of yours," Olive Schreiner wrote him, "you always have a shield up between you and the world." In an age of causes, caucuses and committees he has kept his quiet of life undisturbed by external pressures and demands. He is not in the least aggressive or compelling. To think of him as "selling" anything, even an idea, is ludicrous. He does not "take a stand" for or against anything or anybody.

His published works have this same essentially passive quality. They set out to prove no thesis and they develop no positive philosophy. They are essentially descriptive—intellectual travel books in which the varied scenes of the human mind are recorded with the objective and meticulous care of the trained reporter who meddles not with what he sees, and with the sympathy and understanding of a saint. Life for him is not a "serious business," nor yet is it a battle between the forces of light and powers of dark. He is beyond, or rather above, good and evil. Life at its worst is a spectacle, at its best a dance.

"One is so often tempted in this world," he writes—and it comes as surprise that he has even been tempted, "to allow one's self to be lashed into rage by its intolerance, its sordidness, its imbecility, even its mere tame monotony. • • • Let us never forget that we have been so constituted as to be able to regard life as a spectacle." Perhaps his best-known work he has called "The Dance of Life."

Although taken separately the personal characteristics and published works of Havelock Ellis are lacking in drive and power, yet the sum total of them has made as deep an impression on the thought of the day as those of the most energetic fighter, the most indefatigable propagandist. And to make an impression requires force—of some kind. Olive Schreiner described Ellis as a "cross between Christ and a faun." He has unquestionably embodied something of the Christ-paradox of passivity and power and yet he has none of the rigidities and moralisms which organized Christianity has built into the conventional conception of its Founder.

It is interesting to speculate whether Havelock Ellis would have made so positive an impression on the world if he had concerned himself with subjects that were innocuous or conventional. In a field where every one is positive and emphatic, it is sometimes more positive to be passive. Ellis has chosen the erotic emotions of men and women as his chief literary preoccupation. That is the one subject, of course, about which all but the most sophisticated know just what they think and feel—and with the maximum of intensity. Not to have a dogmatic opinion in such matters has been considered not negatively, but affirmatively, dangerous. To be candid and understanding, merely to record the facts without prejudice, is, in such a situation, the dramatic and forceful thing to do—and that is just what Ellis has done. The temper of spirit, the quality of mind which he has brought to this task has unquestionably been one of the great contributions of his generation.

It is a presentation of this temper of spirit and quality of mind that Mr. Goldberg has attempted rather than a comprehensive biography of Ellis or an analysis of his literary output. The result is disappointing because it might have been so much better; but of great value because it has never been done at all before. Mr. Goldberg's is the first biography of Havelock Ellis to appear either here or in England. It is an extraordinarily uneven piece of work. Paragraphs of real insight and beauty of expression jostle others marred by almost unpardonable crudities. That Mr. Goldberg is an ardent disciple rather than an even-handed critic is obvious. His devotion leads him into extravagances of thought and expression that often take the power from thrusts that would otherwise be far more penetrating.

In this book [he says by way of introduction] I have not attempted to write a conventional biography or a conventional critique. My interest, as always, has been only secondarily in book and document; first of all, and last, comes the warm red blood of which printer's ink is but the cold symbol.

The quotation is typical of the quality of Mr. Goldberg's mind—conventionally unconventional, exuberant, uncritical. But he has performed a service in gathering together a mass of revealing documents and arranging them in a pattern which brings out the essential outlines of Ellis's personality. An exceptionally attractive one it is to those who like sensitiveness and simplicity rather than blood and thunder, who relish understanding more than action and achievement.

The central fact of Ellis's personality is an amazing acceptance of life. It is not the acceptance of the vanquished or the cowardly for whom the world has proved too much with which to cope, nor yet that of the lazy or sensuous person who lives merely for himself and in each experience as it comes along. It is the acceptance of one who has met life fully and freely and who has made peace with it on his own terms. Fortunately for Ellis and the world this peace came early in life, and, oddly enough, through an experience that might have been called a religious conversion had it been to a religion that he became a convert.

Mr. Goldberg sketches his early years with a few strokes. Son of a sea captain, he voyaged with his father to far lands when he was very young and escaped a good deal of the regimentation of the conventional English education. He was never a robust kind of person. "He had been a thoughtful child; he had been a searching, moody youth." His mind was swung adrift early from the orthodox religion of his childhood by the rising flood of scientific materialism and the positivism of the '70s. But his nature—which met life directly through feeling and emotion in spite of his introspection—demanded a color, beauty, warmth, that the new knowledge did not give. Here was an inevitable conflict and in Ellis it took a heavy toll of nervous energy.

A relatively obscure book by an author now little remembered—Joseph Hinton—brought Ellis swift and permanent relief and set the mold for his entire life. Mr. Goldberg quotes a revealing passage from Ellis's "Dance of Life" which vividly describes the incident:

Hinton in this book showed himself a scientific biologist who carried the mechanistic explanation of life even further than was usual. But he was a man of a highly passionate type of intellect, and what might otherwise be formal and abstract was for him soaked in emotion. Thus while he saw the world as an orderly mechanism he was not content, like Strauss, to stop there and see nothing else. As he viewed it, the mechanism was not the mechanism of the factory; it was vital, with all the warmth and glow and beauty of life; it was, therefore, something which not only the intellect might accept, but the heart might cling to. The bearing of this conception on my state of mind is obvious. It acted with the swiftness of an electric contact; the dull aching tension was removed; the two opposing psychic tendencies were fused in delicious harmony; and my whole attitude toward the universe was changed. It was no longer an attitude of hostility and dread, but of confidence and love.

All of Ellis's work is stamped with the imprint of his experience. He did not, be it noted, give up his intellect for his emotions nor surrender his feelings to the domination of his mind. When he found that he could do so honestly he accepted them both. That he has allowed each side of his personality to grow into productive maturity without detriment, but rather with the greatest advantage to the other, is perhaps his most notable achievement.

Mr. Goldberg has remarked upon this essential ambivalence, but he has not set it in a strong enough perspective. Make a list of the published works of Havelock Ellis. It is soon apparent that they should be set down in two columns instead of one: the one headed "science" and the other "art." At the head of the first column would go his most important work, the six volumes of the "Studies in the Psychology of Sex," followed by "Man and Woman," a painstaking statistical and biological study of secondary sex characteristics; "A Study of British Genius," "The Criminal," and so on—all of them scientific contributions of genuine importance. In the other column would go his most widely read book, "The Dance of Life," followed by "Affirmations," "The New Spirit," "The Nineteenth Century," "The Soul of Spain," and others—essays in biography, philosophy and criticism. It is doubtful whether any living writer has attained equal eminence in fields so widely differentiated.

Mr. Goldberg devotes most of his time to a discussion of these books as they reveal the personality of the man who wrote them. He is only incidentally interested in the subject matter with which they are concerned. Of particular interest, however, are other chapters which tell of Olive Schreiner's friendship with Ellis, of his marriage to Edith Lees, and of the storm let loose in England by the publication of the first volume of his sex studies. Ellis the man—fastidious, finely wrought, reserved—as revealed in his relations with the two women who meant most to him, stands in ironical contrast to Ellis the ogre as imagined by the fevered critics of outraged prudery.

Mr. Goldberg has done a genuine service in the introduction of Ellis as a living personality to his wide range of American admirers. And Mr. Goldberg, by very limitations, has emphasized the need of a biography of Ellis that will display something of the greatness of the subject with which it deals.

Arnold Bennett on This and That

THINGS THAT HAVE INTERESTED ME. Third Series. By Arnold Bennett. New York: George H. Doran Company. $2.50.

THE things that interest Arnold Bennett are for the most part not the things of cosmic scope or significance, of ethereal delicacy or grace, or of philosophic subtlety or penetration. The author does not take one rambling with him across the mountain tops; he does not reach up toward the stars or delve into "faery lands forlorn"; he does not celebrate the glories of lonely sunsets, of wasting rainbows or of desolate dying woods. But in the main he is intrigued by those things which are likely to stimulate any man of culture and understanding and an imagination that is not unleashed; he is concerned with the visible and the substantial, the hard-and-fast and the everyday; he descends toward the commonplace without ever quite reaching it, and turns the illumination of an alert and varied mind engagingly upon some of the more obvious problems of life and art.

But in spite of a certain superficiality and shortness of range inherent in the author's every method, the forty little sketches and essays gathered together in the present volume display a pleasing variety. At one moment Mr. Bennett will be criticizing the contemporary drama, and the next instant will be telling one how to spend an income, and having devoted some pages to a description of Spain and the Spaniards he will turn to a review of André Gide's "Dostoevsky" or to a prognostication of the status of woman twenty years hence. From this he will hasten to a comparison of British and American education, or to a dissertation upon the evils of displaying girls at work in shop windows, or to a few genial comments upon the advisability of buying and keeping one's own books. And so, while he attempts to deal with no subject exhaustively he at least succeeds in expressing himself upon a wide variety of topics.

Perhaps the most interesting of his articles are those six or seven which deal with the British theatre. The problems of actors and producers, of the audience and of the press, are discussed from the point of view of one qualified not only by much personal experience but by a wealth of definite and individual opinions. Mr. Bennett believes, among other things, that the drama is handicapped by the fact that managers are "excessively hard to educate"; that their minds tend to run in standardardized groves, and that they want only the sort of play they have been accustomed to getting instead of demanding the original and the new; that, as a rule, they "unanimously reject" the few interesting plays that are being written, and in general underestimate the capacity of the playgoing public.

In his comments on contemporary dramatists Mr. Bennett is no less provocative than in his remarks concerning the producers. One can agree with him, for example, when he observes that "the fuss made over George Kaiser • • • is ridiculous," that "Pirandello is overpraised" and that "the amiable amorphous confections of Sacha Guitry" are taken rather too seriously; but when he turns to express himself regarding American dramatists he is treading on highly questionable ground. Certainly, Mr. Bennett's views are deserving of all respect, but one wonders how many will be found to agree with him when he declares: "As for Eugene O'Neill—well, I respect him just as much as I can respect any sentimentalist, but I hold George Cohan to be a vastly superior playwright to O'Neill."

Even when Mr. Bennett turns aside from the domain of the drama or of literature in general, his remarks frequently have a pungency that makes them arresting regardless of possible dissent. The following passage, for instance, should be of particular interest to Americans:

Right or wrong, European opinion holds that in America nonconformity does not get a fair show. "Movements" are not encouraged; indeed, they are discouraged. The politics of America are a mystery to Europeans, who have never been able to see the difference between Republicans and Democrats. Everybody seems to think alike on fundamentals. And if there are two parties in America, one is the Republican-Democrat and the other is the party whose heads go in danger of prison and whose literature is not smiled upon by the Postmaster General.

Out Where Horses Are Horses And Men Are Men

Ross Santee Writes of Cowboys, Steers and Broncos in The Vernacular of the Range

MEN AND HORSES. By Ross Santee. Illustrated by the author. 253 pp. New York: The Century Company. $3.

By STANLEY WALKER

THIS is a beautiful book, from one striking orange and blue cover clear through to the end. It is written and illustrated by a young man who until a few years ago was wrangling horses and punching cattle in New Mexico and Arizona. With a few simple and apparently careless smudges of black, Ross Santee is able to produce highly effective sketches of bucking horses, running steers, dejected hounds, burros, sombrero-topped Mexicans and all the other characters and trappings of the West.

Mr. Santee has one hundred of his excellent black and white sketches and twenty "stories" in "Men and Horses." His stories, made up of rambling incidents for the most part, are readable enough, but one sketch is worth all the stories in the book. The jacket refers to Mr. Santee as "a cowboy artist-author who speaks of his West with pen and brush in the authentic language of the range." That promise seems to be carried out fairly well. The tales, sandwiched in between the drawings, are told in the vernacular. Indeed, Mr. Santee, over and over, uses one word which is enough to stamp him as an acute observer of the language of certain sections of the West. That word is "auger," used as a synonym for "talk to," "chin with" and "jaw." For example, he says a cowboy was "augerin' with the cook." How the word came to be used in precisely this connection is something for the philologists to worry about; "to auger" probably developed from "to argue." Anyhow, the word is widely used in genuine Arizona conversation. The word also appears in several Western songs.

It may be unlucky for Mr. Santee that many persons will compare his book with the recent books of Will James. Their careers have been somewhat similar. Both James and Santee write and illustrate their own works. Both deal with the lives and aspirations of cowpunchers, the technique of the cattle business and the quaintly amusing incidents of ranch life.

There seems to be a steady and growing demand for books such as Santee and James have written. Comparison of the two is inevitable. Their black and white sketches differ greatly; some will prefer Santee's drawings because of their almost impressionistic simplicity, others will place a higher value on James's work, which contains more detail and action. As between the writings of the two, James can tell a better story, with much more feeling and effectiveness than Santee shows in any of the chapters of "Men and Horses." But Santee tells his stuff, unexciting though much of it is, in terse, straightforward sentences which many readers will like.

Beginning with a brief account of the doings at the Payson Rodeo, Mr. Santee describes a bull fight at Juarez, which impressed him as a sickening spectacle, disgusting to all lovers of horseflesh; he tells of "The Rummy Kid," a forlorn young man with a yellow streak who was possessed with an overpowering affection for a wild stallion; he tells the story of Sam, a much-disliked man, who showed the better side of his nature by risking death in an almost impassable river in an attempt to reach his baby before it died; he describes a deputy sheriff, "a lunger" who took wild chances with his own life because he thought he was going to die anyhow and who wept on the day the doctor told him his lungs were healed.

One of the best stories in the book has to do with Keno, the "ketch dog," whose job it was to catch wild steers and bring them to earth. The dog was the protégé of a hard-boiled and unpopular cowboy named Morgan. At last Keno was ruined, and as the camp cook tells it:

> He caught one too many of them big steers, an' they finally broke him down. He got hurt just a little while before Dave Morgan died. I s'posed you heard about Morgan, though. His horse turned over on him, down on Cedar Flat. The punchers never found him till the second day. And he never did come to until just before he died. He knowed the game was up all right. But Morgan shore died hard. Some of the boys thought he didn't know what he was sayin', for when they asked him was there any folks or any one he'd like to have them notify, he says that Keno was the only friend he had.
> After Morgan's death Sourdough kept the crippled dog because he didn't have the heart to shoot it. Again quoting Sourdough, the cook:
> The punchers always speaks of Keno as if he was my dog now. But he'll never belong to any one but him. Some folks that stays with me gets the prod sometimes when Keno howls at night. One puncher said he'd shoot him if Keno howled again. But right here I told this button if there was any shootin' done around here I'd take a hand myself. Maybe I've just got used to it. But Keno never howls at night, but what I wish there was somethin' that thought that much of me.
> An' there's times when I see him layin' there I'd give 'most, 'most anything I know if he'd only lick my hand. For he always lays in that same place each day, a-watchin' the trail that leads down to the lower ranch. Each time he hears a puncher comin' up the trail he tries to raise himself until he finds out who they are, then sinks back again, still lookin' down the trail with them wolf-like eyes of his.

Of course all this is sheer sentimentality, but what of it? There is a great field for realism in Western literature, but it is much more pleasant, after all, to think of the West as a romantic land peopled with big-hearted, tobacco-chewing cowboys, philosophical and prankish camp cooks, fancy riders of outlaw horses, mysterious and tight-lipped strangers who ride into camp and get jobs with no questions asked, tough customers who in moments of stress reveal totally unsuspected nobility of character—those are only a few of the indispensable personages. Without them Western stuff would become the same as Middle West farm life. And always, darting in and out in a purple haze, there must be the great, magnificent wild stallion whose untamed spirit defies all captors.

All these, and others, Mr. Santee has pictured in a book that is lovely to look upon and easy to read.

Golden Age of Georgian Art in Farington's Diary

THE FARINGTON DIARY. By Joseph Farington, R. A., edited by James Greig. Vol. V, Jan. 2, 1808, to Dec. 31, 1809. 8vo. 326 pp. 12 Illustrations. New York: George H. Doran Company. $7.50.

By CHARLES DE KAY

JOSEPH FARINGTON, whose diary has been appearing during the last three years, having now reached the fifth volume, was a Royal Academician, who had a very wide acquaintance among important folks literary, artistic and noble. The diary begins in 1793; the present volume covers the two years 1808 and 1809 in the midst of the Napoleonic wars, when in art circles Benjamin West and John Singleton Copley were artists of note, while Reynolds, Gainsborough, Richard Wilson, Constable and Turner—not to speak of Romney, Hoffner and Thomas Lawrence—were in highest fame. Farington may not have reached eminence as a painter, but his pictures were fairly popular and when they came to auction were apt to sell at advanced prices. This diary is of great value, because Farington knew so many people of importance and was so conscientious in keeping his records. Many persons otherwise forgotten are briefly mentioned and sidelights are thrown on such as Johnson, Wordsworth, Coleridge, Mrs. Barbauld Rogers, Lady Blessington, Miss Jane Porter of "Thaddeus of Warsaw," Robert Southey. The editor of the diary is Mr. James Greig, author of lives of Gainsborough and Henry Raeburn; he adds illuminative notes now and then, furnishes a good index and a dozen or more illustrations.

Farington took pupils. He was an exact, painstaking observer and rather naïve at times—read his elaborate cook-book description of the way they made clouted cream down in Devon and how fighters there bark each other's shins. It seems that in Cornwall and Devonshire men did not gouge out eyes nor kick a fellow when he was down, nor pull one another's hair! In cudgel play no blow was a hit unless it landed above the chin and drew blood. All of which, however, testifies to Farington's incurable curiosity and proves that he was not content to specify the prices of pictures or merely to tabulate the gossip of society and the studios. He investigates the quality of oak for shipbuilding as if he were a reincarnation of Sam Pepys; he gives in shillings and pence the items of each meal when on a junket in the western shires, and does not fail to approve or denounce the neatness or the filth of the taverns he visits.

One gets further glimpses of Benjamin West, the man from Pennsylvania, who got the charter for the Royal Academy because the King and Queen liked him and succeeded Sir Joshua Reynolds twice as President. Many, to us rather tedious, paintings by West may stand forgiven when we learn from Farington that West recognized at once the beauty of the broken statues Lord Elgin saved from the ruins of the Parthenon; he insisted "they were sublime specimens of the purest sculpture and that when Summer arrives He means to devote much time to study from them. He a'd this He w'd do, tho' in his 70th year & had on this acct. a wish to be again only 20 years of age & that He might labour to profit by them." This was of record March, 1808. Again he spoke of the marbles in May: "There was to be seen the perfection of art where nature predominated everywhere and was not resolved into & made obedient to system." In February, 1900, the Academist William Hoare tells him that West wrote to Lord Elgin to thank him for permission to make drawings from the marbles, adding that it was an advantage which Raphael and Michael Angelo did not enjoy.

So it seems that Haydon the painter was not the only one to appreciate the sculptures and urge their purchase and exhibition.

From Farington we get a hint that Copley, another American, was a somewhat rude person when roused, though not a patch on the sculptor Nollekens, who came to the Academy council about the placing of six of his busts and told Tresham, R. A., "that He was a Jack in Office and wanted to play Him a Dirty trick: that He knew what His character was before He came from Rome," &c. Copley had a son of his own name, a jurist created Lord Lyndhurst and raised to the Lord Chancellorship of England. "The Death of Chatham," by Copley, was sold at auction for $5,250, and the buyer, Alexander Davison, lent it in 1817, to the Royal Institution. In this very auction Gainsborough's "Landscape With Market People" brought $715, and Morland's "Landscape: Figures Seated Near a Fire," only $160.

Turner was not without acrid critics at this period. Thomas Hearne, water colorist, said of one picture: "The sky is painted by a madman," and of a sea piece, "it is raw," and of Turner's work in general: "He has neither sublimity nor dignity when he attempts characters nor sentiment and pastoral simplicity in His rural scenery." In other words, Turner lacked the qualities of Claude Lorrain. "Corwen Bridge" to Hearne was mere "vapour" and his "woolly undecided execution" reprobated. Had he seen this diary John Ruskin would have raged at such bitter words, even if applied to Turner's earlier work. Lord Essex had given $1,000 for a Turner which Hearne thought dear at $250. Turner lived with a widow Danby who used to mix his colors and Turner would often say to her: "Can't you set a palette better than this?" In 1851 Turner ran away from this charmer and was found dying in another lodging in Chelsea.

Even in 1800 complaints were rife that Sir Joshua's paintings did not stand aging very well:

> Lord Lonsdale told me that yesterday He was with the Duke of Rutland & saw His picture of the Infant Hercules, painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds, which has begun to crack, & a few small pieces have come out. The Duke has brought it to London to get it repaired. The Duke s'd that the large picture of the Nativity, by Sir Joshua, which is at Belvoir Castle, is also in a bad state; the eye of one of the Heads has fallen out and the Revd. Wm. Peters has endeavoured to restore it.

At Plympton, where Reynolds was born, the diarist finds portraits by that master painted before he went to Italy, among them one of himself, which, he said, he finished in one day. Farington admires it.

> It is an admirable likeness of him, I think the best I have seen & is painted with great freshness of color and spirit. On my observing that there were parts of it chipped off, I examined it closely and saw that if not put into the hands of somebody to restore it, the picture will be destroyed.

Lately "Mrs. Siddons as the Tragic Muse" has been bought for a huge sum and brought to America, but this masterpiece once fell to Sir Thomas Lawrence for $1,500.

Farington is a queer speller. He runs a lively pen for social scandals, but keeps pretty free of prejudice.

Speaking of Spain, Here Is Waldo Frank

VIRGIN SPAIN: Scenes from the Spiritual Drama of a Great People. By Waldo Frank. 331 pp. New York: Boni & Liveright. $3.

By MUNA LEE

SPAIN, above all other countries, has stirred the hearts of men and compelled their imaginations. Byron, Shelley and Gautier, George Borrow, Fitzmaurice Kelly, Cunninghame-Graham, Havelock Ellis, Somerset Maugham, Sholom Asch, John dos Passos—to fling out names at random—the roll of celebrants is provocatively diverse. Our nostalgic phrase, "A Castle in Spain," indicates the rich connotations, to alien ears, of her very name. These Spains of the artists have, to speak the truth, little resemblance to one another; Gautier's Spain, a splendid setting for drama without the drama; Irving's Spain, warm peasant humor bubbling up amid moidering romantic grandeur; the "flame-like Spain" of Shelley, and the gypsy, Welsh, savage Spain of Borrow, are entirely dissimilar countries. For each man finds himself in his own vision of Spain; perhaps because she of all countries most nourishes a hardy individualism, most cherishes the island of identity. It is doubly true of Spain that a man finds in her what he brings.

Latest of these investigators of Spain and his own consciousness is Waldo Frank, whose volume is explicitly subtitled "Scenes from the Spiritual Drama of a Great People." It is nevertheless more as a pageant than as a drama that he writes of the land of his election. The book opens with a description of the hinterland in Africa; for Mr. Frank, like Ganivet—a quotation from whom upon the flyleaf explains the title—stresses the Oriental in his study of developing Spain. The result is a strange belittling of the Latin element in the peninsula, probably due to a conscious attempt on the author's part to explain those strong Arabic and Jewish influences usually treated too casually or not at all. This attempt to right the balance is praiseworthy in itself, though the result is unsatisfactory. Mr. Frank's Spain emerges predominantly Jewish and Moorish, strangely un-Latin.

This opening section of neighboring Africa, the brief kaleidoscopic sketch of Valencia, the chapter on Seville, the admirable study of the mood and method of Isabella the Catholic—one of the shrewdest and most sympathetic studies of Isabella in English—and the dialogue between Cervantes and Columbus, which closes the book, are the best of it. The work is, indeed, decidedly uneven. Set beside Mr. Frank's chapter on Castile the terse simplicity of Unamuno (who knows his Castile from the bone out), in his study of the spirit of Castile (from "En Torno al Casticismo") and the former becomes a violent chrome; the tribute of the passionate tourist to his love, dotted with lush posies such as "skin color of parchment, ages silken soft"; "children * * * lyric like the lilacs"; "the red coats and red calls of soldiers." For the most part, however, so far as Unamuno is concerned, Mr. Frank has read the great Spaniard with profit. There is a perceptible influence not only of style but of content—though wholly legitimate influence—of "La Vida de Don Quijote y Sancho" in "The Will of Don Quixote." "The Will of Don Quixote," whom the author sees as "the last prophet of our historic order," is to express the modern need to "unite the world of fact in which we all suffer together with the world of dream in which we are alone," and with the chapters entitled "The Will of the Catholic Kings" (the unification of Spain); "The Will of Saint and Sinner" (organization and adventure); and "The Will of God," forms that section of the volume called inclusively "The Tragedy of Spain." It is difficult to understand what Mr. Frank interprets as the will of God, even though he expands the subject into three subheadings: The Bull Fight, Man and Woman and Madrid.

It is, in fact, not always easy to be positive as to the meaning of a statement. Whether when he says, "When Rome lived, Spain did not live in Rome," Mr. Frank means that Spain was aloof and preoccupied, a self-contained province; or that she was little touched by the currents of Roman thought, or that she was hardly an object of Roman influence—whatever he means, his words merely serve to remind the reader of Seneca the Elder and the Younger, of Lucan, of Martial, of Quintilian; of Balbus. "The first barbarian to reach the consulship and receive the honor of a public triumph"; of the sixty years (of those eighty which Gibbon declared to be the happiest epoch in history) when Spanish Caesars ruled the imperial Rome.

Too often Mr. Frank produces personal opinion as if it were an axiom. "Gongora, Spain's greatest lyric poet," he says magnificently, waving aside the criticism of three centuries. Of the Basques he remarks that "their language is inscrutably alone; it bears no relation with any of the tongues of Babel," though the kinship of Basques with Finnish, Afghan and other Mongol tongues has been variously demonstrated. Flights of taste are frequent—in an overloaded palette, a baroque style, particularly in the arid precisionist which overuses a fistful of favorite words: camoufa, skeletal, intricate; "intricate but instinctive warfare," "intricate death of convent walls," "warm intricate music," "intricate introvert Jews." The most barbarous offender is syre, a word which gimbals in the wake of many phrases: "Black rim of the hills is an age; they syre in cosmic emotion;" "moving forms of people syre and fumes" and become a fume in the sun"; "Old Lisbon is explosive, gyrant, tragically repressed in its march toward itself, town itself keen in the gyrant air"; "in this geelegit gyre and humbandry Toledo stands unmoving"; "it [the Escorial] serves with its gyrant aspirant forms to offset the brooding stillness in which it lives"; "straight and steep, not gyring Moorish streets." That sort of verbal pyrotechnic means that a writer is not merely self-conscious but style-conscious. It means that a book ardent and sincere and frequently beautiful, as this one is, is marred and is made cheaply garish by the tacking on of cretonne fringe. Where Mr. Frank might enchant he prefers to astound with wilful flamboyance. It is a pity, for his gifts are great. His admiration for Gongora is readily comprehensible, for he is himself one of the intricate cyristone of Gongorist. He is, like many Gongorists, a man of talent, perhaps genius, who writes frequently well, with vigor and brilliance, yet in whom preciosity, crassness and hyperbaton are supreme.

When he escapes from the cialities which these tempt fortunately his enthusiasm, his order for Spain, enable him quently to break free. Mr. gives a multicolored, many-impression of the vivid complexity which is Spain. The style, which its worst merely dazzles, is best admirably adapted to pick the sharp contrasts and strong lines of the paradoxical land. Mr. Frank is interpreting the Latin spirit, he is illuminative. Intuitions are keen, his symbols kindled imagination. In the following paragraphs, for example, he has apprehended and portrayed the tragedy of an individualist try with an inextinguishable toward unity:

> The Catholic Kings have been ruthless: absolutism, the glory of Christ, national unity, and justice, arms and prayer were to make Spain one. For many years these qualities take form and grows personified in Spain. She is imbued with Spain's magnificent will to be whole and one; she grows great with this purpose; each wars upon those all who are chaotic and diverse. She is to be one people, her life to be one. Her will to union leads her into extremes. Irony on Isabel's fair fabric. Out of her pageant of extremes a tabloid hero is wrought: Spain is land has warriors, saints, and nobles and rabble; priests and scoundrels. Charity is preached with the sword and the meek walks with the thief. Torquemada answers La Celestina. Quixote sallies forth with Sancho Panza.

That is Mr. Frank at his best. And it is his Spain.

Mr. Flagg Goes Journeying at Home

BOULEVARDS ALL THE WAY—MAYBE! By James Montgomery Flagg. Illustrated. 225 pp. New York: George H. Doran Company. $2.

ANY philosopher who wishes to study popular present-day humor could not do better than to read through Mr. Flagg's small volume. For the jocularities that have been packed within the compass of these two hundred and twenty-five pages peculiarly suggest the present generation; indeed, they sound in our ears as characteristic of our time as the empty cheerful snapping-to of so many limousine doors. In short, if I may be allowed to say so, they represent unproductive mental futility brought up to date! And this particular slant of exuberant superficiality displayed by the famous illustrator appeals especially, of course, to those men and women who through ballrooms and bridge parties and golf club vestibules are driven like flocks of feather-headed turkeys toward an eternity of spiritual and intellectual damnation.

If the thoughts that rap in and out of Mr. Flagg's mind with the zip of a knockabout scenario were really indicative of the level of intelligence attained by homo sapiens in the twentieth century, there would certainly be—to use Mr. Flagg's phraseology—nothing much to write home about. The famous illustrator's vision of the universe is, to say the least of it, limited. Forgotten are the neap tides and spring tides, forgotten is the silver treachery of the moon, forgotten the doomed, bewildered journeyings of the human race under a firmament that has neither a beginning nor an end. Often, I confess it, I find Mr. Flagg's facetiousness singularly distasteful. I don't like to listen to him after he has dragged an automobile out of a ditch misquoting the words of our Saviour Christ, "Go your way and skid no more." It teases me to hear him refer, with the unimaginative indifference of the well-to-do, to a certain overworked section of society as "milling herds," just as I find it tiresome when he speaks of "vermillion Russia" as though, too irresponsible to trouble his head about the fate of a tragic land, he had been content to accept popular judgments upon it.

Also, how irritated one feels by the insensibility he shows to the hideous, disfiguring process that is so rapidly overtaking the American continent at the hands of commerce. It is, I swear it, no laughing matter to see a lovely land converted at so unprecedented a rate into an unsightly suburb, and yet I honestly believe that our author, as he made his transcontinental trip, felt a secret exultation at the lamentable spectacle as though recognizing that they were his values that were being spread abroad from Dan even unto Beersheba. He crosses a great Western desert and writes: "Instead of the intermittent dead and bleached steer skulls that dotted the plains in days gone by, there are the twisted dead mudguards of stricken Fords!"

Much of his humor is physiological, which is always a discouraging form of humor even at its best. How the reading public finds it possible to applaud this trick of associating unpleasant ideas is more than I know!

> The hot wind blew so hard up my left nostril I thought I should fill up like a tire!
> * * * * * * *
> I have to drink so much I sound like a hot-water bag if I lean up against a counter.
> * * * then I tossed and tossed and fell off into the brass cuspidor.

All his buffoonery is the buffoonery of a born townsman. He encounters a thunderstorm without rain. To him it is a "Belasco storm." "I saw one white hen that had been run over so many times that it was quite flat enough to have written home on!" At "Lee" he stays with a movie star, and this gives him an opportunity of indulging in the expression of much false sentiment. "Bill, big fine Bill Hart. * * * As one sees him in the flickers so is he in real life."

One of Mr. Flagg's happiest methods of provoking mirth is to bring suddenly into exaggerated prominence some obscure bodily sensation that not even the most sober of us can fail to recognize—the sensation, for example, of being hampered in one's movements by a long raincoat or of undergoing certain absurd muscular stiffenings in moments of nervous apprehension lest the car in which we are riding may slide off the road.

Of the raincoat sensation he writes, "I kept stepping on the front of it in a manner that looked as if I was trying my damndest to walk up inside of it." And of the other "my toes were curling skyward inside my boots." However, in spite of his irrepressible good spirits we breathe a sigh of relief when the end of his journey approaches. He records his daily progress in his own way. "No longer are we in the Frankfurter belt. The hot dogs have ceased from bubbling and the kennels are mere."

The best part of the book to do with his visit to the Grand Cayon. Here something truly American, unsentimental, purged of winsome, almost against ourselves an appreciation of this work of a fabulous age. Symptoms reveal in us by reading such a did statement on this: "The Cayon knows me to calm." He explains he finds the Canyon impressive once more we recognize "why it is," he says, "the people about trying to think up words for it that help to save it." Yet at the Grand Canyon his chagrin to make bad jokes cannot be strained. "One middle-aged man was made so nervous by descent on mule-back that he lered all night in his room regular night-mule." Once more that drollery one hears on the the titter of the galleries, the roar the pits.

It is excellent for humour to be-laugh; but for the dignity of race one would like them to understand clearly the kind of thing which they are laughing, its true quality, so to speak. In the present case the rudeness of the treatment Mr. Flagg's humor has its counterpart perhaps in the heavy-handed satirists of the eighteenth century. It must be remembered, however, that reading is a pastime no longer confined to the upper classes, so that we have the unedifying spectacle of a present-day Tobias Smollett dressed up in garb of doubtful diverting an uncultivated reading populace with crude accounts of journeyings in his apocryphal horseless coach.

Lavinia goes to lengths which would never have occurred to Miss Johnstone, but this brazen Simonetta Perkins proposes to transplant the glamorous Emilio to a certain back yard in the Back Bay of Boston, where he may be allied to a furnace of a proud and pre-Revolutionary family or perhaps the Perkins's automobile. Lavinia may lose patience, in the seclusion of her diary, with her mother, but Simonetta inspires impertinent, all but ribald, remarks to that same mother. It is, perhaps, as well that Simonetta lingered behind in Venice, with Emilio.

Lavinia's moral holiday in Venice may have left her with a wistful and incradicable regret. Her furtive and futile adventure leaves the reader vastly entertained, with a suspicion of an unobstrusive afterthought that is almost disturbing enough to be uncomfortable. Oscar Wilde's Ernest had his Bunbury. Lavinia Johnstone has her Simonetta Perkins. Who knows what spectre may stalk unsuspected within the most exemplary breast?

RAGGLE-TAGGLE GYPSIES

THE SPLENDID SHILLING. By Idwal Jones. 322 pp. New York: Doubleday, Page & Co. $2.

AN indefinable glamour continues to surround the gypsy in fiction. True, the caravan of lumbering wagons now given way to the ubiquitous Ford and much of the picturesque in costume and custom fails to withstand the influence of the prosaic present. Yet the very word "gypsy" tugs insinuatingly at the heartstrings; it issues its saucy challenge to the element of wanderlust that lies latent in the most conventional of bosoms. Idwal Jones in "The Splendid Shilling" makes full and legitimate use of this traditional allure. Back into view creak the carts of the wandering Egyptians; back come the trinkets and amulets, the "fortunes" and the curses, the gypsy queens and princesses and all of the color that for centuries has surrounded their encampments and their very existence. The author achieves all this simply enough by rolling back the scroll just one hundred years.

By combining the rugged grandeur of "wild Wales" with the gypsy motif the author inevitably calls up memories of George Borrow. And, indeed, the author of "Lavengro" would have found himself heartily in accord with just such a chronicle of the open road, just such a blending of Welsh roots and the gypsy denial of all such fixtures as "The Splendid Shilling" depicts. Moreover, in the actual construction and performance a certain comparison holds. For Idwal Jones writes with a definite ornateness of prose style, with an appreciation of the verbal niceties of the period portrayed. In fact, the writing here has a welcome deliberateness and precision about it when compared with much of the present-day slipshod and helter-skelter output. The story concerns young Guy Puncheon, the son of a gypsy queen. But he was also the son of a loud and lumbering Welshman. And ever these two diverse strains surge tumultuously within him—the blood royal of the road and the stolid strain of the hillmen. But the gypsy urge proved the more insistent, for had not his father in youth "renounced the life he had always known, to make his fires thenceforth on the solitary heaths, * * * for the sake of the woman he loved?"

"Happy the man," the old verse runs, "who, devoid of cares and strife, in silken or in leathern purse, retains the Splendid Shilling." This lilting augury gives the novel its title and gives a spiritual significance to the characterization of the novel's hero. The narrative thread that winds through the yarn is, of course, the call of the out-trails to this boy of gypsy blood and predilections and his answering of the same. In actual occurrence, this call, coupled with the story's love interest, leads him from his native Welsh village to cross the Atlantic. In the California of the colorful and eventful fifties the hero adds to his experiences and his philosophy, and the tale itself takes on an added interest. The author writes with a richness of detail. And the detail selected—topics of conversation, the furnishings, the manners, the modes—all show an evidence of careful research and a familiarity with the times and places revitalized. "The Splendid Shilling" comes as a first novel, yet it has a maturity of manner and a distinction of style that will give the reader pause. Its method of characterization is insinuating rather than deliberate. But the culminating effect tends to accentuate the lifelikeness. There is a slightly archaic air about the whole book, and the attention given to verbal embroidery, to the delineation of merely passing and quite unessential incidents, may annoy the type of reader who skims through a book for its narrative interest alone. But the fiction lover who appreciates good workmanship will not put down "The Splendid Shilling." In fact, its somewhat leisurely tempo will suit readers who find themselves reacting from the jazz age and that breathless school of fiction that seems part and parcel of it.

TOLSTOY'S "THE DEVIL"

THE DEVIL. By Leo Tolstoy. Translated by Aylmer Maude. 104 pp. New York: Harper & Brothers. $2.

"THE DEVIL" is not literary news in the strict sense of the word. Russian readers have known it since 1911, when it appeared in the Russian edition of Tolstoy's posthumous short stories and plays. Yet for a reason unknown to the present reviewer it has not been included in the best-known English editions of the great writer's works. This fully justifies the new translation and publication of this novelette, all the more since the translator is Mr. Aylmer Maude, to whom we owe some of the best English renderings of Tolstoy.

"The Devil" is closely akin in spirit, as well as in artistic technique, to "The Kreutzer Sonata" (both were written in 1889), to "Father Sergius" (which was begun a year later) and to some other "sexual" stories of that period. Its main—and invisible—hero is the same as in these other works. It is the Devil of the carnal desire, the Devil whom Tolstoy combated in his later years with all the might of his genius, whom his ascetic self abhorred and hated and whom his less ascetic—and more human—self feared and perhaps secretly worshiped. It is the story of the young landlord Irteney, who loves his charming wife, but is attracted by a passionate "desire of the flesh" to a peasant woman with whom he had had relations before his marriage. Powerless to resist the temptation and exasperated by the fear of succumbing to it, he kills the woman or, according to an alternative ending, commits suicide.

In his short preface to the book Mr. Maude goes so far as to assert this story was written by Tolstoy on the basis of a personal experience. Tolstoy, his translator tells us, had been tempted himself in 1880 by the Devil in a peasant woman's handkerchief and was saved from the temptation thanks to the intervention of a friend. That Tolstoy considered himself "more guilty of the sexual sin than of any other sin" is true—we know that from himself. That the ascetic struggled in him with the "sinner" cannot be denied, either. If the Devil were not there, it would be senseless to fight against him with such obstinacy. But the reviewer does not remember having ever read anything on this detail of Tolstoy's biography. It is a pity that the translator does not tell us whence he holds it and where is the letter in which Tolstoy confessed it to a friend. Such indiscreet additions to biographies should be made in a less informal way, with at least a brief mention of the source they are derived from.

As to its esthetic qualities, "The Devil" undoubtedly stands above "The Kreutzer Sonata." It is one of Tolstoy's late masterpieces. It was written to illustrate a certain moral idea; it is "tendencial literature," no doubt. But, to use an Italian critic's saying, in it the bones of tendency do not protrude through the perfect form of a work of art (as they do in "The Kreutzer Sonata"). The inevitability of Irteney's fall and his utter helplessness before the self-asserting instinct of his flesh are developed with supreme mastery. The relentlessly growing feeling of a terrible doom, of "The Devil" holding the fate of the hero in his hands, is conveyed to the reader with a striking power. Like most of Tolstoy's late stories, it is not so rich in color and in details as are his earlier works; but it is more concise, it develops quicker and it is constructed more carefully. A paragraph from the tragical dénouement may be quoted here as the example of this laconic precision. Entering the barn on the fatal day Irtenev felt that the peasant woman was there. Yet, mastering himself, he began to give orders to his employes.

"Then look here * * *" began Eugene [Irtenev], but he did not finish the sentence. She had gone close up to the drum and was raking the corn from under it, and she scorched him with her laughing eyes. That look spoke of a merry, careless love between them, of the fact that she knew he wanted her and had come to her shed, and that she, as always, was ready to live and be merry with him regardless of all conditions and consequences. Eugene felt himself to be in her power, but did not wish to yield.

It is exactly the decision not to yield that drove him, a few minutes later, to suicide or, according to the other version, to the assassination of the woman. Which one of the two endings did Tolstoy prefer? This we do not know, for both were found in his manuscripts, and both are psychologically true. The second, however, seems to have been written later and is perhaps more convincing than the first.

BLACK BLOOD AND BLUE

CHALLENGE. By Joan Sutherland. 321 pp. New York: Harper & Brothers. $2.

THE color question provides the theme for this novel of international society. The central figure is a certain Prince Michael Kareninoff of Polish-British ancestry, a sort of Sir Basil Zaharoff of Eastern European politics and "the Colonel House of the British Embassy" at Washington. Michael believes, no later than page 47, that "any man or woman who deliberately mixes a colored strain with white commits a dastardly crime."

This being as it may be, it is no surprise to the reader to discover, on page 246, that Paul Carroll, the charming American lover of the novel, is an octoroon or a dodecaroon (if that be the correct higher mathematics of genealogy), and on page 383 that Prince Michael is the father of this tainted individual who had planned, idyllically, to marry Anne Falling, but who, on learning his ancestry, instead went into the Roman Catholic priesthood.

As for Prince Michael, page 407 gives the key to the book's title, when Father de Lapasture informs him that

You have committed a sin, and the consequences of that sin must be with you to your life's end. Through careless self-indulgence you have passed on life to one who cannot bear your name or take the position he should hold, and yours was the responsibility for the ruin of an innocent girl and her subsequent evil life. Your son must suffer for your sin, and the girl he loves must suffer likewise, since he will not marry her now that he knows the truth about himself. You have not only challenged life, Prince Kareninoff, playing like a duffer? The amateur detectives were remarkably skillful in running down clues, but they lost out when it came to establishing a motive for the murder.

Mr. Knox takes as his text—for there is a text delicately woven into this tale—a sentence from M. Gaboriau, the author of the incomparable Arsène Lupin stories, "In the matter of information, above all, regard with suspicion that which seems probable. Begin always by believing what seems incredible." But to the author the incredible is not the far-fetched or the improbable; it is the theory that is too simple, too easy to be true that works when the elaborate chain of circumstantial deduction falls through.

All in all this is a superior detective story. There is an abundance of mystery and suspicion; the characters are real and amusing; there is nothing in the story that might not have happened to almost any one, yet the incidents are so arranged that interest seldom lags. The only complaint that can be made against the author is that occasionally he seems to become interested in writing as writing, and at such times he allows the detective story to drop somewhat into the background. But such moments are not frequent, and were the plot of the story less powerful, they might be welcome for Mr. Knox writes well and there is humor in his point of view. This is a book with a plot so excellent that it deserves to be even better told.

EASTERN MYSTERY

THE SECRET LISTENERS OF THE EAST. By Dhan Gopal Mukerji. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.

THE opening chapter of this book follows the approved and time-honored formula of the detective-mystery story. A murder is committed under particularly atrocious and incredible circumstances, and a friend of the deceased deserts his regular occupation to become chief investigator. With the second chapter the stage is made clear for the pursuit of the suspects and the ultimate unraveling of the crime. In this case the victim of the assassins is General Gastry, an amiable old man, beloved of the children and leader of "The Scout Movement in British India," and the mystery is the deeper not only because he has no known enemies and there is no conceivable motive for the murder, but because of the horrible fashion in which the deed was committed and the barbarous mutilation of the corpse. In the end, of course, an explanation is provided; but before that point is reached we go wandering with the hero through half of Central Asia and receive intimations that the crime has more than individual implications and represents something in the nature of an international conspiracy.

Thoroughly conventional and even hackneyed though this plot be, the book has several merits to redeem it from being utterly commonplace. In the first place, the author's lucid and straightforward method of telling the story lends a certain lustre even to the most stereotyped of situations. In the second place, the book does not conclude with the solution of the mystery and the punishment of the villain; indeed, Mr. Mukerji ends with surprising leniency for the writer of a detective tale. And in the third place—and most important by far—the story is tinged throughout with the local color of India and of the wild States just across the border; and even in his incidental portrayal of the people, their customs and their land the author displays a talent worthy of far better use than his chosen theme permits. Such a description as the following, for example, indicates Mr. Mukerji's feeling for words and sense of the poetic:

> * * * Central Asia begins over the shoulders of a snowclad range, not very difficult to scale. The hill people cross and recross these regions with the agility of squirrels. * * * It was most beautiful; glaciers to the east burnt like dragons of gold at dawn, and at sundown vermilion silences shut down upon the land and held the hollows in their light grip for an hour at least, while below, far away, wheeled the eagles in their homeward flight, like leaves of gold scattered on emerald floors.

buzzard years. A nobler Byron, a more tragical Dumas, a more vital Meredith, a swifter moving Scott—born he is, DONN BYRNE! And no man can tell a story like him.

HANGMAN'S HOUSE

THE newest, the fullest of DONN BYRNE'S great romances. The story of Young Dermot, who was a bold lad, a gallant and a handsome lad, with the proud clean heart of a scion of the Irish kings. The story of Connaught O'Brien, winsome and fine and fearless, whom Dermot loved with all his heart. The story of John D'Arcy, who was a cad and a poltroon. HANGMAN'S HOUSE is a story of leprechauns and revolutionaries, of steeple chases and fox hunts, of the Shan Van Vocht and French officers, of the fighting which strong men do with their hands. ¶A story which moves along like a strong wind, or like the surge of a great sea. A story of brave hearts which never falter and of love which wins its own. $2.50 net.

The New Book by the Author of "MADAME CLAIRE"

A Novel as Refreshing as the First Spring Days has written a new novel, in many respects similar to her delightful "Madame Claire."

AFTER NOON

In "Madame Claire" it was an old lady who pulled the strings in the affairs of the young people about her. In "After Noon," it is a man of some forty-odd years who is the central figure, old enough to have grown daughters, young enough to find a new adventure in life himself. "After Noon" is the charming chronicle of the lives of truly charming people.

Notes on Rare Books

IN the house assigned to him in Passy, on the road to Versailles Franklin often put his printing skill to use by the production of little pieces, sometimes for diversion, sometimes for a deeper and more practical purpose. These issues of the Passy Press are collectively described by some commentators as "bagatelles," and their acquisition is at once the hope and despair of collectors of Franklinians. They have, by this time, acquired an impressive pecuniary value because of their limited number and their elusiveness. Their source and their association endow them with an interest which they would not derive from intrinsic worth.

In 1914 Luther S. Livingston recorded and described all the Passy imprints then known in "Franklin and His Press at Passy," one of those striking and thorough-paced works that were characteristic of the productions of a great bibliographer. Since that time, however, a number of other issues of the Press have been discovered, three of which, all recently disclosed, are the subject of "The Passports Printed by Benjamin Franklin at His Passy Press."

This account of them is presented in a manner designed to caress the eye—in a typographical style that one immediately recognizes as the work of only Bruce Rogers. It was he who printed Livingston's work for the Grolier Club, and the "Projet de Paix Perpétuelle," also from Franklin's Press, discovered by Mr. G. S. Eddy in 1922, so it is appropriate that he should carry on the story in this volume. Had he not received his share of deserved praise before, he would merit it for this book alone, for we think it one of the finest typographical examples we have seen. It deftly conveys a sense of rare good taste and precision through a familiar, utilitarian art. It manages, too, to suggest to us the spirit of Franklin's own time and manner without adopting the formal academic style of exact reproduction. It is a slender volume, displaying, as Queed might have said, "an exquisite reticence of the flesh," but it has meat enough for Franklin students.

THE account of these passports was written by the Curator of the Clements Library, Mr. Randolph G. Adams. It is pretty clear that the purpose of the volume is to reproduce for the use of scholars the three facsimiles of the Passports, without academic ostentation, and without more descriptive text than is actually required. Practically all that has to be said about the Passy Press has already been said, and we commend the spirit of restraint that Mr. Adams displays by consolidating his own account of the Passports in a few pages.

The first facsimile is that of a blank passport now in the Clements Library, which was discovered among the pamphlets of the Vignaud Library, purchased by Mr. Clements. The second is that of a used passport, signed by Franklin, which is a hitherto undescribed variant, in the possession of Mr. W. E. Mason. The third is a blank passport, discovered by Mr. John S. Adams Jr. in the Library of the University of Pennsylvania, and it, too, is a variant of the other two. These individual variations add an extra-bibliographical interest to these passports. The discovery of these three raises the number of recorded Passy imprints to thirty-six. Five hundred and five copies of "The Passports" have been printed by Bruce Rogers at the Harvard University Press for the William L. Clements Library, Ann Arbor, Mich., the price of which is $10.

THE records, letters, diaries, &c., of each generation of the family that gave Massachusetts and Connecticut its first Governor have, fortunately, been preserved in great part. These are known collectively as the "Winthrop Papers," and while portions of them have been published, they have waited until this time for adequate treatment. Careful attention is paid those in the "Winthrop Papers," Volume I (1498-1628), published by the Massachusetts Historical Society, and the importance of the volume, and succeeding ones, for students of early New England and the history of the Winthrop family in particular is not to be underestimated. The plan to publish these papers in their entirety is to be commended; the contents of the present volume certainly deserves the tribute of publication in this manner.

Beginning with the Latin pedigree of the Winthrop family, the volume records for 390 pages the personal papers of the Winthrops up to 1628. Many of them are of great historical value. A considerable number of pages are devoted to the "Diary" of Adam Winthrop and to the intensely interesting and self-revealing "Experientia" of John Winthrop. This last has something of the quality of "Pilgrim's Progress"; the struggle of man with his normal and natural tendencies to reach the calm of certain and undisturbed faith. The "Experientia" is the autobiography of a devout and sincere man, a Puritan earnestly expressing his inmost hopes, his fears and his religious fervor in passages that are sometimes lyrical. The manuscript of it has disappeared since it was used in the "Life and Letters of John Winthrop." This portion of the volume, and the letters of John Winthrop, are, we think, the most human and illuminating in the entire book, and we believe that they would interest thoughtful lay readers if such could be persuaded to read a volume obviously intended for scholars. We have, ourself, no patience with the Puritan spirit, but in his failings from grace and his reinstatements, usually after an illness, John Winthrop represents the history of Everyman.

AS John Winthrop did not come to Massachusetts until 1628 this volume ends where his new life began. It has only a preliminary relation to the early history of New England. It is excellently documented, frequent use being made of notes from earlier publications of separate portions. This volume is introduced by Frederic Winthrop, and reads, in part:

> The Winthrop Manuscripts form the largest of known private collections on the early Colonial history of English America. Not only by their contents but also by their wide connections they relate the history of New England and of all that New England represents. Preserved to a large extent through centuries of chances that threaten such material, they came to the Massachusetts Historical Society by gift from Robert Charles Winthrop and Robert Charles Winthrop Jr., as a permanent memorial of a family who played important parts in public and private stations in their respective generations. The zealous interest of those two members gathered and interpreted these records so far as opportunity offered, and the Massachusetts Historical Society from time to time published selections. * * * In establishing the fund in memory of Robert Winthrop of New York and in placing the responsibility for its use on the Historical Society the long-time union of the family and the society is perpetuated and the highest usefulness of the manuscripts assured. With English origin and connections described in this first volume, the family essentially belongs to Massachusetts and New England.

FLIGHT

A TALE OF TWO RACES

By WALTER WHITE
Author of The Fire in the Flint

Walter White exposes an aspect of Negro life hitherto untouched, in his story of Mimi Daquin, a colored girl who "goes white" and marries a millionaire.

The fact, generally unknown, that 355,000 Mulattoes disappeared from the census figures between 1910 and 1920, with a corresponding increase in whites of the same age, indicates that Mimi Daquin is representative of a large class.

Her experiences as a member of the white race, and her subsequent discovery of the genius of her own people and her return to them, make an unforgettable and significant picture. $2.50 you have challenged God, and God has seen fit to take up your challenge.

Michael's justification was his infatuation for the Countess Anastasia de Castovane and his despair when jilted by that lady. He had roamed the world thereafter, contracted numerous passing fancies, and he did not even remember the name of the little mulatto girl at Riverboro, S. C., who had, as he later discovered, done herself the honor of bearing his son. In the end, however, he found peace and relative happiness with Mary Lane, the sister of the girl his natural son was to have married.

"Challenge" is one of those books which are positively crowded with men with hard, clean faces. Page 7 presents Antony Failing, > tall, broad, inclined to heaviness of build, he nevertheless carried his 63 years gracefully; his hair, though iron-gray, was as thick as in his youth, and—since he was immensely particular about his personal appearance—as correctly cut and brushed, while his fresh complexion bespoke excellent health, and his blue eyes were clear and keen as a young man's.

> a boy rather short, but well knit, and something about him—perhaps his dark, eager eyes, or just his joyous, clean, fresh youth.

Page 8 follows with > a tall man, with the athlete's broad shoulders and narrow hips, whose face, powerful, clean-shaven, distinguished, yet not altogether pleasing, startled Failing out of his customary suave self-possession.

"Challenge" is exactly that sort of a book. All the characters are clean and strong and very, very fine; they have head-splitting emotions and are inclined to carry on about their problems for days and weeks together. The race problem is dragged in by the heels to give purpose to an otherwise Ephillipsoppenheimish mise en scène, and one is heartily bored with the entire plot, which is obvious after the first fifty pages. "Challenge" is a longish novel, closely written, well planned, which contrives in 400-odd pages of fine print to whip a dead horse to a second and more painful death, and to borrow rather than steal the thunder of "God's Stepchildren" to make an English bank-holiday yarn.

IN THE VERMONT HILLS

ALISON VAIL. By Elizabeth Jessup Hepburn. New York: Henry Holt & Co. $2.

WITH its scenes laid partly in New York City, and partly in Vermont, "Alison Vail" is full of very gracefully written descriptions. The author evidently loves the city to which her book is dedicated; she revels in its sunsets, its color and movement; no less evident is her affection for the Vermont hills she pictures so charmingly, in Winter, in Autumn, and in Spring when "twilight lingered and colors blended and starry dusk stole quietly over the hills." A snowstorm in this same Vermont is also very well done, with the darkness and growing terror and sense of isolation in the midst of "the snow that shut you in and shut other people out."

If the rest of the novel were as good as its descriptive passages, it would be notable; but the descriptions are far and away the best of the book. Its very many characters are none of them sufficiently real to be interesting, and the incidents in which they take part are related with a multiplicity of unimportant and unilluminating detail; detail, not piled up little by little until the reader is confronted by an imposing whole, but strewn, so to speak, all over the place. The novel is divided into four "Books," and the first of these seems to suggest that eventually the story will really get somewhere. But in a very little while the reader finds himself beginning to yawn, nor does he cease yawning until the narrative reaches its long-obvious, fairy-tale conclusion, with all the good people prosperous and happy, especially the ineffable Alison.

Alison is the central figure of the book, which opens with her childhood, "somewhere about the year 1899," and closes when she is in the late twenties or early thirties. She is lovely to look upon, a clever, successful artist, and extremely noble; rather too noble to be real, her self-sacrificing bestowal upon another artist of the $10,000 legacy she had planned to use for the year in Europe she very much wanted, being, if not quite impossible, certainly altogether unconvincing. All the people in the book admire Alison enormously: "How on earth do you know so much—about love, and wanting things, and freedom?" cries her friend, Hazel Kay, expressing the general attitude, while practically every man she meets falls in love with her. On one occasion "she reminded herself that it was months since any man had told her he loved her and that even then the man was another woman's husband." The very slight thread on which the book is strung is the question which of two among these numerous adorers is to be her mate; the young surgeon, Randal Maxwell, or the sculptor, Hector Trench. She had met Randal at her grandfather's house, Thunder Hill, when she was only 19; they fell in love, but when he asked her to marry him she refused him, entirely for his good. Trench she encountered several years later, at a life class in New York; he was a genius, but he was both poor and lame. Maxwell meanwhile had married another woman, but she proved unsatisfactory, and he confided his matrimonial woes to the omniscient Alison.

Her history is related with a curious lack of dramatic perception, and a loquacity which the author seems unable to restrain. Mrs. Hepburn has apparently no sense of climax, of the right moment at which to stop, and very little sense of light and shade, so that the book as a whole has a blurred, monotonous effect, a kind of general flatness. Apart from its often beautifully written descriptions of scenery, "Alison Vail" has but little to offer that is of any interest.

PSYCHIATRIST FICTION

THE STRANGER WITHIN THE GATES. By C. Nina Boyle. New York: Thomas Seltzer. $2.

CONSIDERING the boundless opportunities which the field of abnormal psychology offers for the imaginative writer, it is surprising that this domain has been comparatively little exploited. The phenomena of dissociation of personality, of multiple personality, of aphasia and loss of personality, all constitute treasure trove for the fictionist, and many an intriguing tale remains to be written when novelists in general come to realize what a store of unclaimed wealth lies hidden just beyond the psychological border lines.

One of the few authors to take advantage of this absorbing material is C. Nina Boyle, whose story "The Stranger Within the Gates" is not so much a "mystery novel (as the misleading legend on the jacket would have us believe) as a narrative of the unexplored fastnesses of the human personality. Not that Miss Boyle makes any evident effort to adhere to psychological fact, even so far as it is known. Her first object seems to be to entertain, but at least she furnishes entertainment not quite of the conventional order, and she manifestly had some of the queer revelations of psychiatry in mind when she gives to her hero a Dr. Jekyll-Hyde personality without having recourse to the magic of drugs to effect her strange transformations.

Watto Southern, the Central character, is a diffident, timid youth given to curious "states" wherein his ordinary personality deserts him. In one of these spells he suffers a complete loss of memory, and goes wandering about the countryside in utter forgetfulness, converted from a retiring, studious lad into a rogue of the utmost aggressiveness. Later he regains his original personality, and retains it for a number of years; but one of the "states" returns in aggravated form, and he again vanishes from his usual haunts, this time as a blustering sailor as blunt and brutal as his normal self was delicate and refined. In the end, however, he lapses back once more into his more cultivated character, and the author makes the final cure complete by a device not exactly original in novels, for a girl whom Watto has befriended years before, and whom he has met once or twice in the interval, proves herself excellent in an emergency, and accomplishes for him what neither the prayers of his mother nor the ministrations of his friends could effect.

Although the solution is built very much according to the standard pattern, the book on the whole is highly interesting, and is to be commended not only for the unusual story it tells but because it points the way into alluring fields wherein few have yet dared to tread.

IN THE MAYFAIR MANNER

WHIPPED CREAM. By Geoffrey Moss. New York: George H. Doran Company. $2.

GEOFFREY MOSS will be remembered as the author of "Sweet Pepper," a story which capitalized the post-war days in Vienna, and expressed a certain rampant, hectic emotional quality that found popular appeal. His latest novel deals with present-day England. The wrapper with vehemence informs that Mr. Moss "has drawn vividly a group of neurotic society folk, swayed by the dangerous tendencies of today. He tells fearlessly of an intensely modern girl struggling in the vortex of unconquerable passions and strange desires."

The chief figure of interest in "Whipped Cream" is Lindy Hawkins, the young, restless wife of a thoroughly steady and sincere Englishman, known as the General. At the house party of Mrs. Van Neck, on her country estate, the General accidentally discovers his wife coming from the room of young Lord Dashwood at a compromisingly early hour. The General finds the incident almost unbelievable, but goes to consult with his father-in-law. After a discussion between the two men the General decides to put the case in the hands of his lawyers.

Lindy was sorry, when it was too late. She was in love with the General. The affair hadn't been consciously planned. After the separation Lindy lives with Vera, an old friend, who was one of the guests at the house party, upon whom Lindy leans in her distress. She plans to live with Vera until Lord Dashwood can arrange his affairs, and then they are to go away together, while the General secures the divorce. His Lordship delays. He waits so long that Lindy breaks with him. Consequently, Vera and Lindy go off to the Baltic. A Rumanian Prince becomes interested in Lindy. This affair ends in further disillusionment, and the two women return to London, with Lindy regretting the loss of the General.

Vera is convinced that the General is the only man who can protect Lindy from herself and keep her from "going under." So in desperation she calls upon him. Vera explains:

> She'd want to come back. She's broken. You are the only man who has been good to her. You could save her. For the moment all she wants is security; but that doesn't mean that her nature is changed. She may have learned her lesson. She mayn't. Nobody could tell. So it wouldn't be fair to you to promise you that she'd be different. * * * You'll be good to her; pray God she'll be good to you. * * * Take her right, right away. * * *

The General consents to do so, and thus ends the romance of Lindy. The novel has a contrapuntal plot in the love affair of Vera and the Bo'sun. The Bo'sun was a very likable fellow. She delighted in his company, in the friendship they had; but her nature was inhibited. Beyond the platonic relationship she can't conceive of herself living. She is innately an old maid. So, after the Bo'sun waited considerable time, and Vera remained unmoved, he departed for darkest Africa.

"Whipped Cream" is a novel of trivial and weak people. It is keyed to hectic sensations and written in a jerkey, gawky style. Altogether a sad effort to cash in on the Mayfair school of fiction that is already old stuff and dreary.

EXTRAVAGANZA

GROBO. By E. H. W. Meyerstein. 363 pp. New York: George H. Doran Company. $2.50.

OF the phrase on "Grobo's" jacket, "A sophisticated story of modern London," only the assurance of sophistication is accurate; practically none of it is laid in London. Mr. Meyerstein's subtitle, "A Castle in Spain," is progressively more relevant, for it is to a literal castle in Spain that Grobo finally comes, and it is the terms for acquiring this castle which occupy the second half of the book. But "Grobo" has no one mise en scène. It is in a very modern way picaresque: a Spanish town, the castle, a mountain retreat of brigands, London, Harrow and Oxford are its shifting backgrounds. It is a very strange biography of a very strange person — sophisticated, fantastic, witty, tiresome and absurd.

Mr. Meyerstein has written in sum an original novel, though its parts are mosaicised from many type sources of sophisticated writing. Glibly, one could say take a little of Voltaire, a touch of Max Beerbohm, an echo of Cabell, something of Aldous Huxley, something of "The Oxford Circus," and something of Van Vechten's "The Blind Bow-Boy," and you have "Grobo." But the analysis would not be altogether sound — the similarities more truly arise from the inevitable coincidences of genre than from any direct influence of authors; and in any case, one has still to reckon with Grobo himself. For Grobo, in a good many ways, is an original. But the comparisons with other writers of the sophisticated brotherhood does serve the one purpose of suggesting what "Grobo" is like.

In the beginning Grobo was the son of a Spanish wineseller. His queerness as a child led his father to think him mad and to find relief in selling him to a capricious Englishman who admired Grobo's beauty. Sir William Lockjaw took him to London, exhibited him as a curio, sent him to Harrow, from which he was expelled, and found him no less troublesome than clever, and no less mysterious than oblig-

Germany Is Flooded With Books on Art

BERLIN.

DELIGHT in painting and plastic art has always been closely connected with literature in Germany. The German is incapable of naïve joy to visual enjoyment, of indelight in the picture per se; always he asks "Whence—how?" He demands an actual, logical explanation for it; to him it is more a part of general education than an elevation of his soul in the realms of art. There are exceptions, of course. But even the greatest connoisseurs—indeed, this class particularly—are of the sort I have described. This must be the reason for the enormous output of books on art that are flooding Germany at a time when the creation of new and great art is becoming more and more shallow, or else is taking oddly mistaken paths to false goals.

Here we will concern ourselves with a selection that has been published within the last few years by Bruckmann's Verlag and active house of Friedrich Bruckmann's Verlag & Co. of Munich. All of these books are moderately priced, and are chosen with a view to being free by the unanimadversion of partiality, a characteristic peculiar to the development of art in Germany. Here it is very interesting to note the extraordinary differences in the style and views of the most important authorities on art. While some maintain an objective, critical attitude, others display a more pedagogic motive; and stands out through the facility and serenity of his style. Fedor Hagen stresses the specifically German characteristics in the painting of Grünewald. Karl Scheffler and Julius Meier-Gräfe, both are essentially modern authors who are not content with mere critics, but approach their subject with the magnifying lens of psychology, and lay bare the emotional and intellectual essence of the masters that determine their rank and position in the world of art.

We begin with the Middle Ages. There is a most informative and entertaining work by Wilhelm Pinder, "Old German Book Illustrations," with 105 illustrations. The pictures reveal to us more of the intimate life and sentiments of the Germanic ancestors than could several volumes of cultural history. Though their subjects may be taken from Greek myths, from the world of Roman authors and poets, from the stories of the Holy Scriptures, yet the characters are always Germans with their gnarled and clumsy movements, going about in German country scenes, in villages and cities. Fascinating is the German humor and the German temperament come to the fore, and modern art can hardly match the perfection of their draftsmanship, of the artistic spacing and composition of these pictures.

Adolf Feulner devotes an exhaustive investigation to the beautiful altar piece of Sebaldus, by Peter Vischer, well known by all visitors to Nuremberg. He comes to the characteristic conclusion that the Gothic for the temperamental has not even these antique motifs a touch of their own, full of whimsical originality. Everything combines to build up that mystical realm which the human romantic fancy has created for itself as its very own sphere of joy. The figures of the apostles and saints symbolize all shades of human feelings, to the most personal experience.

FROM Oskar Hagen the great Renaissance master of the Isenheimer Altar piece of Colmar, Matthias Grünewald, receives warmly enthusiastic and philosophically founded treatment which is quite capable of throwing new light on the "Grünewald problem." Until about twenty years ago this greatest German painter of the past was mentioned practically not at all, in contrast to Dürer, Holbein and Holbein. Only the artistic development of the present has given us a deeper understanding for the exalted visions of wild color and inexorable realism, which, however, frequently is negligent in the execution of superficial form in its effort to exhaust completely the profound gulf of human capacity for expression.

Oskar Hagen says clearly that the revival of our understanding of Matthias Grünewald as a German master is of the utmost significance for both the intellectual and the cultural life of today. This thoroughly interesting book is marked by subtle discussions of the linear element in Grünewald and Albrecht Dürer.

Its sequel, so to speak, is a splendid volume containing the delightful drawings of Dürer and provided with an introduction by Heinrich Wölfflin. This Swiss authority on art always maintains an objective attitude toward his subject; thus, when he speaks of Dürer he admits what Hagen claims at the close of his discussion of Grünewald—that much which was valuable was lost through Dürer's all-absorbing effort to educate German art to lucidity of expression. But history, he says, has recognized the necessity of these efforts; and it was the fame of Dürer's drawings that pushed Grünewald into oblivion. Though prints can never reproduce even approximately the power of Grünewald's colors and expression, the delicate drawings of Dürer are excellently suited for reproduction, so that it is the pictures of the latter that give us the most exquisite delight.

THE rococo period is discussed in a volume of French and German illustrations, accompanied by a text by Wilhelm Hausenstein. Much historical material is woven in with his descriptions. The most profound contrasts between the French and the German spirit are revealed in the gently rounded lines of Boucher's coquettish grace, in the feminine figures of Elsen and Gravelotte, as opposed to the rugged, solidly bourgeois intimacy expressed in the family scenes of the Prussian artist Chodowiecki, or to the caustic irony with which he lashes the fashionable eccentricities of his day.

Karl Scheffler's charming book on Max Liebermann brings us to Germany's own time. Liebermann, the painter of the Amsterdam Orphanage, the painter of the Dutch fishermen, the painter of the Munich Secession, the painter of the Berlin Academy, the painter of the Wannsee, the painter of the Jewish Cemetery, the painter of the Parisian Salon, the painter of the Munich Glaspalast, the painter of the Berlin

THEY take their drama seriously in Dublin. At the second night's performance of Sean O'Casey's play, "The Plough and the Stars," at the Abbey Theatre, there was a hostile demonstration by a group of hysterical women, who claimed to be offended by the appearance of the Irish tricolor in a public house scene. William Butler Yates is reported to have come to the rescue by rushing out and bringing back a crowd of friends, who applauded vigorously and encouraged the players to proceed. Mr. O'Casey, by the way, has just been awarded the Hawthornden prize of £100 for his play, "Juno and the Paycock." This prize is given annually to the best work of imaginative literature produced during the year by a writer under 40. "The Plough and the Stars" has just been published here by the Macmillan Company, who also brought out "Juno and the Paycock" and "The Shadow of a Gunman."

Kentucky now has a Poet Laureate, Cotton Noe, of Lexington. The title was conferred upon him by unanimous vote of both houses of the Legislature of Kentucky. Dr. Noe (pronounced in one syllable) is the head of the Department of Education of the University of Kentucky. He is the author of two volumes of poetry, but his more recent publications in book form have been anthologies published by the Bookfellows, of which order he has long been a member. Several States have poets laureate, but the only other bard, so far as we are informed, who has received that title by vote of the State Legislature is John G. Neihardt of Nebraska. In case the Legislature of the State of New York should decide to follow the example of the Solons of Nebraska and Kentucky, we beg leave to place in nomination the name of Don Marquis, the author of our favorite poem, "Noah an' Jonah an' Cap'n John Smith."

Nancy Hoyt, whose first novel, "Roundabout," will be published on April 23 by Alfred A. Knopf, is a younger sister of Elinor Wylie.

The subject of Dr. J. G. Carter Troop's free lecture at the Hotel Majestic this afternoon at 3:30 will be "The Intimate Papers of Colonel House," published by Houghton Mifflin Company. Dr. Troop was recently re-elected for the fifth time President of the New York Public Lecture Association.

Does any one know where to lay hands on a book called "English Exercises," by Jane Gardiner, published at York in 1801? If so, that person will confer a favor by communicating with W. Clark Durant, State Hospital, Middletown, Conn. The book is supposed to contain eleven letters written by Mary Wollstonecraft at an early period of her life and it is these letters that interest Mr. Durant, who is editing the "Memoirs of Mary Wollstonecraft," by William Godwin, and adding to it a supplement containing hitherto unpublished or uncollected material. The book is to be published by Constable & Co., Ltd., London.

Archibald Henderson's "Table Talk of G. B. S.," published here by Harper & Brothers and in England by Chapman & Hall, has now been translated into German and is being brought out by S. Fischer Verlag, Berlin, with the title "Tisch gespraeche mit Bernard Shaw." We prefer the English title, it isn't so spluttery.

Harry Hervey recently made a flying trip to New York on business connected with his new book of his experiences in Indo-China, which the Cosmopolitan Book Corporation is going to publish. The book has not yet been definitely named, but "Dark Gods and White Men" is being considered as a title. That sounds like a perfectly good title—not that any one has asked our opinion.

The Encyclopaedia Britannica, Inc., has just brought out a new edition (the fifth) of "The Historians' History of the World," edited by Dr. Henry Smith Williams with the assistance of a large staff of distinguished scholars who are specialists in various fields of historical research. The new edition carries the work down to date and contains about 10 per cent. more material than the first edition. In spite of this fact it is smaller in bulk than the early editions, the twenty-seven volumes now being bound as fifteen, except in the de luxe green sheepskin set, which still clings to the twenty-seven volume form. There is an edition in cloth and another in half morocco. The price of the new edition is less than half that of the earlier ones.

Romain Rolland is working on a series of twelve plays about the French Revolution. One of these, "The Game of Love and Death," is to be published soon by Henry Holt & Co. The translation is by Van Wyck and Eleanor Stimson Brooks.

Ford Madox Ford has accepted a contract to lecture in this country under the management of James B. Pond. He will arrive here in October at about the time when Albert & Charles Boni plan to publish the novel which he is now writing. This will be the third novel in the series in which "Some Do Not" was the first and "No More Parades" the second. Before this book appears, however, the Bonis will reissue one of Mr. Ford's earlier novels, probably "Ladies Whose Bright Eyes."

On April 20 the Macmillan Company will publish the first volume of "A History of English Literature," by two professors in the University of Paris. Professor Emile Legouis, the author of the first volume, is well known in England as a biographer and critic of Wordsworth. His volume deals with the Middle Ages and the Renaissance, while the second volume, by Professor Louis Cazamian, to be published a little later, deals with modern literature. The London Observer calls this history "the most important work of its kind since Taine's history."

A week or two ago we remarked upon the name of Idwal Jones, wondering whether "Idwal" were a real name. It is. The information comes to us from a lady who is going to be terribly disappointed if that name does not become much better known than it is now. She writes: "He is the most amazingly wide-read man I've ever met; speaks God knows how many languages; has a radiantly charming personality, and writes letters that are worthy of publication. I ought to know! In fact, those of us who are fortunate enough to know Idwal find the rest of mankind rather dull!" Meaning, we take it, that Idwal is the cat's eyebrows.

Early in May, Little, Brown & Co. will publish a number of juveniles, including "The Young Folks' Book of Myths," by Amy Cruse; "The Young Folks' Book of Inventions," by T. C. Bridges; "Followers of the Trail," by Zoe Meyer; "Davy Winkle in Circusland," by Edwin P. Is Havelock Ellis The Most Civilized Living Englishman?

HAVELOCK ELLIS, says H. L. Mencken, is "undoubtedly the most civilized living Englishman of his generation."

HAVELOCK ELLIS is now the subject of a "biographical and critical survey" by Isaac Goldberg, just published.

HAVELOCK ELLIS, like Goldberg's previous biography, "The Man Mencken," is an intimate Boswellian disclosure, enlivened by details and hitherto unpublished memorabilia not found in the conventional biography.

HAVELOCK ELLIS is not only about Ellis but to a large extent by Ellis, containing his prose—

verse—letters—
diary entries—
and fugitive fragments including a translation of Renan's dramatic version of The Song of Songs never before available—

—all of first edition value.

HAVELOCK ELLIS gives the first complete and true account —after twenty-eight years—of the trial of Ellis for his first books on sex, tells the story of his friendship with Olive Schreiner, his marriage to Edith Lees, and his adventures and triumphs as an outstanding artist, philosopher and poet.

The publishers deem it a privilege to announce this distinguished biography of a great man: HAVELOCK ELLIS, A BIOGRAPHICAL AND CRITICAL SURVEY, by Isaac Goldberg. 355 pages, 11 full-page illustrations, $3.00. On sale now at all bookstores, or from the publishers

When the Axe Fell on the Tinsel Fiction of the Bourbon Court

Five Novelists Who Link the Pretty Prose of Versailles to the Rationalism Of Mme. de Stael

FOUR NOVELISTS OF THE OLD REGIME. By John Garber Palache. 271 pp. New York: The Viking Press. $3.

MADAME DE STAEL: HER LIFE AS REVEALED IN HER WORK, 1766-1800. By David Glass Larg, M. A. Translated from the French by Veronica Lucas. 332 pp. New York: Alfred A. Knopf.

THE five writers examined in "Four Novelists of the Old Régime," by John Garber Palache, and "Madame de Stael: Her Life as Revealed in Her Work," by David Glass Larg, form together a group that expresses in itself the tendencies of French fiction immediately before and during the Revolution. They are, in effect, the connecting link between the ancien régime and that new rationalism that swept into the minds of the French folk with the fall of the Bastille. We see in them one order of existence dwindling into an insignificant degeneracy of the spirit and another order, one that is democratic in urge, rationalistic in method and propagandist in purpose, steadily rising in power. Let us understand at the beginning what these five writers, at least three of them barely known in English-reading countries, stand for. Crebillon fils, according to Mr. Palache, writes the "comedy of a corrupt and brilliant society in its last phase." "The novel of Laclos," again quoting from Mr. Palache, "is the tragedy of that society." Diderot and Restif de la Bretonne belong to the new France and their progress is one that leads directly to the Revolution. It is these four men who form the subject matter of "Four Novelists of the Old Régime." Mme. de Stael, whose early life and work are analyzed so penetratingly by Mr. Larg, is a vital expression of the new France. These five people, then, assume more than individual prominence. They are clustered at that time of times so startlingly made permanent by the fall of the Bastille, the march of the women to Versailles, the ominous voices of Robespierre and Danton, and the terrific gestures of Notre Dame de la Douleur, Mme. Guillotine.

It is pertinent, perhaps, to understand the dates of the activities of this quintet and observe how they overlap in order properly to orientate them. Crebillon fils, baptized Claude-Prosper-Jolyot, was born in 1707 and he died in 1777. He antedates the French cataclysm at all points. Denis Diderot, the great Encyclopaedist, was born in 1713 and died in 1784. He may be regarded as one of the philosophical forces that set the stage for the French Revolution. Choderlos de Laclos, born in 1741 and dying in 1803, antedates the Revolution so far as his solitary famous novel, "Les Liaisons Dangereuses" (1782) goes, but his life is inextricably interwoven with it. Restif de la Bretonne was born in 1734 and he died in 1806. Mme. de Stael was born in 1766 and she died in 1817. Mme. de Stael, it will be observed, was but 11 years old when Crebillon died. She was the child of the new era as Crebillon was one of the last voices of the old.

It is from Mr. Palache's book that we get a clear idea of the ancien régime in letters and social spirit and a definite picture of the new thought that is filtering in so hurriedly. The first part of the eighteenth century, he points out, was a final phase of the preceding century in the generally accepted philosophy of life and literature. "The latter part, under the influence of 'new' ideas, ushered in the Revolution and the nineteenth century." There was the era of wits, blasé and epicurean gestures toward life, salons and those last graceful movements of existence that can exist, perhaps, only under a tyrannical government. Crebillon fils was part of this world. "Mettre l'esprit dans la volupté," might have been the motto of his work. He is light, clever, witty, epigrammatic, provokingly shocking. He represents all that we today understand the court of Louis XV to have represented, beautiful but frail women and gallant but immoral beaux. There is licentiousness but no vulgarity, ease and courtliness and an entire lack of awkwardnesses of any sort. The air sparkles with wit and a delicate depravity threads the very best society. Perhaps no man talked as brilliantly as Clitandre in Crebillon's "La Nuit et le Moment" (which by the way, has recently been translated by Aldous Huxley and published in a beautifully bound little English edition), but Clitandre is the beau ideal of these gallants who wandered about the fountains at Versailles.

Choderlos de Laclos represents another side of this life. His "Les Liaisons Dangereuses" is a book which purports to show the means used by corrupt persons to ruin the lives of the worthy, and because of its subject matter it has been relegated to that category of erotic curiosa which includes the Memoires of Casanova. But like the Memoires it is more than that. There is a supreme mastery of character-drawing in this work and a complete command of situations that places it among the great (though narrow) novels of France. It was Napoleon who was reported to have said that Vanity made the Revolution and that Vanity would end it. "Les Liaisons Dangereuses" is based upon Vanity and it takes a step beyond the light and witty tales of Crebillon fils in revealing that society which the Revolution swept away, swept to foreign countries, swept to La Guillotine. These two men, then, are mouthpieces of the old. So, too, are Didrot and Restif de la Bretonne. But with a difference. Diderot, of course, was merely a novelist in part. It was but a portion of his many-sided being, a being that circumscribed political, philosophical, religious, educative and artistic expression. He was a giant and he belongs more properly with Voltaire and Rousseau than with Crebillon fils and de Laclos. Still his novels do join hands with the work of these men in certain particulars. The light of a new day is fitfully gleaming in them, however, and he attacks various evils under a fictional guise. Restif de la Bretonne was a creature of strange contrasts. He is, perhaps, the French writer in this group who is the least known to English readers, and no better introduction to him may be found than in the extensive treatment which Mr. Palache gives him, a treatment that includes a concise résumé of Restif's

Diderot. From a Copy of an Engraving by Delauney.

Choderlos de Laclos.

"M. Nicolas, ou Le Coeur Humain Dévoilé," an inaccurate autobiography that sometimes suggests the Memoires of Casanova.

Restif's story [writes Mr. Palache] is a tragi-comedy of contradiction, shamelessness, honesty, naïve frankness, absurd egotism, loud self-condemnation, excessive sensitiveness, semi-callousness, cowardice, occasional courage, desire for justice tempered by fear of tyranny, extremely bad taste, complete absence of deliberate cruelty and of real sordidness. It includes an extraordinary series of love affairs, intense, frequently of no duration, often unforgettable.

This man who wrote hundreds of worthless books reached the apex of his genius (such as it was) in the autobiography, a huge work not particularly blessed with accuracy but filled with an unceasing go and with a picture of the times.

It is an entirely differing figure who meets us in the pages of Mr. Larg's "Madame de Stael: Her Life as Revealed in Her Work." It is the early Mme. de Stael who is presented here, not the Mme. de Stael of "Corinne" and Chateaubriand. All that, together with her disfavor with Napoleon, lies in the future and Mr. Larg promises to consider her later aspects in another volume, a sequel to this one, which will picture her under the Empire. It is the Mme de Stael who was Germaine Necker, beloved daughter of Louis's financial adviser, wife of Baron de Stael-Holstein, mistress of Benjamin Constant, author of early plays and novels and commentator on the Revolution, who is considered here. Mr. Larg, who employs a peculiar style that seems more staccato than it is because of the tiresomely frequent breaking of paragraphs (sometimes it seems that every sentence is a paragraph by itself), manages to get beneath the surface of de Stael and plot the growth of her mind. The reader will find a girl who adores her parents so excessively as to betray a lack of humor on her part and a woman who attempted to base a career on logic. At first, she is imitative, for, having absorbed hundreds of cheap novels and poems, her mind is affected by them. But as she matures, as she marries and is disillusioned and is orientated to life, a certain depth comes into her work. It would be easy to overestimate Mme. de Stael, for somehow the reader desires her to be more than she really is, to reach profounder depths of analysis both social and political. She is liberal. She is in the forefront of the thought of her time, and though the excesses of the Revolution may appall her (it must be remembered that she belonged to the court circle) she senses the justice of the emancipated bourgeoisie. Mr. Larg is particularly instructive in his picture of Mme de Stael during the Revolution and the way in which the gigantic crisis shifted her mind.

It is a far cry from Crebillon and his delicate dialogues to Mme Stael and her "De l'Influence des Passions sur le Bonheur des Individus et des Nations," but the reader will perceive in the two books a certain sense how the one led into the other, how the ancien régime, with all its gilt and beauty, its chatter, its gold and lutes, its airy pastels and naughty innuendoes shifted to the shouting sans-culottes, the rumbling tumbrils, and the dark cause of Robespierre and, somewhere in the background, the lean-faced Corsican watching his star of destiny. There are no more fascinating pages in history, and the literature of the period is like a series of huge mirrors showing the same scene from traveling steadily forward from the tinkling fountains of Versailles to the bloody baskets of La Guillotine. Both "Four Novelists of the Old Régime" and "Madame de Stael: Her Life as Revealed in Her Work" introduce new critics of French letters to American readers, and in both cases the introductions are assets for the reader. Mr. Palache is an American and he is a welcome addition, for French scholarship in America is not all that it should be. His admirable restraint he manages to synthesize his critical and biographical matter into coherent essays that are particularly illuminating. He is now at work on another book which will be concerned with Théophile Gautier and his circle. Mr. Larg is French, apparently, and he has been lucky in securing Miss Veronica Lucas as his translator. From the poems redone into English it is apparent that she is aware that mere literalism in translating does not always convey the sense from one tongue to another.

Portrait of a Feminine British Labor Leader

MARY MacARTHUR. A Biographical Sketch. By Mary Agnes Hamilton. Introduction by Margaret Bondfield. 210 pp. New York: Thomas Seltzer, Inc. $2.

THE author of this very graphic sketch, who is also known in England by her pen name, "Iconoclast," has already been favorably introduced to American readers by her previous biographical works on English labor leaders, Ramsay MacDonald, about whom she has written two books, and Margaret Bondfield. This sketch of Mary MacArthur, who shares with Mrs. MacDonald and Miss Bondfield the distinction of being one of the three great women leaders produced by the British Labor Movement, is an arresting piece of literary work. Mrs. Hamilton wields a vivid pen and she has a knack of character dissection which is almost uncanny in the way it lays bare the inmost heart of its subject and, while never being anything but tender and admiring in spirit, yet manages to be judicial in estimate and to give the reader full understanding of faults and frailties of character. In this book one feels her deep, constant, cordial appreciation of Mary MacArthur's qualities of mind and heart, but she calmly and frankly puts in their true perspective emotional stresses that had to be reckoned with by her subject's friends and fellow-workers. A real portrait emerges from her pages, an interesting, vital personality in whom seemed to burn a living flame that inspired to action and marvelous success.

The daughter of a conservative, well-to-do Scotch merchant, Mary MacArthur threw herself ardently into the Labor Movement in 1900, while she was still but a girl of twenty. A little later she went to London and was at once made Secretary of the Women's Trade Union League wherein, and in other connections with the Labor Movement, she was until her death in 1921 an indefatigable worker, an inspiring force and a very important influence. All who came into contact with her gave her credit for possessing "statesmanlike qualities," "the qualities of a great captain," "a genius for leadership." But besides these, and reinforcing them, Mrs. Hamilton stresses throughout the book her personal charm, her radiant personality, her vivid emotional qualities. "Like a rocket," says Mrs. Hamilton, "she shot across the sky of industry and politics, scattering sparks around her." To realize in cold print so vivid and vibrant a character, to make her live in the pages of a book so that the reader feels the intensity with which she lived her life and the radiance she cast about her is no small feat, but her biographer has achieved it.

FOR ITALIAN CITIZENS

THEODORE ROOSEVELT THE AMERICAN. By Edward H. Cotton. Foreword by Corinne Roosevelt Robinson. Introductory note by George La Piana. Frontispiece portrait. 323 pp. In English and Italian. Boston: The Beacon Press. $2.

ADDRESSED to both English and Italian readers, with the narrative carried on opposite pages in both languages from beginning to end of the book, this volume seems to be intended more for the Italian than for the English reader, and to have been prepared with an eye to its usefulness for Americanization purposes. The author has not tried in the rather brief space this bilingual plan gave him to present a full biography of his subject, but rather to depict his personality and to indicate the extent and variety of his activities and achievements. Without adding anything of consequence to the already known facts of Mr. Roosevelt's life, he has summed these up and interpreted them to make a brief biography that will appeal to busy men and women familiar with either language. It is not in any sense a critical estimate of Roosevelt's career and character, but follows the method already well established in Rooseveltian biography of ardent admiration and unbroken eulogy. The narrative is followed by a bibliography of Roosevelt's work and of books about him, with a list of important dates in his life, also in both languages.

FO'C'SLE DAYS

THE LOG OF A SHELLBACK: A Narrative of Life and Adventure Before the Mast in the '90s. By H. F. Farmer. Illustrated. 353 pp. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. $4.

THE time of which Mr. Farmer writes was when he was an ordinary seaman, with ambitions to become an able-bodied seaman, back in the '90s; and the voyages of which he tells took him across the Atlantic; on coastwise trips in North America, southward to the River Plate and 'round the Horn. But he is less concerned with his voyages as voyages than he is with the daily life of the seamen—the shellbacks—which he shared, and he seems to have been inspired to write his book largely by the desire to accord to them the due credit which he thinks literature has not given them. The ignorance and drunkenness of the shellback have been stressed, he believes, at the expense of recognition of his devotion to his work and his loyalty to his ship. "The shellback," says Mr. Farmer, "was an unlovely being, a drunkard and an outcast, but in the battle against wind and wave he was a hero," and he adds that "no calling ever produced so many or greater heroes than did the sailing ship." But while he admires that one phase of the character of the old-time sailor and constantly brings it out in his narrative, the author's eulogistic temper stops there, and he does not in the least attempt to gloss over the rest of the truth about the seaman. His purpose is, he says, "to show the man as I knew him—a queer mixture of immorality and heroism."

An inquiring, analytical mind seems to have companioned Mr. Farmer during these voyages as a sailorman, as well as in later years, and he turns its attention several times in this book to an attempt to discover the secret of the lure of the sea for the man who gambled his life against it on every voyage. He discusses this question very interestingly in its several phases, declaring that it is the ceaseless struggle of ship and man against ocean storms and not the fine weather that holds the sailor to the sea, and near the end of the book he comes to this conclusion:

It was not the sea with its cold, malevolent waves, its fickle winds and icy blasts. It was the blind worship of a heathen goddess which held those shellbacks to a life of ill-treatment, bad food, bad pay and evil associations.

Another matter upon which Mr. Farmer writes out of much observation is the relation in those days between sailors and officers. He thinks that fiction has overcolored the tyranny and brutality of the officers, that the seamen did not mind "a clean fight," and that if shellback and mate were both competent there was such mutual respect for efficiency that an occasional belaying pin was a trivial matter.

Mr. Farmer describes several of his voyages with some detail and takes up specially interesting phases of the shellback's life in other chapters. It is a personal narrative throughout and is rather more interesting than such books are prone to be. For it is written with a sense of selection that makes all its pages worth while and with an eye for the dramatic and the picturesque that gives constant movement and color.

EUROPEAN CHANGES

EUROPE'S NEW MAP. By F. J. Adkins. 96 pp. New York: The People's Institute Publishing Company, Inc. $1.

THE title of this small volume is, perhaps, a bit misleading, since it contains no visualizing presentation of Europe's surface. It would better and more interestingly serve its purpose if it did carry such a map, at least as end-papers, where it could be constantly consulted in connection with its text. The purpose of the author, who is a lecturer in the University of London, is to make clear how the map of Europe originated, how physical conditions—rivers, valleys, mountain ranges, fertile lands, forests—helped to form natural divisions, and how dynasties, languages, religions, tribal characteristics sometimes cooperated with and sometimes opposed and ignored these natural barriers and cohesive influences to form political divisions. Frontiers, physical conditions and maritime influences hold his attention in the earlier chapters. Then he takes up in more detail the movements of the Teutonic and the Turkish peoples as they established imperialisms and dominated the Slav States, considers the Poles working northward, finding a foothold and growing to power, and then studies with clarifying effect the beginning and development of the tangled nationalities and interests in the Balkans. In an appendix Mr. Adkins tells briefly about inconsequent but significant things he has seen during recent journeys over practically the whole of Europe.

Mr. Adkins's rapid outline survey of the origin and development of European political divisions is written very simply, but is evidently the product of rich stores of knowledge, keen and extensive observation and vital interest. He has that desirable knack of the professional lecturer for selection and arrangement of material that ignores all but the most important and sets this forth in striking high relief. His little book, which, by the way, does not touch Russia at all and is largely, though not wholly, concerned with Central Europe, will clarify situations and difficulties in that region for most readers. It is especially valuable for the attention its pays to the more obscure causes of the World War.

INDIAN FOLK TALES

CHILDREN OF THE TWILIGHT. Folk-Tales of Indian Tribes. By Emma-Lindsay Squier. 257 pp. New York: Cosmopolitan Book Corporation. $2.

IT is the old Indian, half hidden in the twilight of the Stone Age to which he belongs, to whom Miss Squier's title refers. He is different from the younger Indian, even from those but a little younger than himself, for to all except the very old ones the full light of the modern day has brought forgetfulness of the things that meant so much in the Stone Age years. It is only the very old men, and especially the old chiefs, who still know and believe and care about the myths and the legends that were once their literature, their laws, their religion. And, for that reason, Miss Squier has searched out the old Indians, learned in folklore, among the tribes of the West and with understanding and sympathy has persuaded them to tell her some of their legends. Among them was an old chief of the remnant of a tribe in the Puget Sound region whom she had known in her childhood and from whom she had heard, with the accepting heart of a child, many such tales. When she began to collect the material for this book she sought him again and he told her several of the stories she has here brought together. Others she found in Alaska, in Southern California and in Arizona. Some of the best of them come from this last-named region, from among the related tribes of the mountains and plateaus of the northern part of that State.

Miss Squier retells the myths and

A GUARANTEE

THE price of this book is only $1.50. As its publishers we have extraordinary faith in it. It has just been published, but those who have already read it have been so delighted with it that for the next month we, in cooperation with every bookseller in the country, are making an unusual offer to any and every one who has ever played bridge.

Read this book. Lend it to your friends. If, after 10 days, you and your friends aren't delighted with it, please return it to the bookstore for a complete refund. This guarantee is good until May 1. It is absolutely unqualified.

SHE led out her four aces and remarked sweetly: "Now, partner, the trouble begins!" Have you ever played with her? Or with the warlike individual who shouts REDOUBLE whenever anyone doubles anything? You'll meet them in this book. You'll meet also the sound player who has learned that the less you lose the more you win.

In other words, you will find actual people you know around the bridge table. You will see them bidding (with facial expressions), playing their hands (wonderfully or terribly, as the case may be) and postmortemizing after it's all over.

This book tells you exactly how your partner ought to play—and more!

Then the author in his charming and tolerant way discusses the comic and tragic aspects of the hand in a manner appropriate to the magnitude of his theme.

THERE may be better and more delightful ways of learning bridge than this, but those who have read the book swear that it's the only one that's really taught them how to play. Perhaps they feel this way because the belligerent solemnity that's so often associated with bridge is completely OUT of this book.

You will find SO THEY PLAYED BRIDGE —AND HOW! in all bookstores. It's there on a special arrangement with booksellers, since, as its publishers, we have extraordinary faith that every bridge player (whether expert or beginner) will find it as instructive as it is charming. Please read the guarantee in the upper right hand corner of this advertisement.

The Third and Concluding Volume in Mr. Adams' History of New England

NEW ENGLAND IN THE REPUBLIC
1776-1850
By
JAMES TRUSLOW ADAMS, LL.D., Litt.D.

¶ This concluding volume in Mr. Adams' masterly historical survey of New England, which began with "The Founding of New England" (awarded the Pulitzer Prize for the best history of 1921) and was continued in "Revolutionary New England: 1691-1776", tells of the vast changes caused by the Revolution, of the struggle for democracy, and of the lives and thoughts and accomplishments of rich and poor alike in that northeastern corner of the Republic.

IN The Atlantic Monthly for April R Clyde Ford narrates, under the title "Modestine's Shoes," his adventures in following the trail of Robert Louis Stevenson through the country described in his "Travels With a Donkey." Modestine, it will be remembered, was the name of Stevenson's donkey. In the village of Pont de Montvert Mr. Ford was fortunate to find a blacksmith who said he remembered Stevenson and who claimed to have had the distinguished honor of shoeing Modestine. After he had told Mr. Ford this he went into his smithy and came back with two little iron shoes in his hand.

"There, monsieur, look at them! Two cast-off fers d'âne—Modestine's front shoes!"

"Really," I stammered, "this is most amazing."

"It does seem almost uncanny, doesn't it? Forty-seven years ago! After I had finished with Modestine I cast these worn-out shoes, with some spirit, I am afraid, into a corner, but her owner hunted them out at once. 'Monsieur le maréchal,' he said solemnly, 'preserve these shoes, and they will bring you luck. I bequeath them to you, with a charm which I will say over them.' He rattled off something in some heathenish jargon, then handed them to me as if they were the keys to a city. Of course I played up to his grand manner and big talk and accepted them with a bow, and later I laid them away. Whenever I have come upon them since, they have always given me a laugh. That was the charm, I think. And now, monsieur, allow me to hand them over to you. The spell is still on them. The shoes of Modestine will bring you, too, many a cheerful moment."

I accepted the proffered treasures and soon after took my leave of the jolly old smith. May Pont de Montvert claim him yet for many years! As I write these words, I glance at two little, worn donkey-shoes hanging over my desk, and I laugh uproariously. The charm still works. And yet one thing troubles me, troubles me much: Are they really Modestine's shoes, or is that story, also, bogus?

Besides this article, the April Atlantic Monthly contains "Olympians in Homespun," by Lucien Price; "The Modesty of Man," by Ramsay Traquair; "The Weaker Sex," by James H. Leuba; "Why I Live in Tahiti," by James Norman Hall; "Forgiveness," by George Herbert Palmer; "The Genesis of Malice," by Sarah N. Cleghorn; "Helen in Egypt," a story, by Emily James Putnam; "The 'Pardon' at Guingamp," a poem, by Marjorie Lane; "German Character and the German-American," by Kuno Francke; "Letters of a Confederate Mother," by Caroline Howard Gilman; "The First Hanging at Miitnuu;" by Vernon Kellogg; "Art and the X-Ray," by Alan Burroughs; "Philosophy," a poem, by Robert Hillyer; "The Dilemma of Thrift," by William T. Foster and Waddill Catchings; "Hindenburg," by T. H. Thomas; "Northern Australia," by Evans Lewis, and "The Decline of Crime in Britain," by Colin R. Coote.

Captain John W. Thomason Jr., author of "Fix Bayonets," contributes to The May Cosmopolitan a story entitled "Red Pants." It is about a Galveston negro who enlisted as a stevedore and presently found himself a member of the Senegalese contingent of the French army. This is how it happened:

Ah sees a colored man, like me, standin' on de corneh. He's got on de nobles' clo'es you evah seed in your life. Dressed up jus' like a lodge membah. He's got on a little red hat widout no brim, an' a little blue jacket, an' a red sash, and gre't big red pants, all baggy-like. Ah ask him what he b'long to. Ah says to mahself, if Ah can git a suit like that, sho' will knock dem Galveston niggers dead! Well, he don' say nothin'. Fust-off, Ah thinks he jus' uppity, because of he pants maybe, but de fac' was, he was jus' plain ignerunt. He's one of dese French niggers, frum Africa, and intimacy that the book becomes a real "experience meeting." After that feature a specially interesting phase is the variety of experiences and of final convictions. Several of them—Arnold Bennett, Rebecca West and others—have reached the state wherein rest so many modern intellectualists; that of a calm and trusting agnosticism. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle discloses, as always, his ardor of belief in spiritualism. Israel Zangwill is faintly racial and thinks that "there is very little real difference among the higher creeds of today—even between such apparent opposites as Roman Catholicism and Judaism." Compton Mackenzie stanchly praises his Catholic religion.

A summary and discussion of the articles is made by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle.

DICTIONARY OF LITERATURE

A DICTIONARY OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE. Designed as a Companion to English Studies. By Leonie Magnus. 594 pages. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $10.

SURVEYING the course of European literature through the 800 years from the twelfth to the twentieth century Mr. Magnus's very competent volume makes a reference book of the greatest value for students of literature. It is the kind of work that has been greatly needed for a long time in libraries, and by departments of English literature in high schools and colleges. The fascination of the dictionary for all inquiring minds is here doubled by reason of the full treatment of each entry and it will be necessary for all such people consulting the volume to set their hearts stanchly against temptation if they want to avoid disastrous losses of time.

The treatment is alphabetical and the entries include not only names of authors, but rapid surveys of the literary history of the chief countries of Europe, general articles on literary movements of importance, description and history of literary forms and definitions of literary terms. Of each author there is a brief biography, some luminous criticism and a little bibliography. Geographical limitation excluded America and the Orient. Although the survey begins, approximately with the twelfth century, certain authors of Greek and Roman times are included because of their continuing and vital influence on the spirit and form of European literature of later date. The only living authors included are Thomas Hardy and Georg Brandes.

Tradition of the French Salon that it was Mme. Arman de Caillavet whose marriage brought her into a Bonapartist family, who for an instant drew her famous friend toward Boulangism. But while her father-in-law was a personal friend of Napoleon III, Anatole France did not, under the Empire and before he knew her, hide his republican sympathies. Intellectually he was the heir of the eighteenth century, a descendant of Voltaire. This he proved brilliantly in a polemic against Brunetière on freedom of thought, in connection with M. Paul Bourget's "Disciple." He did not need Mme. Arman to make him take sides as he did in the Dreyfus affair.

From a literary point of view his talent had been formed, for he was 40 years of age when he penetrated into the Avenue Hoche salon. He had already written his "Golden Poems," "Corinthian Marriage" and "The Crime of Sylvestre Bonnard." There has been much talk to the effect that Mme. Arman collaborated with him. The truth—established by Mme. Pouquet, and, furthermore, evident to all who study the facts and the texts—is that Mme. Arman was an aid and, particularly, an inspiration to him. Her great service to literature consists in her having forced this somewhat careless dreamer to work. He would have produced less without her. But at most she edited only some few indefinite articles or unimportant prefaces of his; Anatole France's great works were written by himself, and by himself alone. PAUL SOUDAY.

Judges:
Jesse Lynch Williams
Former President Authors' League of America
Carl Van Doren
Author "The American Novel"
John Erskine
Columbia University
Author of "The Private Life of Helen of Troy."

¶ To the Author of the best novel, as determined by the judges, Harper & Brothers will pay as a Prize the outright sum of $2,000, in addition to the ordinary terms of royalty, which will be arranged with the Author. The conditions of this Competition are as follows:

1. Any Author shall be eligible for the Prize who is an American citizen and who has not published a novel in book form prior to January 1, 1919.
2. Only manuscripts of unpublished works, submitted to Harper & Brothers before February 1, 1927, and accompanied by the declaration of the Author that the manuscript is submitted in competition for the prize, shall be considered.
3. All manuscripts submitted in competition must be offered to Harper & Brothers for publication on terms to be arranged between the Author and Publisher. The successful work shall be chosen from among those manuscripts accepted by Harper & Brothers for publication and the Prize shall be in addition to and independent of the royalty to be arranged for in the usual way.
4. Harper's Magazine shall have the right to publish the successful work serially on terms to be arranged with the Author, but this right may be waived.
5. No manuscript containing less than 30,000 words shall be considered as a novel for the purpose of this Competition, and preference will be given in general to works of full novel length.
6. Harper & Brothers shall use all reasonable care to pass promptly on manuscripts submitted in competition for this Prize and to return those found unavailable for publication, but they shall not be responsible for manuscripts lost in transit.
7. The judges of the competition shall be JESSE LYNCH WILLIAMS, former president of The Author's League of America; CARL VAN DOREN, author of "The American Novel;" JOHN ERSKINE, Columbia University. Their decision shall be accepted on all questions of eligibility or interpretation of the rules, and their award shall be final.
8. The award shall be made and publicly announced as soon as possible after the close of the Competition.

"That Man Corey is Certainly Interesting"

They say that of him now wherever he goes—this Corey who never used to have a thing to say. Almost overnight he became one of the best-informed men of his group.

"I NEVER knew that Corey was so well-educated."

"He isn't. He left school when he was a kid. Mighty interesting, though—isn't he?"

"Yes; he seems to know about everything. See how he's holding those people fascinated by what he's saying! He's quoting from Shelley, I believe."

"You ought to hear him at a business conference. He has all sorts of information at his command. I remember when he always used to be at a loss for something to say; now he can talk better than any of us."

"What amazes me is the way he can talk on almost any subject at all. And he seems to be familiar with all the great writers and philosophers. He must do a lot of reading."

"I don't see how he can. He's very busy, and I'm sure he hasn't any more time to read than we have. But I wonder how he became so well-informed—almost overnight, it seems to me. It has certainly made an interesting man of him."

Later they had occasion to speak to Corey; and they asked him about it. They weren't prepared for what he told them.

"Read?" he said. "Why, I scarcely ever get time to read at all."

"But in this one evening you quoted from Dante, from Browning, from Kipling, from Poe! How do you do it?"

Corey laughed. "Elbert Hubbard did all my reading for me—years ago. I simply use his Scrap Book."

"You use Hubbard's Scrap Book? What do you mean?"

"Well, you know that Elbert Hubbard began a scrap book when he was quite young. He put into it all the bits of writing that inspired and helped him most. He read everything—searched the literature of every age and every country—to find the ideas which would help him in his own work. He kept this scrap book all through life, adding whatever he thought great and inspiring. As the scrap book grew, it became Hubbard's greatest source of ideas. He turned to it constantly; it helped him win fame as a writer and orator. At the time of his death on the sinking of the Lusitania, it had become a priceless collection of great thoughts—the fruit of a whole lifetime of discriminating reading."

"But what can this private scrap book possibly mean to you? How can you—use it—as you say?"

"The executors of Hubbard's estate agreed to the publication of his scrap book after his death. I have a copy. That's why I say Elbert Hubbard did my reading for me. All I have to do is glance through his Scrap book occasionally—and I get all the best thoughts and ideas of the last 4000 years, without wading through a lot of uninteresting reading."

"So that's your secret! That's why you can talk so well on so many different subjects! That Elbert Hubbard Scrap Book has made you a different man, Corey!"

insane debauch under the influence of the maddening native drug—these are high points in a drama which is all the more extraordinary for Wolfe's calm recital of the circumstances. Wolfe's ethical attitude, which may be among the matters disclaimed in the author's note, is enmeshed with the more obvious implications of the episodes. Wolfe, in a sense, is one more Englishman to import an insular upper class code to unfamiliar and largely uncongenial surroundings.

Wolfe is represented to be confiding the various incidents and impressions and people of his stay in South Africa from his deathbed to his great friend William Plomer. It is not a new form of narration, but it is one which has been much less overworked than the straight, unrelieved order of chronological biography. The method serves to throw into high light and to facilitate the selection of the salient features of the story. Thus the reader is spared the meticulous assemblage of details which point merely toward a somewhat dubious verisimilitude.

The young enthusiasts conclude: That Africa is not the white man's country; that miscegenation is the only way for Africa to be secured to the Africans; that it is inevitable, right and proper; that if it can be shown to be so, we shall have laid true foundations for the future colored world. Wolfe's subscribing to the theory is immediately challenged by the affair of Mabel and Zachary, which earns his unqualified disapprobation. Friston's idealism is complicated by his love for the girl, which leaves him only the frightful drug for resolving his conflict.

The "yes" of an older time has been revalued. In a sense, the "post-war" Wolfe and his teammates are lifting their voices with a nervous hoarseness and entering into their renewed negotiations with life on a basis of imperfect conviction and mental reservation. Perhaps it is this which brings about their defeat. At all events, it is a gallant effort.

The sensitive, impressionistic approach of Mr. Plomer has its defects. At times his material is treated with so subdued a touch that it almost becomes crepuscular. The major implications of his abstract values are, if not offset, at least reduced to something perilously near incongruity by the minor tones of the crises. At crucial periods in the narrative Mr. Plomer eludes the issue in an unnecessarily cryptic obfuscation. The disappearance of Friston is an instance. "Turbott Wolfe" is a thoughtful book, relieved occasionally by the sparkle of a genuine wit, and it is a courageous grappling with all but intangible manifestations of fugitive modes of being. On the whole, however, it slightly deceives anticipation.

MURDER OR SUICIDE?

THE VIADUCT MURDER. By Ronald A. Knox. 222 pp. New York: Simon & Schuster. $2.

IN "The Viaduct Murder" Ronald Knox has worked out a detective story plot that is seldom excelled except, perhaps, in its ending. The identity of the murderer is skillfully hidden until the last chapter; but when the true culprit is finally revealed one has a slight sense of having been cheated. Mr. Knox violates the unwritten law of detective story writing when he allows the police to incriminate the right man. But, of course, Mr. Knox is right. All through the book he warned us; and we, like the golfer-detectives in the story, paid more attention to clues than to motives. We deserved to be taken in.

The plot is worked out with remarkable ingenuity. Was it murder or suicide? The Coroner's jury brought in a verdict of suicide while of unsound mind. Some of Brotherhood's acquaintances at the golf club suspected murder. No one could tell what the police thought of the case. The murderer might be hiding in the clubhouse; for all they knew he might even be one of the group of golfers who were trying to solve the mystery. Was the body with its mutilated head really that of Brotherhood, or was he still alive, having, under their very eyes, led a double existence, shooting par golf over the week-ends and the rest of the time

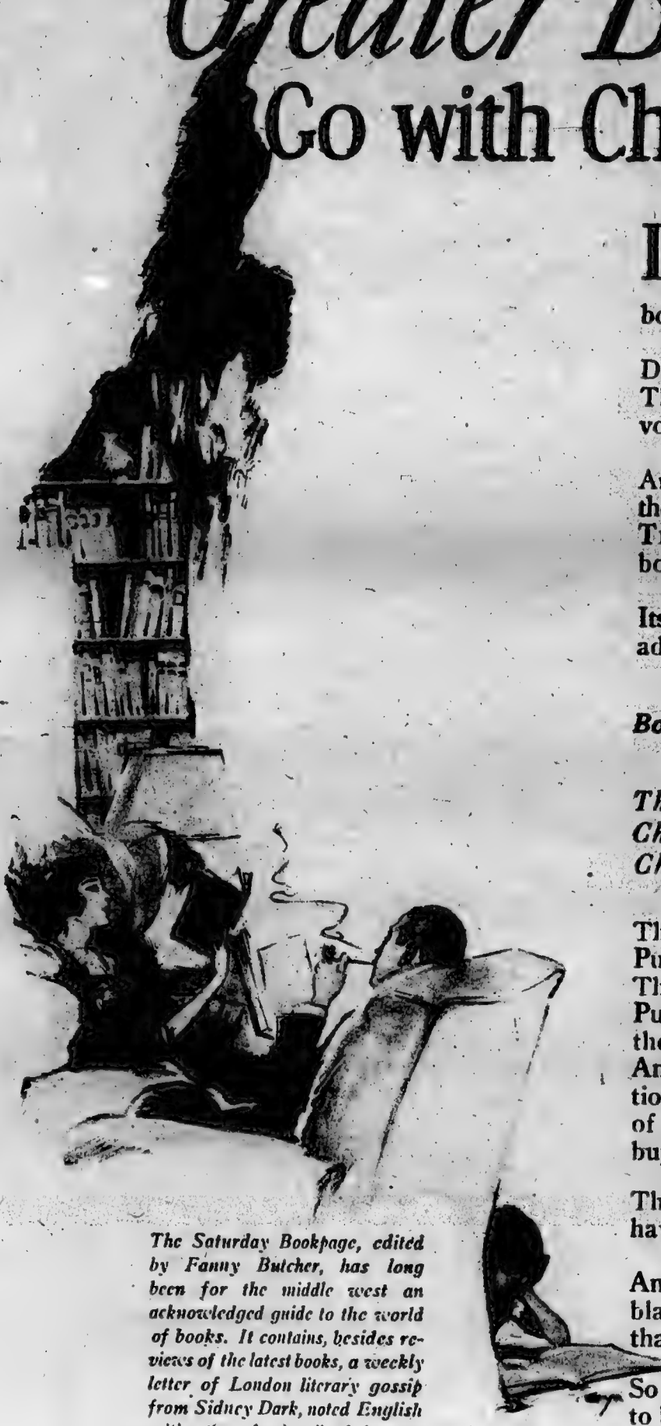
Greater Book Sales Go with Chicago Tribune Gain



IT was Carl Sandburg who labeled Chicago, "hog-butcher for the world . . . and player with railroads." And now Chicago has become one of the world's great book marts.

During the last six months of 1925 the sale of books in The Chicago Territory jumped from 15 to 20 per cent in volume over a corresponding period for 1924.

And significantly—of the three newspapers which carry the bulk of book advertising in The Chicago Territory, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE alone registered a huge gain in book advertising lineage for 1925.

Its nearest competitors suffered distinct losses in book advertising lineage. The figures follow:

Book Advertising in Three Chicago Newspapers for 1925

	GAIN	LOSS
The Chicago Tribune	35,693 Lines	.....
Chicago Daily News	.....	7,408 Lines
Chicago Evening Post	.....	16,268 Lines

These figures are indicative of several things. First: Publishers are realizing more and more the importance of The Chicago Territory from their viewpoint. Second: Publishers are aware that THE TRIBUNE is read by most of the people in this territory who do habitually buy books. And third: Publishers are aware that THE TRIBUNE circulation in this territory gives them, in addition, a great mass of people who are occasional book buyers, but who will buy more books if properly solicited.

There are 243 towns in The Chicago Territory which have a total of 547 worthwhile and aggressive booksellers.

And THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE is the only newspaper which blankets this territory with a daily circulation of more than 700,000!

So here, then, is your market, as potentially great as any to be found on this continent; and here, in the columns of this great newspaper, is an unrivaled medium for getting results from this market!

A TRIBUNE representative who specializes in book publishers' advertising will be glad to call at your request.

The Saturday Bookpage, edited by Fanny Butcher, has long been for the middle west an acknowledged guide to the world of books. It contains, besides reviews of the latest books, a weekly letter of London literary gossip from Sidney Dark, noted English critic; "confessions" of famous authors; a list of the week's best sellers—and the advertising of leading American publishers.

There is a good deal of useful matter and sensible advice in this close-packed volume.

The New York Times:
Keen, practical, concise, suggestive, inspirational.

The Chicago Evening Post:
The reader cannot fail to gain a clear and valuable idea of a high and lasting standard for criticism of advertising. Pointed and full of "punch."

The Boston Globe:
Surely something new, and tremendously interesting.

The Newark Evening News:
An interesting and readable book, backed by a fullness of knowledge that should be of value to copywriters.

The New York Journal of Commerce:
One of the few books to be recommended just as highly to the practicing publicist as to the literary curious.

The Editor and Publisher:
Out of the ordinary....Intensely practical....Both in style and subject-matter it shows the author at his best.

National Advertisers' New Bulletin:
A big contribution to both business and literature.

The Advertising World (British):
Clever....Readable....Interesting....Informative.

System (British):
A fascinating study of literature and advertisement copy writing. This book is at once a mine of literary information and a certain stimulus to all writers of copy.

The Inland Printer:
A readable book on advertising in interesting story form.

The Retail Review:
Carefully planned....An exhaustive work....Vast in scope....Should raise the standards of advertising.

The Bellman:
A stimulating book....The author has broken new ground.

tales she has collected with no little literary skill. A personal touch and a local background add interest and realism to the approach to each narrative and she makes the teller of each one seem a very real person, the pathos of whose lingering from the twilight in which he belongs into the full light of midday is softened by the simple dignity with which she clothes him. It is possible that Miss Equier has more or less padded out and dressed up the tales these old Indians have told her—she has too much literary skill not to have been thus tempted—while keeping them true in outline and spirit. The collection will be appreciated by all who are interested in the story of the American Indian, while the ordinary reader will find its nine tales as fascinating as any book of short stories.

FUTURE OF MEDICINE

PYGMALION; or, the Doctor of the Future. By E. M. Wilson. 61 pp. Today and Tomorrow Series. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.

THE slender little volumes of the Today and Tomorrow Series are always more or less upsetting to accepted ideas. Those who write them have no feeling that any human practice or belief should be sacrosanct. Whatever knowledge, wisdom, power, purpose man has developed he should be ready to sacrifice whenever new knowledge points the way to some new development. The authors of the score or more of volumes that have preceded "Pygmalion" have, therefore, turned their searchlights upon most of the phases of human life, and by the illumination of the new knowledge already attained have shown such a deplorable future development, each of his own specialty, as makes it seem to be in process of revolution. Dr. Wilson's vision of the doctor of the future, while it is fashioned out of the stuff that is fast becoming commonplace to the adepts of medical research, is likely to make the ordinary person gasp with surprise. The basis of it all is what he calls a "very simple, new, medical idea," the idea that a symptom is not necessarily a sign of disease. He elaborates this a little more when he explains that "symptoms are signs not of reaction to disease, but of altered reaction to life, occasioned by the presence of disease." Toward the end of the book, after glancing at the origins of symptoms, he says that "this brief survey makes it clear that they are expressions of inadequate reaction to life." Searching for the origins of these symptoms and for the means of healing whatever may be their cause, the doctor of the future will, he thinks, devote more attention than does the doctor of today to the sensory organs—the eye, the ear, the skin, the nose, &c.—and will know how, when any of these organs has become irritable, to use desensitization as a therapeutic measure, while his "most splendid field of effort and enterprise" he will find in man's power of self-stimulation by thought. "There is nothing," says Dr. Wilson, "which man has ever thought or felt that can not be used for his preservation or his healing—and which, therefore, does not concern his physician."

SYMPOSIUM ON RELIGION

MY RELIGION. By Arnold Bennett, Hugh Walpole, Rebecca West, J. D. Beresford, Israel Zangwill, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, E. Phillips Oppenheim, Compton Mackenzie, H. De Vere Stacpoole, Henry Arthur Jones, the Bishop of London. 187 pp. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

SOMEBODY had a brilliant and fruitful idea when he conceived this little book, wherein a group of famous English authors discuss their religion. Its most outstanding feature is the sincerity and frankness with which one dives down into his soul, searches for the absolute truth concerning his attitude toward all that is meant by the word "religion" and puts it into simple, concise words. Five or six pages is the measure of most of the articles. Every one of these people has thought deeply on this subject, most of them have struggled mightily to evolve out of life and thought a satisfactory belief, and each one of them tells about it with such frankness

PIG IRON

By CHARLES G. NORRIS, author of "Salt", "Brass," "Bread", etc.

SINCLAIR LEWIS writes

"The book (Pig Iron) has power, it has reality, the characters live, and in a most remarkable manner one sees the organic growth not only of the whole city but of all the land during these crucial years which have changed America from a provincial land to a world nation. There is great pathos in it all, and a blessed freedom which will help to build up a veritable and enduring American Tradition. Many congratulations. 'Pig Iron' is your finest."

H. L. MENCKEN writes

"I have read it with immense interest, and enjoyed it unflaggingly. . . . His manner is leisurely, but painstaking and effective. There is nothing of the improvisateur about him. He never employs tricks of writing to conceal gaps in his material. What he sets forth he knows, and has given thought to. His books have solid substance in them, and a fine dignity." —American Mercury, April.

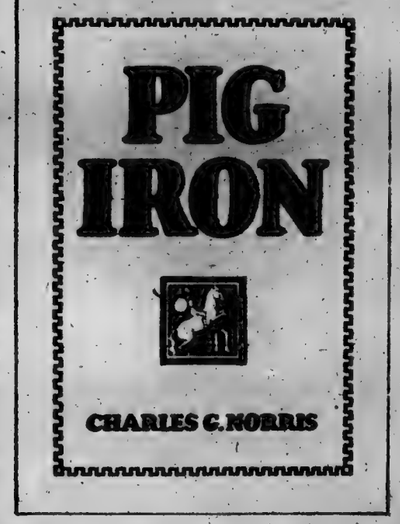
The Denver Rocky Mtn. News:
"It is strong and it is sympathetic. It is intensely interesting and it comes mighty near to being life itself."

The Boston Herald:
"His Sam Smith is a type that we all know, but a type never understood so well as after reading 'Pig Iron' from cover to cover."

The New York Times:
"It is probing, penetrating and warm with human feeling . . . an indelible picture of American life and character, richly portrayed."

The Pittsburgh Press:
"The most distinguished novel of the year is 'Pig Iron' . . . strong, sound and virile."

The Richmond, Va., Item:
"Another great stride in the author's progress. . . . It is being read everywhere."



This novel has been received in practically every city of consequence from Portland, Me., to Honolulu. Its readers everywhere agree that it is not only "intensely interesting" but an exceptionally fine picture of American life of more than momentary interest. Their views are summed up in the New York Herald-Tribune in which life when most men begin to settle into a taste of mental fixity he had no hesitation in throwing into the discard when he stood looking down the political vista at last, wondering how far he could stray along its alluring paths. Yet he would not lean on the advice of politicians, whom he distrusted with an inborn suspicion of their kind. To disinterested newspaper men he turned often for guidance and help. One of them was Mr. Kerney.

New Study of Wilson

The main outlines of Wilson's speaking campaign for the governorship are fairly well known, but Mr. Kerney adds many touches of the unfamiliar. For instance, he says that Wilson, after each night's meeting, insisted on returning at once to his own home or going to New York or Philadelphia, preferring not to be under social obligations to any one. Otherwise he accepted the guidance of James R. Nugent, assistant boss to Smith, in regard to physical arrangements for the campaign, but his liberal speeches were of his own coinage. The bosses believed that his platform rhapsodies were intended only for the moment and that he would submit meekly to rein at the hitching post after his election.

They saved him from considerable embarrassment, as bosses often do for their candidates. Thus Wilson, who "did not believe in prohibition," was about to be importuned by a clergyman to announce his position on that subject at a public meeting when Nugent gave the signal to a brass band to emit a deafening crash and hustled the candidate from the platform just in time.

Wilson began his governorship in deep ignorance of the details of its duties. On the morning after his inauguration, arriving at the State House early, he asked a reporter who happened to be there to give him "a few pointers," confessing that he did not even know how to go about appointing his secretary. This was the man who later was to direct with dictatorial methods the waging of a world war by 5,000,000 men. He "despised the making of appointments" and depended upon Kerney, Tumulty and some others at first to pick men for State offices. The new Governor knew but few of these men with any degree of certainty and one day he asked impatiently when one of them had called on him: "What have we been doing for — that he has been in here thanking me so profusely?"

Yet he carried out with almost savage determination his break with the State bosses and showed no lack of either finesse or ardor in his legislative fight for public utility laws, employers' liability and liberal election regulation. The author contributes an interesting chapter when he traces the inspiration for much of the Wilson reform program in New Jersey to Tumulty, George L. Record, a Republican who fought corporations, Martin F. Devlin and W. W. St. John, all of that State; William S. U'Ren, an Oregon single taxer, who was also active in the East, and Senator Bourne of Oregon, a Republican radical who afterward returned to the regular fold.

At this stage of his career and later, Mr. Kerney says, the first Mrs. Wilson, the former Ellen Axson, was of great help to her husband in his decisions. He writes:

> The first Mrs. Wilson was a very considerable politician, providing stimulation and inspiration for the battles. Her wise counsel and steadying influence were great factors in Wilson's early political successes. Wilson was always a lonely figure, little inclined to the companionship of men, and he liked the society of the loving and admiring women of his family.

Mr. Kerney's story of Wilson's term in the governorship will be placed side by side with Tumulty's by future historians for reference. His version is not so much a relation as a sweeping characterization, reaching into causes as well as effects, into the development of the complex Wilson personality, as well as the development of issues. Although there is a vein of sympathy for Wilson in the book, it is wholly devoid of the eulogy which overshadows the interesting and undoubtedly valuable reminiscences of the buoyant and optimistic Tumulty, who, it seems, could not write of Wilson with a sense of detachment even if he would.

From this work it would appear that House and Tumulty have good reason to believe that their advice did much to shape many of the decisions of Wilson, as their respective books have indicated with a broad assurance that has caused some readers to doubt. Mr. Kerney says that Tumulty "made and blocked more Cabinet appointments than any other man of his time" and that House "superseded Cabinet officers and ambassadors," possessing the confidence of Wilson to a greater extent than any one else.

The book rises to the intensity of drama in its last chapter, which deals with two talks held with the almost prostrate Wilson in his Washington home a short time before his death. Wilson expressed the deep conviction that the liberals of the world were looking to him for leadership and gave some consideration to a project to be a candidate for the Senate from New Jersey, although he intimated that only in a new term in the presidency could he assert such leadership effectively. His contempt for the Senate was great, and he said to Kerney with a flaming up as in the days of his power:

> Outside of the United States the Senate does not amount to a damn. And inside the United States the Senate is mostly despised; they haven't had a thought down there in fifty years.

Wilson was angry at the French over what they were doing in the Ruhr and petulantly told his editor friend: "I would like to see Germany clean up France, and I would like to meet Jusserand and tell him that to his face." His visitor knew that this was an echo of a deep disappointment in the past.

A summary of Mr. Kerney's estimate of Wilson's character is that the war President was a lonely man, essentially a dreamer of large dreams, who imperiously "found it difficult to tolerate" other men, possessing supreme self-confidence, combined with traits that seriously obstructed the realization of his visions. "He was bent on saving the whole world, and at once." His type, one gathers from the author's pages, was that of the party dictator rather than the party leader. Mr. Kerney doubts if any man had his complete confidence, for that "was not the Wilson way," and therefore no man saw the whole of him.

Church and State Still Wrestling

pertaining thereto; it is another thing to acknowledge the sovereign Pontiff not as a tenant of those properties, but as their owner in the sovereign sense. To the Vatican the guarantees are as illogical as would be an act by Congress to extend to King George the free use of Windsor Castle. Hence we have had the famous suggestion that one square centimeter of territory ceded to the Pope would settle the quarrel. True, the square centimeter has an elastic quality, expanding into gardens and parks and even a corridor to the Mediterranean with a papal seaport, but, whatever the size of an ecclesiastical centimeter, the idea is there.

M. Carrère adds that the Roman question no longer divides Italy. In the same salon, you now meet "blacks" and "whites." But it is clear that the Pope and Mussolini do not mean the same thing by Rome. To Mussolini, the Church is Italian, the vehicle of Italy's imperialism throughout the world, the glory of Italy, to be praised and patronized and subsidized. To the Pope, all such favors are an offense. It is not for the civil power to institute proceedings against Jews, Methodists and Freemasons, to order the observance of Easter, and to appropriate funds for the obsequies of a late Pope's sister. In her spiritual mission the Church has asked for no such outside assistance.

Peter, therefore, still confronts Cæsar, and with ever-increasing firmness. Indeed, the one newspaper which is free to be published, whatever it says, is the Osservatore Romano, which speaks for the Vatican. And Cardinal Gasparri, who, as an ecclesiastic, is anti-Fascist, continues Secretary of State with the outspoken support of the Pope himself. In this keen yet quiet struggle M. Carrère, by implication, suggests that Peter must win. The reason is not that Peter has more power than Cæsar, but that Peter has more patience. Mussolini and Fascisms are incidents. Rome is eternal. And everything comes to a Papacy that can afford to wait.

The gayest, the most exhilarating, the most scintillating book that has been published in many seasons—the talk of the book world

IT BEGINS THIS WAY—

March 3rd—This morning had a vastly unpleasant interview with my Father. Last night, Mr. Ancaster, who is the indiscreetest young man alive, was seized suddenly while riding home along the shore with the desire to say good night to me.

He climbed the wall, the postern gate being locked at that late hour, and had the Boldness to attempt to climb the ivy below my window; while but half way up the Poor Impudent young man fell. (If he hadn't Lord knows what would have happened for I am terribly catched by the Handsome Wretch.) As ill luck would have it Papa and Ned, who were conversing in the library, looked out at that moment and saw him lying Prostrate on the ground!

No need to describe the scene that followed. My father it seems thinks me guilty of Indiscretion and Immodesty, though why I don't know, for I was sound asleep the whole time and never heard so much as an Oath (and I dare swear there were plenty flying around!) My father said some mighty unkind things to me this morning and I wept loudly for more than Half an Hour.

Poor Mr. A. from all accounts is a Scoundrel, a Libertine and a Blackguard, and I have been forbidden ever to see, speak or indeed think of him again. Well, we shall see.

I own I cannot imagine how it will all end. Pray Heaven there will not be a Rencontre between either of my Indignant male relatives and my unlucky admirer. Twould make a Scandal in the country we should never hear the end of.

THE DIARY OF A YOUNG LADY OF FASHION IN THE YEAR 1764-1765

By CLEONE KNOX

Edited by her Kinsman Alexander Blacker Kerr

DIP INTO IT ANYWHERE—

May 22nd—London. "Carrots and Turnips Ho!" This cry yelled in a Hoarse voice wakes me every morning. My father complains of the noise of London and indeed 'tis something Prodigious.

The Watchmen are calling out the time and weather all night long, and when they have stopped the venders of oranges, brooms, Matches, Rat Traps, Lord knows what else begin. For my part I find it very enlivening, but I am not surprised that the town ladies are as thin as May-poles.

July 7th—Here I am locked up in my chamber, my eyes so swollen with crying that I can scarcely see out of them. Misfortune seems to be overwhelming me.

Early this morning I received a distracted letter from poor Delia D'Arcy bidding me an Eternal Farewell. She has confessed all and her parents are dispatching her away poste haste to an Aunt, Lady Montgomery, in the Wilds of Devonshire to repent at leisure. Then to add to my misery that fool Mr. Sutcliff, took it into his Head to wait on my father and ask for my Hand. My father summoned me into the parlour when he had left, and informed me of his offer, adding that he hoped I would accept it; as Mr. Sutcliff was an "excellent young man" and the owner of good property in Sussex.

I regret to say that I flew into a Pretty Passion at this, declaring that I would as soon wed a Mute as that long-visaged, melancholy Idiot and that I wished to Heaven my father would leave me in Peace.

A complete story, as romantic, entrancing, satisfying, as any novel you have read—

This diary records the love story of a young lady of immense charm and frankness, and incidentally pictures inimitably the spacious days of the eighteenth century. The observant and witty Cleone was "catched" by the dark eyes of a certain Mr. A, and her father's disapproval led him to take her on a grand tour of England and Europe to make her forget her impecunious suitor. To London the party progressed, to Paris (of the old regime), to Switzerland (where she met Voltaire), and finally to Venice where the lover turned up with exciting results.

In his foreword, the Editor says: "Miss Cleone Knox, the writer of this journal and an ancestress of my mother's, was born on May 12th, 1744, at Castle Kearney, Co. Down, Ireland. Her diary, written in a fine Italian hand, in four leather-bound notebooks, was first shown to me by one of her direct descendants in the summer of 1904. I read it with interest, but it was only this year that I decided to edit it and offer it to the public."

Why not live with more Trees?

Before the door of The Little Church Around the Corner, one of the most romantic spots in the world, there are four [only two show in the picture] five-foot spruces purchased from THE LIVING TREE GUILD.

THE LIVING TREE GUILD
303 Fifth Ave., New York

There are many appeals for tree planting. But what most people would like to know is where can they get good, dependable trees, with full instructions for their use, and at a reasonable price. The purpose of this announcement is to make available trees for everyone to plant. Here is a practical and fascinating way for you to respond to the call of the President's Proclamation. Let the Government's parcel post bring you trees—inspected by the Living Tree Guild and fully guaranteed.

AMERICAN FOREST WEEK, APRIL 18-24

From a Proclamation by the President of the United States

IN again proclaiming American Forest Week it is fitting that, while giving full weight to the evils resulting from impoverished forests and idle land, I should lay stress upon the outward spread of forestry in industrial practice and land usage. Too long have we as a nation consumed our forest wealth without adequate provision for its wise utilization and renewal. But a gratifying change is taking place in the attitude of our industries, our landowners and the American people toward our forests.

The wise use of land is one of the main foundations of sound national economy. It is the cornerstone of national thrift. The waste or misuse of natural resources cuts away the groundwork on which national prosperity is built. If we are to flourish, as a people and as individuals, we must neither wastefully hoard nor wastefully exploit, but skillfully employ and renew the resources that nature has entrusted to us. America's forest problem essentially is a problem involving the wise use of land.

Now, therefore, I, Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate the week of April 18-24, inclusive, as American Forest Week; and I recommend to the Governors of the various States that they also designate the week of April 18-24 as American Forest Week and observe Arbor Day within that week whenever practicable and not in conflict with law or accepted custom. And I urge public officials, public and business organizations, industrial leaders, landowners, editors, educators, clergymen and all patriotic citizens to unite in the common task of forest conservation and renewal.

The action of the Canadian Government in likewise proclaiming the week of April 18-24, inclusive, as a period when the utmost stress shall be laid upon the problem of forest conservation and renewal, thus unifying the respective efforts of Canada and the United States, is an added reason why our citizens should give careful thought to a matter so important to both countries. . . .

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this third day of March, in the year of Our Lord, One Thousand Nine Hundred and Twenty-six, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and fiftieth.

By the President:
FRANK B. KELLOGG, Secretary of State.

NORWAY SPRUCES

There is no substitute in our lives for a tree or a growing plant. The more the city traffic rumbles by our window, the more the automobiles crowd our highways, the greater becomes the need for the peace, the love, the beauty of Nature. Whether it is a miniature evergreen forest in a window box; or spruces grouped at the front door; or many little trees in a garden—their message is always happiness and relaxation.

It is true that our forests have been sadly cut without being replanted. But even if they have retreated from before our homes, we cannot—should not—live totally without the companionship of some trees. They are among the best friends that we have. This unusual offer of the Living Tree Guild is to give you a real chance for promoting that friendship. Plant these little trees and watch them grow—they will grow surprisingly fast. Each year they will become more valuable, giving you no bother at all, but much joy.

The Norway Spruce is famous for being hardy—when it is favorably planted it almost takes care of itself. Also it develops a fine, beautiful shape. Cultivated spruces are valuable. There is not an investment that increases faster year by year than a splendid spruce tree. Many persons who planted seedlings a few years ago find that they now have an asset of great value, one that can be made to yield big profits.

The trees offered here are seedlings grown for the purpose of transplanting. This stock is inspected by the Forestry Departments of various States. Also the Pennsylvania Railroad, which has a very extensive forestry department, organized on the most up-to-date lines, has bought many thousands of trees from this source.

Here are nursery-grown 2 to 3 years seedlings with finely developed roots, at this age about 6 to 8 inches high. This is the size that is by far the best to transplant and transport. It is very simple to use these trees. Full instructions will be found in each shipment, together with suggestions for their use. Delivered by parcel post in specially constructed cartons; roots wrapped in damp moss that will keep them alive for days.

Every Tree GUARANTEED to Live!

The trees which you will receive under this offer are fully guaranteed to be successful. If you will take reasonable care in the planting, and any trees should fail to grow, they will be replaced promptly without cost upon application within three months.

Please send according to your special plan, 12 Norway Spruce Trees—guaranteed—packed in damp moss in a specially constructed carton, these trees being 2 to 3 years old, nursery-grown seedlings. I will pay the postman who delivers them $2.95 plus a few cents postage. If any fail to grow it is understood you will replace them without cost upon application within three months.

MR. BALDWIN STEADIES ENGLAND

Premier Has Calmed the Fears of His Countrymen and Restored the Nation's Confidence—A Humdrum Business Man, With a Rich Mind, Mellowed by His Attachment to the Soil

By CLAIR PRICE

LONDON.

BRITAIN'S coal subsidy is due to expire at midnight of April 30, but the word coal, at the present writing, seems to have lost its menace. Coal is still an acutely controversial subject, but one of its most interesting aspects is the change in the country's attitude toward it. The mere passage of time has done much toward restoring calm to a country that found itself poised on the brink of something like a general strike last Summer, and what time has not accomplished the Prime Minister, Stanley Baldwin, has.

In the interest it now arouses in the average English mind, coal has sunk to an issue of secondary importance, although, as everybody knows, it is the backbone of the country and the lines of the organization that is to administer it in the future are still under debate. It is evidence of the country's improving steadiness that the future of the coal industry is now being worked out in an atmosphere free from the jangling nerves of the blackest days of last Summer. There can be no doubt that, aside from the mere passage of time, it is the Prime Minister himself who has done the steadying.

That mine-owners should look with confidence to the leader of the political party to which the majority of them happen to belong is perhaps not remarkable. But that the miners themselves, who are not, as a rule, Tories, and that their Secretary, who is a Communist, should view a Tory Prime Minister with confidence, is too Victorian to be easily credited.

A Sign of Confidence

"Mr. Baldwin treats me better than many of my own followers do," the miners' Secretary said from a public platform the other day. It is even more remarkable that the average Englishman, whose only rôle in the coal controversy is the obscure rôle of citizen and consumer, should regard also with confidence a political unknown, whom he was accustomed only a couple of years ago to esteem a Simple Simon who had somehow contrived to corner all the luck in the world.

This is approximately what has happened in England. The country found itself on the verge of a disaster that would have shaken it to its depths a few months ago—a disaster that was bought off literally on the last afternoon by the unprecedented and hurriedly extemporized subsidy given to the owners by this same Prime Minister. In the mind of the average Englishman, coal then spelled potential calamity; to the average Englishman (and, what is rather more to the point, to the owners and to the miners themselves), coal spells confidence this Spring. And confidence, it might well be added, spells Baldwin.

We are too close to Mr. Baldwin today to get a full-length view of him. A generation or two from now the historian will see him in a larger perspective. Better than we do, our grandchildren will know how, in the time of its need, its really dire need, England threw up out of its countryside this peculiarly English business man to restore that equilibrium the world has learned to expect from England.

It is not only a matter of the coal controversy. Coal is merely its latest chapter: It took a Lloyd George to inject new life into a tired country at grips with a seemingly unbeatable enemy; but a veil may be drawn over the story of what Welsh "wizardry" did to an England which, after the war, was falling to pieces out of sheer exhaustion and disillusionment. The country into whose Premiership Mr. Baldwin was pitchforked in the Spring of 1923 was one that had all but lost its grip.

The fact that reassurance is at last emerging from the restless chaos of those years immediately after the war, is due in some degree to Ramsay MacDonald, who kept his head when everybody in the trades unions seemed to be losing their heads, and, in a larger degree, to Stanley Baldwin, who has kept his head so well that the country at large, whatever its political views may happen to be, has finally recognized in him an example of traditional English poise.

See him in the House of Commons. Toward the end of a big debate, when the House is in its most unruly humor, he rises, tucks his thumbs into his waistcoat arm-holes and begins talking with the air of a man who has just come in from a walk in the fields where he has thought the matter out and come to such-and-such a conclusion. He sits down presently in a soothed and contented House, and so redolent is he of fresh air and open fields that you find yourself noting with a little quirk of surprise that he is not chewing a straw.

Or see him in the smoke-room at the House, sprawled over the end of one of the benches away from the crowd sucking his pipe, speaking, when he does speak, in monosyllables, but listening most of the time to two or three unknowns discussing the virtues of their political enemies and the vices of their political friends. He is the kind of man for whom the House, irrespective of politics, has an instant liking: a man utterly devoid of pretense, who talks to the House exactly as he would talk to a Duke or to a farmhand; a humdrum, humorous Englishman, who knows that Dukes, farmhands and members of the House are all made of much the same stuff as he is, neither better nor worse.

He never loses the traditional self-control of the best type of Englishman, and if he is ever flurried it is only when he has to leave the House through a lane of staring strangers. Then his sallow complexion reddens to the tips of his ears at the attention he attracts. He is the type that has made England a necessity to the rest of the world; a country in which men are still reasonably free, in which reasonably free speech is a fact and not a fiction, in which men can differ and still be friends.

Likened to Krupp

Possibly it is a little unfair to describe him as a business man, for the mention of a business man in politics is usually apt to be greeted with suppressed groans. There were a few of them in politics, even in England, during the war. It was usually the war that was blamed for the spectacles they cut—or, if it was not the war, then it was something else. But Mr. Baldwin is a peculiarly English type of business man, an English Krupp, with a farm in Worcestershire; a paternalist who knows his farmhands by name and who, if his great steel works at Swansea have grown to such proportions that it is no longer possible for any one man to know all those hands by name, still keeps his own hands on the payroll long after the productive days are ended and goes down into his own pocket to feed the rest of his hands when a strike has thrown them out of work.

He is a Victorian, of a breed supposed to have died out; a country squire who would rarely be seen in London if what he believed to be his duty to his country had not thrust him into politics.

Hear him on the subject of the Romans in his now famous Presidential address to the Classical Association last January:

"To me the outstanding and peculiar strength of the Roman character lies in the words 'pietas' and 'gravitas.' These were the foundations of a patriotism which alone could carry the burden of empire; a patriotism innate, a motive force of incalculable power, yet something at its best so holy that it was never paraded, sought no reward, was taken for granted, and had no single word to express it. * * * The highest gifts devoted to public service were expected; to dedicate and employ them for the sake of the republic was merely your duty. Aristides would not have been called the Just in Rome, and in whose country in the ancient world but Rome would Fabricius have refused all rewards, or Cincinnatus have returned to his farm? Again, a character founded on pietas and gravitas had its roots (Continued on Page 22)

THE GOLD RUSH TOWN GETS SOFT

Chance for a Mining Camp to Be Unruly Is Slim in These Orderly Days

By OWEN P. WHITE

KIPLING was all wrong. When the great Englishman sat beside a campfire on the Arabian desert, stuck his hand "up to the wrist" in a savory cinnamon stew," gazed at the stars above and murmured:

"Four things greater than all things are,
Women and Horses and Power and War,

he was, as I have remarked, all wrong.

If Kipling was talking about the things for which men will suffer the most pain, make the greatest sacrifices, work the hardest and fight the most fiercely, he omitted to mention the greatest lure of all. More men have borne hunger and thirst for the sake of gold than, perhaps, for all other causes combined. They are still doing it today, and, unless some smart person comes along and invents a handy and simple synthetic process for the manufacture of this most sought after of all metals, they will continue to do it in the future.

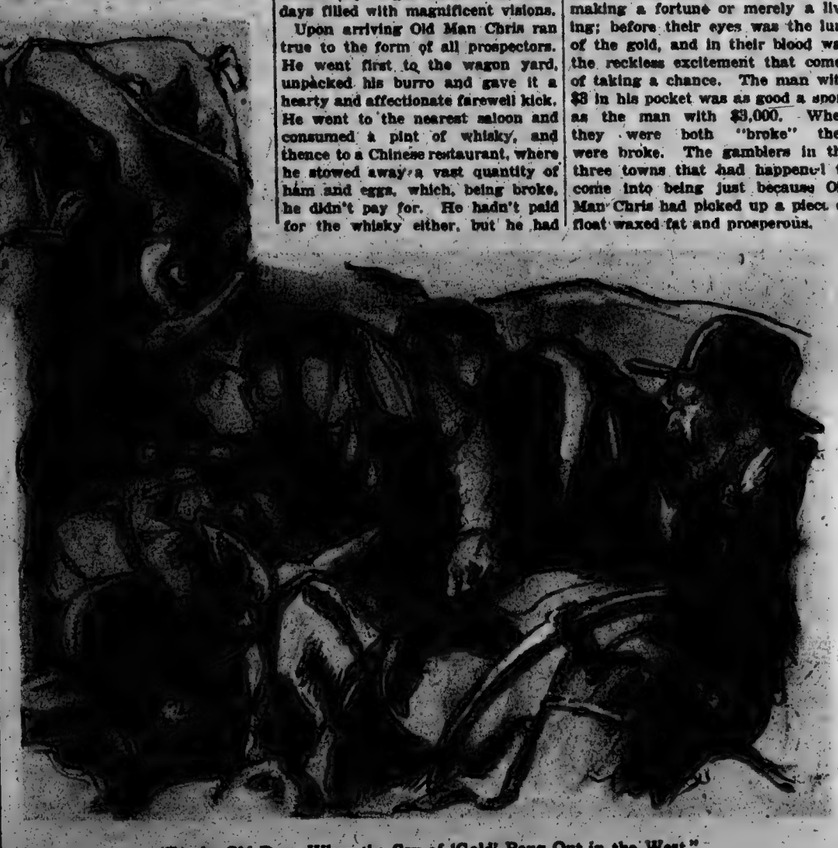
Out in Nevada today, on the edge of Death Valley, where the sun is so hot that it blisters the paint off the shovers and there is no shade save that of the greasewood, and up in Ontario, where the frost is so fierce that it puts chilblains all up and down the legs of even the most hardy, men are fighting and swearing and struggling to outdo and outstrip one another in a great race for the yellow prize.

History is repeating itself in the West. Neither the blighting heat of the desert nor the bitter cold of the Arctic night, and neither the lack of water in one place nor the oversupply of ice in another seems to make any difference. Once again, so the story goes that comes singing over the wire from the erstwhile stamping ground of Dan McGrew, and once again, so reads the tale that emanates from the neighborhood of the late unpleasantness between J. Johnson and J. Jeffries, men with picks and shovels, pans and spoons, ore hammers and magnifying glasses, bar-room fixtures and bungstarters, roulette wheels and faro boxes, are swarming into the land and bringing back the scenes of years ago.

But those scenes cannot be exactly the same. Motorization, aviation, education and legislation have made a difference. In the old days when the cry of "Gold!" rang out in the West, men from nearby towns and camps flocked to the new diggings on foot, on burros and on horseback. They were the hardened, grizzled veterans of the hills. They were men who could pound a drill or rock a cradle all day and drink whisky and buck the tiger all night. They were as tireless in seeking dissipation as they were in looking for pay dirt, and out of their activities in both directions there came into being a picturesque kind of life which for gaudiness of color has never been equaled.

When Kipling spoke of the lure of things he did so with the certainty of a shave and a clean shirt for the morrow. But when Old Man Chris started the boom which built up three towns in the West he did it with a month's growth of whiskers on his face, his clothes torn to tatters, his lips parched and bleeding and his belt drawn up to the last notch.

Old Man Chris, having been grubstaked by a lucky gambler, set out to look for gold. He turned his face to the West and slapped his loaded burro across its eastern exposure with a pick handle, and away he went. He was a typical prospector. For weeks he wandered over the mountains.



"In the Old Days When the Cry of 'Gold' Rang Out in the West."

His grub ran low, his boot soles wore out, he almost died of thirst a dozen times, and thrice he lost his burro, but his faith never diminished. The lure of gold drove him on, and one day he found his desire. He cracked open a piece of "float," looked at it through his glass and there it was.

Trailing the "Float"

It was all just that simple. Chris had always known he would find gold, and now he had found it.

But where? He had found it in a piece of "float," and all that meant was that somewhere in those mountains, maybe one mile and maybe twenty miles away, there must be an outcropping from a vein or a ledge from which this wayward piece of rock had detached itself. To find this outcropping or this ledge was now the thing that had to be done. A piano tuner who had trailed a similar piece of float to its lair had located the great Comstock lode; a carpenter who had cracked open a rock had created Cripple Creek, and so Old Man Chris thought he had a chance.

He kept going; he no longer picked up casual stones. Instead, with eyes that had wrinkles at their sides from much and constant peering, he scanned the mountain slopes for something larger than the precious relic he carried in his pocket. And at last he found it.

It was an outcropping. He broke off many pieces of it; they all showed free gold. He went to work with pick and shovel. For one man it was a terrible task, but Old Man Chris stayed with it. He uncovered a vein. He was soon to be a millionaire! He staked out his claim and went back to town. It took him several days to get there. They were days filled with magnificent visions.

Upon arriving Old Man Chris ran true to the form of all prospectors. He went first to the wagon yard, unpacked his burro and gave it a hearty and affectionate farewell kick. He went to the nearest saloon and consumed a pint of whisky, and thence to a Chinese restaurant, where he stowed away a vast quantity of ham and eggs, which, being broke, he didn't pay for. He hadn't paid for the whisky either, but he had shown his samples to the bartender; had even left a couple of rich ones with him and after his meal, when he went back to the saloon for his cordial, he became the centre of a group of curious men.

When he left the samples with the bartender he had known that would happen and he was, of course, ready to answer questions. That is, any question but one. Not yet would he tell where the samples came from. Before taking the public into his confidence the old prospector had to see the man who had grubstaked him.

In two weeks he was back again. In the names of his partner and a few friends and relatives he had staked out as many claims as they could do the assessment work on. The rest was open to the public.

It turned into a boom. There was gold in those hills, and it spread over a wide area. The word went out that it was a second Telluride, and here they came, from everywhere, men and women both; and they came for all the purposes for which a mining camp can become famous.

Old Man Chris had actually started something; three towns sprang up where no towns had been before. The nights in the canyons, which until then had never known any harsher sound than the caterwauling of the catamount, were now made hideous by the squeaking of the fiddles in the dance halls, the howls of the intoxicated and the pistol shots of the belligerent.

Some of the claims were barren, some were rich, but it was all the same to the men whether they were making a fortune or merely a living; before their eyes was the lure of the gold, and in their blood was the reckless excitement that comes of taking a chance. The man with $3 in his pocket was as good a sport as the man with $3,000. When they were both "broke" they were broke. The gamblers in the three towns that had happened to come into being just because Old Man Chris had picked up a piece of float waxed fat and prosperous.

The towns grew in size and solidity. The tents of the early arrivals were replaced with frame shanties; the shanties, in time, with brick houses, and along two or three streets in each of the towns substantial business blocks arose. Two of the towns even built handsome theatres, and one went so far as to erect a fine stone church.

And then—well, no, it wasn't the lure of the gold that pinched out. It was the gold itself. The lure never dies, though the gold camps do. These three towns died. One by one, as the returns from their claims diminished, the men who had swung the picks by day and the girls in the dance halls by night packed up and moved away. One by one the saloons and the gambling houses closed their doors; one by one the mercantile establishments sold out their stocks. Finally, when the last vestige of hope was gone, even the local newspaper editors gave up the struggle, junked their presses and moved on to greener pastures.

Having known all three of them when they were at the zenith of their glory I was tempted a short while ago to visit them again. They are almost entirely depopulated. Their store rooms are vacant and their streets are deserted.

The pathetic part of it all is that in each one of these deserted villages are three or four of the old-timers who still have faith.

They will take out their fragments of rock, moisten them at their mouths so as to bring out the gold, and then, as the tourist gloats over the yellow particles with the aid of a pocket glass, the oldtimers will tell him in whispers that it is all a mistake and that this camp ain't dead.

In one of these three towns two people who went in with the first rush are still living. They reside at opposite ends of the same block. One of these persistent hangers-on is affectionately spoken of by those who know her well as "Old Flo." The other is merely Soo Wah. When Flo, young and attractive, arrived in the camp nearly forty years ago she founded a miner's boarding house. On the same day Soo Wah, who had likewise just arrived, opened a Chinese restaurant. The rivalry that was then established has endured up to the present time.

His Dream Faded

But what of Old Man Chris, who picked up the piece of float and started all the trouble? To that question I have no answer. I can only say that he did not become a millionaire. His dream faded away even before his camps went into their decline. The last time I saw Chris he was headed northeast and belaboring a flop-eared burro with a pick handle. He disappeared around a turn in the trail, a boulder shut him off from view and, so far as I know, that was the end. Most of the old-time prospectors went out the same way.

Today, however, in Nevada, where a tent city is said to be springing up and men are reported to be "calling the turn" at the faro layout and playing "seventeen" for a repeater on the roulette wheel as in the days of yore, things are not as they were in the time of Old Man Chris.

The prospector of the present civilized era isn't like his predecessor of the bygone days. Today, often, the man who starts out to look for gold in the hills is a spectacled young man with an M. E. after his name and a bundle of Eastern capital at his back. He does most of his traveling in a flivver, takes a "mozo" along to make camp and do the cooking, and at the end of a heavy day of hard work lulls himself to sleep by cutting in with the radio on the jazz palaces of Manhattan. When he finds something that looks good he steps on the gas, beats it to town, sends a wire to the home office and awaits results. If the home office agrees with the horn-rimmed young man that the thing is worth while a boom is likely to result.

A boom is now on in Nevada and another is getting under way in Ontario. They won't amount to much, however. What a mining boom needs to make it a complete and perfect success is a certain amount of privacy.

Without the advantages of distance from civilization, freedom from restraint and lack of refining influences, what chance, really, has a new town to step out high?

THE FOREST RANGER'S ROLE

the present largely neglected), and he must also see—a duty never neglected—that campfires are securely out. If they are left burning the ranger pursues the offenders, brings them back and gives them a practical lesson in fire extinction, possibly a fine as well.

Frequently, too, the ranger searches for lost persons, and now and then he runs across tragedy. The crime wave has not yet struck the Far West. Despite the romanticists, it never did strike the Far West; but when crimes or accidents occur in such a country they are invariably dramatic.

The facts concerning the Forest Service have been printed thousands of times; the amount of money saved by fire suppression, the amount of money made by legitimate lumbering and other interests, the manner in which the warring interests of the West have been made to behave fairly and generously to one another, and so on. It is safe to say that without the Forest Service the West would have been ravaged utterly and irreparably.

There would be hardly a forest left, the watersheds would have been so denuded that the valleys would be nowadays flood-swept deserts and the open range would have been pocketed by a few sheep and cattle barons. An exaggerated picture? Not in the least. The little man is just beginning to appreciate the Forest Service at its true worth. He had better, for without it he would have starved.

Yet, the forest ranger as an American figure has been neglected up to the present. Epic is an abused adjective, especially since our bright-eyed brothers of the scenario got hold of it, but it is a difficult adjective to avoid when speaking of national movements. Settlement on a large scale is always epic. In the history of the West there have been twelve epic figures, not epic individually, except in a few instances, and certainly never romantic to themselves, but epic and romantic in the sum total of what they have achieved and are achieving.

The Last to Appear

These figures, in the order in which they appeared, are the Indian, the explorer, the trapper, the Mormon, the prospector, the soldier, the stage driver and pony express man, the cattleman, the cowboy, the gambler and bad man, the engineer and the forest ranger. That the last has not yet been appreciated at his true pictorial and fictional worth is explainable.

In the first place, his work is only a little over two decades old. In the second place, he met with an obstinate and often dangerous opposition at the start. The Far Westerner does not like to be interfered with, he does not like to be told where and how to cut his timber and where and how to graze his stock. The sudden inroad of a number of officious young men annoyed him. The early history of the Forest Service is, in spots, almost as melodramatic as the early history of the bootlegging industry, but we know less about it, and the facts are harder to get at. Today we live in a much franker age.

A third and perhaps greater reason why the epic quality of the forest ranger has been overlooked is that in himself and in the way he conducts his business he is not obviously dramatic. He does not wear flowing chaps like the cowboy (if he wears chaps at all they are old and worn) and he has an aversion to vivid colors. He steals through a country as unobtrusively as a mountain cat. Furthermore, he does not ride bad horses for pleasure and he is by way of being both a policeman and a preserver.

To the contrariness of the human mind, the policeman is never quite so charming as the man he is after, while as to the preservers, they seldom loom as heroic as destroyers. In wartime the infantry is always thought more colorful than the ambulance corps. Like the doctor, the forest ranger was only called in when the West was sick. His job is to prevent Far Westerners from destroying themselves.

There is a mine of romance in the American Forest Service yet untapped. "Westerns are dead" is one of the latest pronouncements of the motion picture kings, which is rather a pity, for, as a matter of fact, "Westerns," with a few exceptions, have never even begun. The real life of the cowboy has never been put on the screen and seldom between the covers of a book. The trapper has never been depicted save as a drunken hairy brute, to cross the threshold of whose cabin is only to invite, on the part of an honest woman, an unpleasant obstacle race. I have already stated what has happened to the forest ranger.

A Uniform May Come Next

Perhaps, some day, the forest ranger will be put into a regular uniform—at present he does wear occasionally a sort of tunic—and then he will look more impressive to the passing movie director or author. Indeed, it is time this innovation was made. Despite our loudly expressed democratic opinions on the subject, especially in the Far West, the average American is as much taken by a uniform as any one.

The older one gets the more one admires and welcomes the complete frankness and intentness upon duty of the men who constitute the Government services. At a cow camp in a hidden mountain valley shut in by immense red cliffs there had been a barbecue for a Western Governor who was riding, with a party of thirty or so, through a corner of his domain. Toward midnight the fires died down and the conversation grew sleepy. With another man whom I had not met and whose dim face and figure I could barely make out, I climbed on to the tail of a rattling motor truck that was bound for the little town forty miles away.

We slid down along incredible roads where the forest, dark and odorous with night, shut us in, and presently came to the valley and a full moon. It turned bitterly cold, although it was only August, and I wished that I was riding a horse. I wished a great many things until the vague figure beside me began to talk, and then for a couple of hours I forgot all about cold and discomfort.

He was a District Forest Supervisor in on a visit of inspection. I never saw him again, but his personality has remained with me and it seems to me a symbol. Most of this man's official life had been spent in New Mexico and Arizona; only a little while before he had been transferred to the Northwest. He knew the Navajos like brothers, and the Pueblos almost as well, and his words and mind were colored with the slow reds and wide yellow grays of the Western South.

But there was still something else to this man, for all Westerners speak in figures and colors. My man spoke with the vision and calmness that comes from a large and unselfish job. That was the thing you noticed about him. He had the objectiveness of a public servant.

After the barbecue and the little band of politicians, he was restful, for even the best of politicians can never quite say what they mean or get outside their own interests. About the Forest Supervisor there was something of the largeness of the night as compared to the closeness and atavistic fear that camp fire breeds.

Bureaucracies can be unbearable, and this country stands indignant before a dozen petty bureaus, but we need never be afraid of the three great Bureaus of Conservation. The Forest Ranger, the Park Ranger, the Survey man, even the men who lead them and the men in the offices, see too much of the stars and think too much about trees and animals to be otherwise than just.

Stars and trees and animals are great correctives.

USING DECORATIVE ARTS

part of the architect, H. E. Woodsend. Hand-wrought hinges were found in one place, a chair in another. A kitchen dresser was picked up by sheer luck in an old barn. Wooden cupboards in the wall, the oven by the side of the fireplace, the brown slip ware on the dresser and the old Colonial bottles in a row on a shelf, constitute details that make one forget one is not actually in a Colonial home on a Massachusetts farm.

Another business room in New York harks back to a historic French interior. The private office of the late Frank W. Woolworth faithfully copies Napoleon's room at Compiègne, France. In only one detail does it differ from the original—at Compiègne the walls are of wood; here they are of a greenish marble. Pilasters run from the floor to the cornice, their capitals in the empire style of gilded bronze. The use of gilt metal ornaments on the door panels, chairs, desks and other furniture refect one of the chief characteristics of the style of design sponsored by Napoleon.

Here the effect is achieved, not through original pieces as in the New England kitchen, but by remarkable reproductions. Relics of the great man—such as the clock and candelabra on the mantelpiece—aid in creating an unusual atmosphere for a business man's private office.

More Modest Examples

These are extreme instances; more modest examples may be found. There is a nationally known advertising man whose private workroom is a simple but beautiful apartment, paneled from floor to ceiling in American walnut. The desk—an eighteenth century Chippendale antique, large and flat-topped—really makes the room, although a fine old bronze chandelier, adds to its note. The top of the desk is covered with leather containing a tooled border design, and the mahogany sides of the desk carry the ornate carved decoration characteristic of the English master cabinetmaker.

Use of antiques as office furniture seems to be a logical indulgence for those whose hobby is collecting. Business men with this predilection are now introducing some of their choicest pieces. If much care is given to interiors and to furniture at home, why should not the office, where a business man spends more than half his waking hours, be accorded some thought as to its atmosphere and individuality?

THE quest of the antique has many aspects. When medieval monks worked on their wonderful vellum and parchment books, illuminating them with color and beautiful design, they little knew that many a page would eventually become a lampshade in a twentieth century American home. Yet this very thing has happened. Old text and music book leaves are now being used to make parchment shades for the lamp on the library table or for the lamp by the living room fireplace.

Parchment sheets from music books are, because of their greater picturesqueness, more in demand than are black letter pages. In those days music was written good and large, with curious square-headed notes on the four-lined staff. Between the lines of music the hand-drawn Latin words add a further decorative quality. If you are musically inclined, perhaps you may be able to arrange a whole Gregorian chant and have it ornament your favorite lamp; or you may obtain a title page with ornamental Latin lettering to shade the light in your music room.

An attractive feature of these ancient parchment shades is their unconventionality. Only in the studio of some original artist has one hitherto found this practical adaptation of beautiful things of the past. There is a delightful touch of handicraft about some of these shades, and in the proper environment they add an effective note.

Sometimes the antiquarian value of a parchment shade is greater than the cost of the parchment and the making together. When one wishes to have a special old-time print placed on parchment one must pay for the pleasure of seeing the evening light shine through it, adding to its mellow glow of age. If the task of selecting be left to the designer he searches through old books and prints, seeking just the subject and color that best harmonize with the room he has in mind. Ancient seventeenth century prints of famous buildings and views, or pictures of saints quaintly garbed and naïve of mien, are dug out of the past for the New Yorker of today.

To have a parchment shade painted you must go to an artist who does such work. Sometimes we see a lamp whose shade is an integral part of the whole, reflecting and harmonizing with the decoration of the base. To achieve this result the artist, with the lamp base before him, has carefully worked out just the kind of shade demanded.

It is not easy to fit a shade of the right design to the many varieties of bases now being used. Take, for example, the old coal oil or whale oil lamps in vogue for early American rooms. For these, perhaps something in a dull, plain color with a severe line border of dull blue or green along the top and bottom edge would be the thing. A many-colored pottery jar is set off by a large shade with a brilliantly plumed bird on a blossom-bearing branch against a black background. Such a lamp would go well in a living room in which the furnishings represent an effect of varied styles.

The lampshade designer often achieves harmony between the lamp and its surroundings by having the shade reflect in its design the spirit and color of the hangings and furniture covers. Sometimes the artist visits the room and bases his design upon some important piece of furniture in it. This harmonious relation is especially desirable when the lamp is to be placed near or upon a special piece. Italian chests, old English court cupboards, Empire console tables, all call for lampshade designs of particular types.

The shape of the shade has also to be considered carefully. Now that rooms tend to include many lamps, this harmonizing of shapes with the rest of the room is a nice problem. No general rule can be given for this difficult task, except that lamps with round shades always go well with square or rectangular furniture and that square or angular shades are properly foiled by pieces of furniture incorporating curves.

GIRL IS TAPESTRY ARTIST

MARGARET LOGER, who won first honors in a recent competition and thereby gained the privilege of becoming one of the sixty artists at the Gobelins, is the second woman to achieve that honor. The first was Andree Etévenon, whose candidacy five years ago had to overcome a great many obstacles and prejudices.

Mlle. Loger, who is only 17, faced no other difficulties than those of surpassing her male rivals in the competition. After two years of apprenticeship in the workshops, she will become a full member of the famous tapestry-making community which prides itself upon remaining devoted to its art despite many temptations to go in for profit-making.

The Gobelin studios, in blackened stone buildings, surrounded by old gardens and cobble-paved courtyards, are on the left bank of the Seine beyond the Latin Quarter. They were founded in the fifteenth century by the Gobelins, dyers of Rheims. The institution was bought by Louis XIV and grew rapidly under his protection. After languishing during the Revolution, it regained its former reputation.

NEW ORLEANS BOOMS QUITE DECOROUSLY

Thrifty Crescent City Is a Bit Cautious About Becoming The Winter Playground of the Middle West

By HELEN BULLITT LOWRY

THE only American city that laughs in the street is not at all excited over the prospect of being "developed" into a playground for the North and the West. Florida boom artists and high pressure salesmen, arriving in New Orleans, find there a new kind of real estate boom. This New Orleans boom hasn't adopted even the first principles of the standardized boost vocabulary.

"Keep out of the night air," New Orleans still cautions you.

What kind of talk is that for a Winter resort boom that has already attracted $50,000,000 of honest-to-goodness money for public and private development; that deals in grandiose schemes like forty-mile sea walls; that tosses up islands and manufactures alluring bayous for synthetic waterfront footage with the same swing of the shovel?

In the New Orleans headquarters of one of the big developing companies—a $5,000,000 enterprise—the leisurely Secretary to the President told me, "Honey, you get a coat. Don't let our sun fool you. Everybody 'round here's got the grip." A stately old Creole lady who owns a stately old Spanish mansion down on the Gulf—a whole potential subdivision project in its ancient oak-shaded grounds—warned me smilingly, "But it is the dampness on the Gulf that is so penetrating."

Gallic Shoulders Shrug

Gradually the realization comes that this Winter resort boom that is surging from New Orleans up the Gulf Coast until it runs into the frenzied Florida boom washing westward, is being pushed down the New Orleans throat by Yankee enterprise. Officially, New Orleans—the New Orleans of Mayor's committees and commercial clubs and railroad folders—may be acclaiming it. But, psychologically—

"We have absorbed all the millionaires we can absorb," says New Orleans with a shrug of her Gallic shoulders. Down in her heart the city doesn't want the railroad folders to advertise, "Come and see the Mardi Gras," as they did this year, until the sight-seeing Chicagoans are three to every masqueraded reveler. New Orleans quivers when a Northern tourist remarks, as one remarked to me, "This seems such a gay city. I suppose it is because there are so many of us tourists here."

New Orleans glances apologetically up her coast, where the boom is stewing, where the beach hotels are jammed past all further need for room-clerk politeness, with tourists and speculators and promotion men and with 10,000 female realtors of all degrees of ages and manners and ethics. There isn't a green vegetable left on the coast, nor a clean sheet. The Florida boom has spread like measles, and New Orleans looks on a bit dismayed.

Though land has risen from $100 a front foot to $500 in six months, you don't hear any talk of over-night millionaires, nor of the buying of options, the juggling of "first payments," or promotion companies selling choice slices of the Gulf of Mexico.

It dawns on one that, underneath the frenzied surface of things, business is cash and carry—that "50 per cent. down and a gilt-edged mortgage" is the way things are running. Investment, not speculation. Development companies, not promotion companies. I went into the cubbyhole offices of promoter after promoter. They offered me pecan groves twenty-five miles back—I mean, they offered me pictures of pecan groves—and said I could grow mine in two years. But of the real stuff that the fighting is about they had not got a nibble. They muttered words about the big fellows in the "trust" who were hogging it.

Thrifty New Orleans newspapers refrained from boosting and boasting until every important undeveloped waterfront possibility was safely in the hands of responsible development companies dealing in millions. If there is to be a boom, if Yankee enterprise has made a boom inevitable, that boom is going to be chaperoned by the conservative bourgeois French thrift that underlies the aristocratic Mardi Gras coquetries of the city that laughs.

Whether the game will be wrested out of local control by high-power salesmen; whether the Yankees will get the upper hand as they have gotten it twice before in history; whether the land will finally fall into the grasp of speculators; whether a leisurely city that lives twenty-four hours a day will be changed into a city of hustling Babbitts, and whether the mannerly colored people of New Orleans will become as the tip-seeking colored folk of Florida—these are the issues that are to be fought out over Gulf real estate.

Nature has never set a more picturesque stage for a battle about real estate—which, by the way, is what all wars have been about. New Orleans lies between the untamed waters of the Mississippi and docile Lake Pontchartrain, which brings the sea up to the city's back door. At that back door (which in time will be changed into an imported-from-Chicago North Shore Drive development) the Winter resort boom begins. It stretches northeast along a richly foliaged coast famous for its pirates, smugglers, adventurers, Dons and Seigneurs among its half-hidden bayou inlets.

Here is no blank canvas on which real estate artists need to paint loggias and villas and tropical quick palms. I once heard a speaker at a fraternity banquet in a midwest university say, "Now, boys, we've got to get together and create some traditions"—which is exactly what they don't have to do to the forty miles of flowered beach that stretch from the "damp ground," which New Orleans learned to interest in the old days of the malaria mosquito, in Pass Christian, the favorite New Orleans resort, traditions of the old South are as mellow as the traditions of colonial Bermuda.

In old gardens fragrant acacia and hedodendron bloom, yellow Marechal Niel roses clamber over peeling stuccoed walls, and the bannered greet of the banana stalk waves gracefully. There are tall palms, and live oaks at 150 years old trail gray festoons of moss.

Because of the venerable trees in every yard and the roses on every wall, rain forgives the forty miles of flimsy cottages that have showed their way into the side grounds of the old Creole mansions along the white shell shore drive. For the Gulf in its undeveloped state has been serving as a Summer resort for people as far north as Memphis and as a sort of half-boarded-up Winter resort for the Middle West.

Seven months ago the Illinois Central Railroad received permission from the Interstate Commerce Commission to buy for $5,000,000 the rickety little Gulf and Ship Island Railroad that ran from Jackson, Miss., to Biloxi. Thus the Illinois Central broke through to the Coast. Immediately a twenty-three-hour train from Chicago to Biloxi was announced.

"The American Riviera"

Twenty-three hours from snow to flowers—less of actual time and later than it took the New Orleans poetry to reach their Gulf estates in the old days. With the Gulf brought within a day of Chicago, it seems no rash prophecy that by the Winter of 1926 the "American Riviera" will be as safely established on the Gulf as it is now on the beautiful real estate steps, and populated by America's prosperous Middle West in expensive period architecture.

For always back of the Gulf lies the hinterland of the Middle West, where prosperity surges and swells. The great automobile-drawn American public that now dashes the Gulf coast for its golf courses and country clubs will have it. There is historic precedent.

Long ago the Middle West—then the New West—demanded New Orleans, its natural outlet to the sea; demanded it of its Federal Government aggressively and threateningly.

FAMOUS BARDINI PALACE REVEALS ITS RICHES

History and Human Drama Weave Through the Rooms Of This Unique Museum in Historic Florence

By BENJAMIN A. MORTON

FLORENCE.

STEFANO BARDINI, grown rich through the sale of Tuscan works of art to foreigners, made peace with his soul at the last by willing his palace and its contents to the City of Florence. The Bardini Palace, now open to the public, represents the most important art acquisition since the opening of the Bargello, sixty years ago.

On visiting this new museum you may ask yourself whether, after all, Bardini did not keep his best treasures for himself—and for Florence. Like Omar, he may have reflected, having in mind his own possessions:

I often wonder what the Vintners buy
One-half so precious as the stuff they sell. * * *

The Bardini collection is beautifully in order, but contains no labels and offers no catalogue. A sense of adventure invests the stroll through these richly stocked rooms. Your scrutiny of each piece in all the more alert because there are no labor-saving guide book stars to be checked off. In other museums the best of exploration is dulled by your knowing in advance just what you will find there.

It is thrilling to come face to face with the bust of an unnamed man, as vivid as the Nicolo da Uzzano in the Bargello, and in puzzling one's brain with the question: "Who can this be?" The bust is terra-cotta, of the full-blown Renaissance. The man has a beard. Few men then wore beards. There comes a recollection of one of those phrases that stick in the memory. A race, a Barbary horse forging to the front, the crowd shouting in delirium: "Mantova! Mantova! Turco! Turco!" The horse carrying the Gonzaga colors wins.

Boldest of Horsemen

Gian Francesco Gonzaga, Marquis of Mantua, breeder of fine horses and the boldest horseman in the world, was called "Turk" because of his beard. The rest is simple. There are only a few other likenesses of him, and they are unmistakably likenesses of this man before us now.

Gonzaga the horseman, the brave soldier, is of little interest; but these are the features of the man whom all the world thought the most fortunate of husbands. His wife was Isabella d'Este, "la prima donna del mondo"—Isabella d'Este, the fairest of all the lovely flowers in the garden of the Renaissance at the height of its beauty; she who embodied to perfection the spirit of that age.

In all things she would have nothing less than perfection—in her books from the Aldine press, in her jewels, in her musical instruments, in her pictures by Bellini, Perugino, Mantegna, Leonardo da Vinci. She sang, played the lute, danced and sat in at the game of politics—as good a man as the best. The enduring quality of her fame is not that she was gay, brilliant, charming, beautiful, the ablest woman of her time, but that she had a passionate and just appreciation of letters and of the fine arts.

Gonzaga looks at you, keen-eyed, dominant, stocky, unattractive. This was the man to whom Floriano Dolfo wrote: "You are blessed beyond most men in having a fair, wise and noble wife, who is altogether discreet and virtuous, and has shown herself a true mother of concord, ever anxious to gratify your wishes, while she prudently feigns neither to see nor to hear those actions of yours that must be hateful and injurious to her."

In the Altman collection in the Metropolitan Museum there is a wonderfully appealing portrait by Francesco Francia of their little son, Federico—the boy for whom Isabella later obtained the title Duke. When this portrait was painted at Bologna, between July 29 and Aug. 10, 1510, Federico, a lad of 10, was on his way to Rome as a hostage to obtain his father's release from imprisonment in the Doge's Palace in Venice.

The boy's face shows the pathos of separation from his mother. His wistfulness reflects her anguish. At Maximilian's first proposal that her son be delivered over as hostage, she writes to her envoy at the Emperor's court:

A Mother's Decision

"As to the demand for our dearest first-born son, Federico, besides being a cruel and inhuman thing for any one who knows the meaning of a mother's love, there are many causes that render it difficult and impossible. Although we are quite sure that his person would be well cared for and protected by his Majesty, how could we wish him to run the risk of this long and difficult journey, putting aside the child's tender and delicate age?

"And you must know what comfort and solace, in his father's present unhappy condition, we find in the presence of this dear son, the hope and joy of all our people and subjects. To deprive us of him would be to deprive us of life itself, and of all we count good and precious. Frankly, once for all, we will suffer any loss rather than part from our son. This you may take to be our deliberate and unchanging resolution."

But she finally consented, when it was decided that the boy might go to Rome in the care of the Pope. There he was lodged in the Vatican, and so won the heart of the Pope, Julius II, that he would not have the boy leave. Federico remained in Rome until after the Pope died in 1513.

What the mother thought of the picture Francia painted to comfort her in the boy's absence she phrased in a letter to her agent in Bologna:

"It is impossible to conceive of a better portrait or a closer resemblance. I am astonished to find that in so short a time the artist has been able to execute so perfect and admirable a work. One sees that he wishes to show all the perfection of which he is capable."

When Francia was asked to paint a replica, he answered that he would not "for all the gold in the world."

In the Francia you can see a resemblance, in the boy's eyes, to his father, and you can see also something of his mother's charm.

As you go about the Bardini Museum trying to appraise the qualities of these new possessions, you come upon a sadly damaged relief. Your first impression consists of a broken surface of chaotic black, gold and red. Then, of a sudden, the Madonna takes form, and the Child and the angels. You see that it is lovely, without at first realizing how lovely; and then, before your eyes, the polychrome glows with the beauty of Donatello's inspiration.

Poetic charm, tenderness, eyes so little seeing, yet comprehending all—this should be called the Madonna of the Golden Dreams. The love with which it was wrought still radiates from this face.

In the same spirit an unknown Sienese artist of the fourteenth century has created a Virgin of the Annunciation—a terra-cotta statue of the rarest beauty. Her figure is slight and graceful, in a close-fitting dress, with flowers of maroon accented by black and gold on old ivory. In her hands and arms there is a suggestion of lassitude; in the ture, both stucco and terra-cotta of the best Florentine period, it also includes many excellent pictures, tapestries, chests, tables, musical instruments, arms and armor, ecclesiastical vestments, doorways from Tuscon villas, stairs, columns, arches, ceilings from old houses, a mantel by Desiderio da Settignano and a pulpit by Benedetto da Maiano.

In the courtyard there is a charming early Renaissance balcony inlaid with colored marble from Pisa, recalling the Byzantine influence at Ravenna and at Venice. In the crypt there is a fine Andrea della Robbia relief. An excellent Madonna and Child, a terra-cotta relief, shows the perfection of workmanship of Benedetto da Maiano; a stucco bust, the serene strength of Jacopo della Quercia.

A Museum Masterpiece

The final impression is one of color and light, charmingly varied; of good taste, good craftsmanship, beauty. These works were gathered together by a man skilled in the appreciation of the subtle magic wrought by an artist's creative imagination. The installation is a masterpiece of museum architecture.

There is no sign here of the lapses inclination of the head a feeling of resignation. There is a poise in the figure; in the face, peace, calm, something of sadness and of patience that is utterly appealing. It is not clay, it is a living miracle that so moves you.

Of similar quality and of the same school is a St. Catherine, masterly in the treatment of drapery; a mature woman of great simplicity, strength and wisdom. Like the young Virgin and the young Mother this figure is endowed with the spirit of true worship, a saintly nobility.

While the Bardini collection is especially rich in polychrome sculp- of taste, of the dullness, the lack of a sense of proportion, of fitting relationship; no sign of having slighted the fundamental principle of interior architecture in a museum, such as make so many museums merely crowded storehouses.

As you go from room to room you find nothing you would like to change. This room suggests a salon with tapestries and pictures; this a sacristy; another has the feeling of a choir and another that of a crypt. Each room is perfectly composed and each object properly displayed—the whole a masterpiece, harmonious and full of significance are a drag to your health and efficiency.

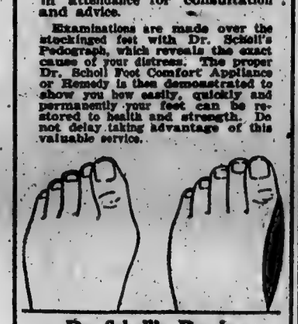
No charge made for an expert analysis of your feet

Tired, aching feet are far more serious than the pain they inflict. They sap your health and energy, and rob you of your efficiency. Correct this condition before it becomes acute.

Dr. Wm. M. Scholl, widely recognized authority on foot troubles, has developed a service which is available to any one, anywhere in the world. Leading shoe dealers in this city and elsewhere are now equipped to detect and analyze foot troubles and relieve them by application of the Dr. Scholl method. Or you may call at Dr. Scholl's offices in New York, where one of his staff is always in attendance for consultation and advice.

Examinations are made over the stockinged feet with Dr. Scholl's Pedograph, which reveals the exact cause of your distress. The proper Dr. Scholl Foot Comfort Appliance or Remedy is then demonstrated to show you how easily, quickly and permanently your feet can be restored to health and strength. Do not delay taking advantage of this valuable service.



Dr. Scholl's Bunion Reducer

This ingenious device gives immediate relief by removing the pressure or friction of the shoe, reduces and hides the enlargement and preserves shape of the shoe. Made of soft medicated rubber. Invisibly worn under the stocking. At shoe and drug stores everywhere. 75c.

NEW ORLEANS HAS A BOOM

until the Government purchased the bumptious child its heart's desire. Too prophetically had the Sieur de Bienville in 1718 planned that New Orleans should be indissoluble from the Upper Mississippi and Great Lakes possessions of France.

It was a serious-minded young West in the days of the Louisiana Purchase. It wasn't interested in playgrounds and golf courses and Winter swimming. What it sought was an easier way to make a living, and it found it. In no place in the world is it easier to make a living and to own an automobile and join a golf club and do dinner dances and break into society and wear gold tissue evening dresses and have table manners than it is in the upper valley that broke through to the Gulf 124 years ago.

Much water has rolled down the Mississippi since then. The empire builders have come and gone, and one of them left behind the famous saying that the man who achieves must wear an overcoat six months a year. And the sons of the empire builders, the inheritors of the wealth, can go to Palm Beach in the Winter, where they don't have to wear overcoats.

Even so, the Middle West keeps on building, if not empires, at any rate automobile jacks and buttons and stockings and almost everything else you can find in the dictionary. And if it is not turning out quite so many multimillionaires as in the good old days of "natural resources" it is at least turning out a quantitative production of single-cylinder millionaires and of twenty-five-thousand-a-year business men such as never before were concentrated on a limited area of the earth's surface. The heirs of empire builders and lumber kings who go to Palm Beach have scarcely tapped the Winter-resort material of the Upper Mississippi and the Great Lakes.

It is not the leisure class that demands the Gulf Coast for its Winter playground. That class is served. The social-registered folk and the tin-can campers will still have their Florida after the realtors have cleared out. Southern California is still entirely satisfactory to wealthy old ladies, retired naval officers, retired Iowa farmers and the bored wives of tired business men. What is time to the American leisure classes?

Winter Like Spring

Even the Gulf Coast development companies, which are putting up their money, do not lay claim to California's cloudless sunshine or to Florida's tropical Winter bathing. The Gulf Coast Winter is not Winter at all, but Spring. It is like late April in Central Park with April's frequent showers and gay virginal sunshine—an April, if you will, with the flowers that belong officially to May.

All the same, it is only twenty-three hours from desk to golf course, and that means everything to the man who can spend anything but time—the man who is in the process of making his money; the man who will park a family on the Gulf and run down for a week's stay whenever things break right at the office. What the Gulf Coast has a monopoly of is time.

So far no particular fashionable group has interested itself in the developments—fashionable, that is, in the Palm Beach sense of the word. To tell the truth, the really fashionable folk are less likely in the Middle West to be active professional or business men than they are in New York City or Boston or Philadelphia or New Orleans. The only really fashionable business in the land of sunflowers and cotton woods is called Looking After One's Interests. And such fashionable folk, notwithstanding Sinclair Lewis to the contrary, have no sectional qualities to differentiate them from the other members of the Everglades Club. Their class, by the way, would fit very congenially into the sporting set of New Orleans.

But one wonders just how this easy-moneyed, well-groomed, fashionably architectured, well-pearled crowd will blend with an aristocracy that sometimes is driven in Ford cars by liveried negro chauffeurs. The Middle West thinks it good form to "act rich." New Orleans regards it as bad form—has so regarded it ever since 1865. As a consequence, though there is plenty of wealth in New Orleans, people who were born there can still do formal society on $10,000 a year. In any city of the same size further north in the Middle West nobody can possibly be prominent socially on less than a $50,000 income. It is even on the books that the Winter colony may not care to know the New Orleans "first families."

A delicate experiment, this blending of two opposed cultures. Will the depleted old Creole families do what the English aristocracy has always done when it is in danger of extinction—retrieve its finances by finding moneyed husbands in the Winter colony and "ennobling" them? Or will the Winter colony do the influencing? And will New Orleans become as Indianapolis, Detroit, Minneapolis, Chicago and Miami?

North Provides the Money

Perhaps the dread of such an outcome is at the root of the cautious response that the business interests of the city made to the first advances of the Chicago financiers. Indeed, up to date, all the money has been provided by Northern capital, though New Orleans has quantities of loose money in banks that it could invest.

Thrifty business New Orleans is a city that keeps its money in its sock, yet money is beginning to come out of the sock. Maybe New Orleans will take her boom more boostingly after she puts her money in it. She may even take up a few fundamentals of the boom vocabulary.

All the same, there isn't going to be a repetition of the Florida thing; money in the pot or no money—that is, of course, if New Orleans can help it. As the Southern representative of one huge developing company expressed it, "We don't want our land values to rise beyond the land's economic value to the buyer."

It is not hard to understand the significance of that. A few weeks ago business lots on the streets of Miami were selling for more a front foot than on Madison Avenue in Chicago. A filling station on a highway sold for $350,000. No filling station on earth could do business enough to justify such an outlay. In the same way, in the Iowa boom of 1919, Iowa farm land rose to $500 an acre, though scientific farming cannot make much profit beyond a $200-an-acre investment.

Yankee promoters may argue that it all is fair enough, provided they get out with theirs, and may ask why New Orleans can't be content if somebody else is left to hold the bag. The Iowa farmers who sold out and retired to California aren't worrying about Iowa, which has not recovered its equilibrium in six years of radicalism.

Right here, so please you, is the difference. A real New Orleanaite sell out and retire to California? Mon Dieu! how ridiculous!

MONUMENT TO VIRGIL

DURING the Middle Ages, a monument to Virgil stood at Mantua, where the author of "The Aeneid" was born, and near to which town he once cultivated a farm. The lads and lassies were in the habit of crowning the effigy of the poet with flowers and dancing round its base. Carlo Malatesta, when Regent, had the monument destroyed. At a later date Isabella d'Este, Princess of Mantua, desired to erect another statue to the poet, and today the design may be inspected in the Louvre collection. Now the State announces a competition for the best design of a monument to Virgil, to stand at his birthplace, Mantua.

BALDWIN STEADIES ENGLAND

in truth, and I am proud to think that the English word has been held in no less honor than the Roman . . . ."

Or hear him on the subject of England in his St. George's Day address two years ago:

"Into my mind comes a wonder as to what England may stand for in the minds of generations to come, if our country goes on as she has gone in the last two generations, seeing her fields converted into towns. To me England is the country and the country is England. When I ask myself what I mean by England, there comes to me through my various senses the sights and sounds of England: the tinkle of the hammer on the anvil in a country smithy, the corncrake in the dewy morning, the sound of the scythe against the whetstone and the sight of the plow team over the brow of a hill; the wild anemones in the woods in April, the last load of hay being drawn down the lane in the twilight and, most moving, the smell of the wood smoke going up in the Autumn evening. These things strike down to the very depths of our feelings. These are the things that make England . . . ."

This is not the talk of those whom we usually describe as business men, nor is Mr. Baldwin one of their city-bred tribe. He is a business man chewing a straw.

The bare bones of his career are fairly well known. An austere Wesleyan ancestry made him a nephew of Burne-Jones, Edward Poyater and Lockwood Kipling—hence a cousin of Rudyard Kipling. Good Victorians they were, to whose Puritan traditions he has been faithful; whose feeling for literature and the arts has been continued in the richly furnished mind beneath a humdrum exterior. He has never displayed the big-bass-drum predilections of the younger Rudyard Kipling. Possibly it is his attachment to the English soil that has kept him mellow.

An Inconspicuous Start

He went through Harrow and Trinity at Cambridge, emerging not as a young gentleman of the sometimes uppish public school and university type, but as a young business man of the leisurely and paternal Victorian type. He inherited his Worcestershire farm and the big Swansea steel firm of Baldwins, Ltd., which dates back to the time when pack mules and the Severn barges used to transport its products. His father had occupied a safe seat in the House of Commons for sixteen years, and the son inherited it in 1908. For eight years he sat incandescuously and contentedly on the back benches, and all that can be said of those eight years is that everybody liked him.

Then his rise began, and within seven years he shot up to the Premiership—which, if it is not the most powerful political position in the world, at least compares in that respect with our own Presidency and with the Viceroyalty of India. Nobody has ever intimated that he accelerated the shooting up process by so much as lifting his finger. It is simply not in him. When he first became Prime Minister he told the country that he needed its prayers more than its congratulations. At the time he said it there were some who laughed and some who sneered, but by this time the country knows him better than it did in the Spring of 1923. His is a breed with which acquaintance is necessarily slow.

But we are running ahead of our story. His first real appointment came in 1917, when the late Bonar Law decided to "give Baldwin a trial" as Financial Secretary to the Treasury. Two years later he wrote his famous letter to The Times, signing it with the fictitious initials "F. S. T.," urging a voluntary capital levy upon the wealthy classes and starting the ball rolling by presenting 20 per cent. of his own fortune, about £120,000, to the Government. It was a piece of anonymous patriotism springing from a business man's hatred of seeing his country living on borrowed money. But the hard-faced men would have none of it. As a lead it fell flat.

He played a foremost part in the Carlton Club meeting in 1922, which brought the Coalition down with a crash; and in the ensuing Tory Government he accepted the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, under Bonar Law. In that capacity he went to Washington, where he reached a business man's agreement with the American Debt Funding Commission. Upon his return to England he announced the terms of his settlement in an interview with London newspaper men that from a business man's standpoint was a plain piece of straight talk, but from a politician's standpoint was a blazing indiscretion. It put his chief into such a hole that there can be little doubt it was the turning point in Mr. Baldwin's career.

But Bonar Law finally accepted the settlement he had made, and it then became probable that Mr. Baldwin's pigs in Worcestershire would not see him for many a long day. Mr. Law's health broke down a few months later, and the King sent for Mr. Baldwin.

The Gift of Laughter

That was a difficult day for the newspaper cartoonists. Mr. Baldwin's face was as new to them as it was to the country in general. Except for his inveterate briar pipe, there was nothing for a cartoonist to seize upon. There is nothing anywhere in his personal appearance to be exploited. He is obviously English. It is plainly difficult to ruffle him. There are little wrinkles around his eyes, indicating the gift of laughter; but beyond that there is absolutely nothing to say of his personal appearance except that he smokes a pipe and parts his hair in the middle.

Everybody remembers how, shortly after he came to Downing Street, Mr. Baldwin took his party to the country and made a present of the Government to Mr. MacDonald; how only a year later Mr. MacDonald handsomely returned the compliment. In a country the war and the Coalition had left all but falling to pieces, the edifice of Government on old party lines had to be built anew from the ground up.

Since his return to office in the general election of 1924, Mr. Baldwin has been securely entrenched behind a majority that seems likely to run its full five years' course. It is much too early to attempt to anticipate the position among the Prime Ministers of England that historians will ultimately allot to him. At present we can only surmise that they will find in him a business man of the old-fashioned sort, who succeeded largely by the sheer force of his own personal example in restoring serenity to his country.

THE SOUTHERNMOST CITY

PUNTA ARENAS, in latitude 53 degrees 10 minutes, is the southernmost city in the world. It is situated on Magellan Strait, 222 miles from Cape Pillar at the Pacific and 111 miles from Cape of Eleven Thousand Angels, at the Atlantic entrance.

Founded in 1843 by Chile, and used at first as a convict station, it attained importance as the port of call for vessels on the coast to coast trip through the Strait. Its climate was found to be ideal for wool-raising; the cold, while not great enough to affect the health of the sheep, causes the wool to grow long. The region produces great quantities of beef.

Punta Arenas has 21,000 inhabitants, who enjoy all the conveniences and improvements of any modern city. Of the Europeans attracted to Punta Arenas 5,000 are Yugoslavaks. Many Scotchmen and Germans have settled there and prospered.

THE EPIC OF '76: NORTH CAROLINA SPEAKS

In April, 150 Years Ago, the Seeds of Independence Were Sown and a New Concept of Freedom Took Firm Root

A century and a half ago the world was witnessing a historical drama which we can now see was the beginning of mankind's greatest adventure—the American Revolution. Each week, almost every day, of the present year marks the anniversary of some episode that tried men's souls, with the Declaration of Independence as the climax.

It was a great stage, a great play, a notable cast. After 150 years it still has power to thrill. The story of the events from April 12 to July 4, 1776, will be told, week by week, in THE NEW YORK TIMES Magazine. The first chapter follows.

By R. L. DUFFUS

THE year 1776, for a cosmic observer, was not altogether an encouraging one. Europe, at least, seemed in a bad way. Cynical statesmanship had reached its height under Frederick the Great, a philosophical freebooter who entertained Voltaire but really believed only in force. The Government of England, under a headstrong King, was both blundering and corrupt. Catherine the Great in Russia and the Emperor Joseph in Austria-Hungary were playing at enlightened despotism. Turgot was making a last vain effort to rehabilitate the finances of France and so prevent revolution. In North America, along the fringe of the Atlantic seaboard, a few farmers, tradesmen and country gentlemen were in rebellion against the British crown—an insignificant squabble it may have seemed, at first, to the cosmic eye.

A March of Ideas

But more important things than appeared in any purely political picture were happening. There was a march of ideas that were to turn the world upside down. Rousseau was still living. So was Voltaire. The modern conception of liberalism, of freedom, of democracy was being born. Privilege, merely because it was traditional, no longer passed unquestioned. The common man was somehow getting into his head a notion of his own dignity.

The modern democratic State—such a one as the United States of America—was being made philosophically conceivable. So was modern business. Adam Smith, in 1776, was reading the final proofs on "The Wealth of Nations," a book full of common sense and love of humanity.

There was much else to see. For instance, Captain Cook was sailing around the world, finding a new empire to take the place of the one England was soon to lose in America. The modern era of colonization was about to begin.

But the scattered, poverty-stricken Colonies of North America stood in the forefront of these world movements—not because their population was numerous, but because there the first real experiment in democracy was to be made. The key to the twentieth century, one might say, was on the point of being turned. It is this that gives significance to skirmishes that in vaster campaigns would not have been mentioned in the routine communiqués. It is this, too, that makes the chief actors in the American Revolution grand figures. They were children of a destiny far greater than themselves. In many ways they were men of ordinary dimensions, but they cast huge shadows.

The Colonies had been at war for a year, ostensibly to assert their rights as loyal British subjects. For almost half of 1776 a great mass of the people remained exactly that. They fired at redcoats whenever they saw them, but they prayed for the King.

The times, however, were changing. A bolder mood was coming over the country. There was talk of independence. Men began to dream of carrying out on this fertile New World soil the Old World philosophy of Rousseau. They dreamed of breaking with the past and building all over again. And the past was—England.

Where the movement began it is now hard to say. Massachusetts was still technically a part of the British Empire, but its representative citizens had spent nearly a year trying to drive Lord Howe's British troops out of Boston. North and South, the royal Governors had in most cases deemed it wise to take refuge on ships or in British garrisons. Little government remained, except such as the Colonists provided for themselves. It was a credit to the Colonial knack for self-government and self-control that anarchy had not broken out.

Perhaps, if one had to put one's finger on the spot in which the move for independence first unequivocally announced itself, one would have to select North Carolina. For it was in North Carolina, on April 12, 1776, that there was passed the first resolution for independence ever adopted by an American legislative body.

The Colonial Congress of North Carolina had selected a committee, on April 3, to report upon a proper course of action toward George III. The report was ready in four days.

First Blast for Freedom

"It appears to your committee," it said, "that pursuant to the plan concerted by the British Ministry for subjugating America, the King and Parliament of Great Britain have usurped a power over the persons and properties of the people, unlimited and uncontrolled; and disregarding their humble petitions for peace, liberty and safety, have made divers legislative acts denouncing war, famine and every species of calamity against this continent in general.

"The British fleets and armies have been and still are daily employed in destroying the people and committing the most horrid devastations on the country. . . . In consequence of all which, multitudes of people have been destroyed, or from easy circumstances reduced to distress.

"And whereas the moderation hitherto manifested by the United Colonies and their sincere desire to be reconciled to the mother country on constitutional principles have procured no mitigation of the aforesaid wrongs, and usurpations, and no hopes remain of obtaining redress by those means alone which have been hitherto tried, your committee are of opinion that the House should enter into the following resolution, to wit:

"Resolved, That the delegates for this Colony in the Continental Congress be empowered to concur with the delegates of the other Colonies in declaring independency and forming foreign alliances."

This resolution was passed unanimously. It came, rather opportunely, at a time when discussion was hot thrcughout the Colonies. Immediately after its passage it was printed, and copies of it were hurried North, as the reports of Lexington and Concord had been hurried South a year earlier. Horsemen, galloping into inn yards at night, splashed with mud, exchanged gossip with the landlords, and won the neighborhood knew that North Carolina was out for independence. Editors got hold of it and issued it in their newspapers or on fly sheets. Men talked about it in the coffee houses, or halted, as they jogged along country roads, to discuss it with their neighbors across a zigzag fence.

Men had been arguing all the Spring about Tom Paine's "Common Sense," which had appeared in January and by this time had long passed the hundred thousand mark—a best-seller record not to be sneered at, even today. A new flag had been flung to the breeze at Cambridge, above Washington's headquarters, on New Year's Day.

Sam Adams had hotly demanded: "Is not America already independent? Why not, then, declare it?" Washington himself, writing in this very month of April, was saying: "My countrymen will come reluctantly into the idea of independency, but time and persecution bring wonderful things to pass."

The news from North Carolina ran up and down a continent still torn by indecision, though its people's strength of purpose had already been baptized in blood—on Bunker Hill, at Concord and Lexington, and on less famous fields. But events were pushing on even those who wavered. The times were on the march.

In South Carolina there had been no formal assertion of a policy of independence, but the Colony had set up a complete revolutionary Government of its own. There, too, in March Colonel William Moultrie had completed a fort on Sullivan's Island and lay waiting (almost hoping, so great a confidence did he have in his method of building forts) that the British fleet would sail in and attack it. Off the coast were the Governors of North Carolina and South Carolina, thinking of more serious things than the time between drinks, and hoping that the fleet, together with some thousands of well-equipped British regulars under Clinton and Cornwallis, would soon bring the rebels into subjection.

In Front of Quebec

To jump to the other extreme of the firing line, this same two years in April found the American forces still camped in front of Quebec, still hoping for success. They had stormed and lost the citadel at the end of December, in a battle costing Montgomery his life and Benedict Arnold, unhappily for himself and his country, only a leg. Washington had sent them four battalions and was sending them six more. The smallpox was doing more than British musketry. The little army had in April, only 1,700 effectives.

However, few observers in the Colonies could have foreseen the end of the Canadian campaign. The Conciliists still hoped for a united America, stretching from Hudson Bay to Florida.

With General Washington in command of the American forces in Cambridge, these were days of triumph. American militia, under the American General, had achieved the seemingly impossible. Not only had they pinned Lord Percy's troops in Boston, but they had been chased back into Boston by the indignant Massachusetts farmers. Bunker Hill was ten months back

N cities flags are common. Almost every day marks some occasion when certain people think it necessary to raise them. e is constantly walking beneath ttering stripes of red and white d thinking little about them. But the Rocky Mountains it is different. To see a flag there is like ing your flag in some foreign rt.

The colors drop suddenly into your nd with a little quivering shock a stone drops into still waters d ripples of significance spread t. You realize that big as your untry is, unsettled still as so much f it is, none the less it is held together by universal interests and ads that rise above local jealousies d the smallness of sectional boundaries. ith a signboard on which, against white background, is painted a lack shield, and near by a flagpole rom which flies a small American lag.

That is, the small American flag lies from it some of the time, but not most of the time, unless the forester happens to be married. For most of the time he will be off on his many duties, and he does not expose his flag to bad weather or leave it flying after sundown.

Horsetail Station, Arizona Creek, Thread Creek—these are some of the thousands of names scattered over the country, names that were there years before the Forest Service was thought of. In most instances they sing with the inherent poetry of frontier nomenclature. In some instances they mark events now forgotten that meant to some early trapper or explorer or prospector success or tragedy or terror.

Remember well any stream in the West that is called Cache Creek, for on it at some time something dramatic must have happened. Cache means to hide a thing, or the thing hidden, a word brought down by the Hudson Bay men; and so on any Cache Creek, somewhere along its winding length, there is probably today the skeleton vestige of a store of weapons or treasure or, most likely of all, food.

Frontiersmen did not leave weapons or treasure or food unless they were forced to, or unless, driven by the cool madness that is in the exploring brain, they saw beyond them hills they could not but visit if it meant starvation. I know one Cache Creek where, high up on a trail that antedates history, there is a white man's grave, unknown, utterly lonely, carefully made.

You have come to a forest station. You had better get off your horse, if the forester is at home and you have the time, and talk to this representative of the Government. Whatever his individual characteristics or his previous history one thing is fairly certain: Once you get him to talk you will find him interesting. To begin with, he is likely to have interesting traits or he would not be where he is. To end with, he has a job that would make him interesting even if by nature he was dull.

The Forest Ranger on His Lonely Round.

Loneliness Requires Imagination

As a rule he is not dull. Dull men do not like loneliness. Really to like loneliness requires imagination. Dull men do not like Government work in such a service as the Forest Service, for to become a forester means that you must sacrifice all hope of worldly gain in order to perform an altruistic, arduous and frequently dangerous task. Dull men, moreover, do not like trees, and almost every forester likes trees. The foresters are recruited from all classes of men; but this passion for trees and loneliness and this fine contempt for money distinguish almost all of them.

Recalling the forest district I know best and the histories of some of the rangers, I recollect a dentist, a cattleman, a gigantic blond Tennessee homesteader, a bearded man whose forebears for generations were foresters in the Austrian royal forests, an ex-captain of United States cavalry and a slight imaginative young college man who reads avidly every book and magazine he can lay hands on, all turned foresters for the love of the woods and the work.

All these varying types have ideals in common and a certain calm dignity that comes from an impartial service and a power and responsibility really immense. No one can realize just how important a forester is until he begins to investigate. He is armed with the authority of the United States and, in an emergency, that covers everything.

The forests of the United States—and they are huge and are scattered over the whole country—are divided into districts. At the head of each district is a resident supervisor with his office staff, his liaison officers and his foresters out on their lonely stations.

Ordinarily the duties of a forester are to guard the widely ramified forest interests of the particular strip of the district assigned to him. Primarily these are to keep a lookout for fires and to fight them when they start, summoning residents to his aid; to see that the ranchmen who graze their stock on the national forests do not exceed the number of head permitted them; to see that the cutting of timber, whether it be for lumbering purposes, house-building or firewood, is done legitimately, with due attention to stumpage and the piling of débris; to supervise any other industry that has been allowed to operate in the national forests, and, finally, to know his trees intimately so that he can detect any symptom of disease and can suggest cutting and planting where they would be of benefit. The forester knows his trees as the cattleman knows his cattle.

He Is Virtually a King

But the forester's duties only begin here. In a lonely country where the only Government officials are likely to be a United States Marshal and a United States surveyor, miles away, and the only State officials are likely to be a few scattered game wardens and the only county official is likely to be an overworked Sheriff, the forest ranger may be called upon to be anything at any moment. He is virtually king of a small forest community, and if he is a wise man he can be its guide and counselor as well.

He is ipso facto a game warden, therefore he helps the Biological Survey to get rid of predatory animals and the State to maintain the game laws. If nobody else is around he can act as a Sheriff. Since his telephone is frequently the only telephone for miles, the forest station is the first place sought in time of trouble. It is well for the wife of a forester, if he have one, to be a paragon of discretion.

In the Summer the forester is a guardian and a dry nurse for the wild, wild motor tourist. The motor tourist is not so wild, however, as he used to be, thanks to the "dude" ranches and railway advertising and the cry of "See America First." The camping average of America is rising. Even a motor tourist after five or six years of camping learns something of that intricate craft. Moreover, every year the ranks of the real campers with canoe or pack train or on foot are recruited by motor tourists who have made the inevitable discovery that the automobile will take you only so far.

But there are still enough tenderfoots, and even the wiser campers come in such numbers as to make the forest ranger's duties in Summer bewilderingly complex. He must see that camps are kept clean and left clean (a duty, I regret to say, up to is built with its tower facing the street and on a hill that slopes away from the street. Thus, when the walls were built the inside of the church sloped down toward the altar, rather like the parterre of a theatre. The original intention was to level it in the ordinary way, but it was found that it would take enormous quantities of filling and there seemed to be no reason why it should not be left as it was.

From the seats, this method has enormously improved the general aspect of the church. So much is this the case that the plan has been followed in the little church at Montmagny, near St. Denis, which is just being completed. Here, to obtain the effect the floor was dug out, making a meter's difference between the two ends of the church.

It might be imagined that the concrete church, with its mass of glass beautified to remove it from too much suggestion of the atelier, is too dependent upon its glass, that it is not unlike a conservatory. A good deal of its beauty does of course depend upon the glass, which is perhaps the only real means of giving atmosphere. But the beauty of a woman often depends a good deal upon her complexion and is none the worse for that.

Based on Deeper Principles

The satisfaction, which is produced by both concrete churches, is based on far deeper principles. The lines of Montmagny, before the glass was put in, were extraordinarily pure. That is to say, all of them seemed absolutely essential to the structure. One of the reasons is the tremendous height—proportionately—and the spring of the towers. This would be impossible if carried out in stone, if only on account of the expense. But where concrete has shortcomings in some directions it has positive advantages in others. One is that its cheapness, its labor-saving, make possible features which in more expensive materials could not even be contemplated.

On this latter point it may be added that the church at Le Raincy, carried out in stone, would have cost from three to five times as much. As it was—20 meters wide, 56 meters long and with the tower of 45 meters—it cost, including the beautiful glass and all the interior fittings, 600,000 francs, which at the present rate of exchange might perhaps be taken at $21,000 or even less.

Produced out of the deep emotions and sufferings of the war, limited on all sides by lack of material, lack of money, lack even of skilled workmen, built almost in the heart of an immense working district with the workshop as the commonest currency of expression, the concrete church at Le Raincy was almost bound to be single-minded in expression, unless it were to be the conventional language of the cheap builder. It was almost bound to be other than the usual copying of the Gothic or the Renaissance churches which, in these days, is rather like talking the language of Shakespeare at breakfast.

The people who use the church are familiar with every detail of it; some of them have handled the molds, some made the spiral staircase. If they have not, then their neighbors have. They have worked in the shops and this is their language, only much better turned. They know the phrases, the idioms, almost the slang.

Building is a slow process, destined to last a long time. There are not the quick changes in style that affect clothes, literature, painting. The building tradition goes on from father to son, and it is only after a long period that the son recognises his great-grandfather's expression to be stilted or even absurd, that it lacks words with which to express modern conditions. Even so, it is often easier to go on in the old way, and so the absurdity remains that churches are still being built like fortifications, which, in their turn, would not satisfy modern conditions of warfare.

Le Raincy expresses modern industrial conditions with wonderful fidelity. Nor is it even the language of the moment only, but of moments which continue to obtain and are likely to persist in the modern scientific world. The church is the workshop, but the workshop sublimated. It points the way, not to what life is actually, but to what it might be. It aspires, suggests, gives hope. It is by no means at the end of its resources. This beautiful little church has sprung almost whole out of the architects' brains—the Brothers Perret, who also gave much of the church. Complete in itself, it is full of reserves, full of possibilities. If so much can be done with so little, what may not the future hold, what possibilities may there not be when out of the bare idea of the atelier has come a very remarkable work of art?

Concrete itself is not a pleasant substance. Its gray is cold and its surface is a little worrying in that it resembles stone and yet is clearly not stone. These are, however, superficial disadvantages. In both churches, Le Raincy and Montmagny, the first thing that strikes one is the purity of their lines, the feeling of inevitableness about their execution, and the lack of any sort of ornament which is not founded on a principle.

If this sort of church—and more are being planned—really finds a place, it should also give a tremendous impulse to stained glass. In Paris stained glass work is making great strides, and is going back to simplicities which are well within its conventions. Still further, there is no reason why ferro-concrete should not also be applied to other buildings with far more sense of art than has hitherto been evidenced. The Brothers Perret have made a very notable demonstration in the little church on the hill commemorating the great battle for modern civilization.

ANNUAL PHOTOGRAPHER

THERE was a time," the photographer mused, "when visits to the photographer were essential in the family routine. In those days I would often hear a mother say:

"'It is just a year since I brought Willie to be photographed. I bring him every year so I shall have a picture of him if anything happens to him. I'll never forget my aunt who lost two children and didn't have a picture of either. It has been a lesson to me.'

"As every woman seemed to have had a relative who neglected periodic visits to the photographer and suffered remorse afterward, I was sure of annual calls from mother in those days. We would have Willie as soon as he could sit up, and Willie again and again, his succeeding brothers and sisters taken with him.

"Men, too, were more susceptible a few years ago to this argument that there should be photographs for consolation purposes. Today we do not see many men before our cameras. They are brought in as bridegrooms, and if their pictures are needed for publicity purposes we see them again, but never to figure in the family album. I find them regularly in the snapshots I develop, but these lack formality of posing, and it is the formality that keeps men away.

"The snapshot camera has changed the character of my business entirely. We are as busy as ever, perhaps busier, but we do more printing than actual photographing. Pictures are costing people more, but the amounts are in driblets. A few cents today for a roll of films, more pennies another day for printing, every few days from January till December, and the sum reaches larger proportions than the cost of taking Willie to a photographer once a year."

Avoid pain by seeing your dentist in time

Don't let negligence keep you away from your dentist until pain drives you to him. Go at least twice a year for thorough month inspection. He will help you avoid pain and trouble by keeping your teeth and gums healthy.

Pyorrhea seizes
FOUR out of FIVE

Remember that four out of five who pass the age of forty, and thousands even younger, contract pyorrhea through carelessness. These are dental statistics.

But you can be the lucky one out of five if you will exercise ordinary precaution. Let your dentist inspect your mouth at least twice a year and brush teeth and gums twice a day with Forhan's.

Pyorrhea steals upon you like a thief in the night. First come tender bleeding gums. Then gums recede and teeth loosen in their sockets. Poison seeps through the system often bringing on neuritis, rheumatism or worse.

If you already have pyorrhea see your dentist for treatment and start using Forhan's. If you still are free from this scourge, brush your teeth and gums regularly with Forhan's as a wise precaution.

If used regularly and in time Forhan's checks or prevents pyorrhea. It contains Forhan's Pyorrhea Liquid which dentists use in their treatment of this infection.

Forhan's firms the gums and keeps them pink and healthy. This pleasant tasting dentifrice cleans teeth thoroughly and wards off decay. Start using Forhan's at once. At all druggists', 35c and 60c in tubes.

The fate of Boston had been uncertain until the first week in March, when Washington, by one of his most brilliant strokes, had seized Dorchester Heights and brought the British positions under direct fire. Howe had left Boston on March 17, which was ever after to be a double holiday for a large number of the citizens, and ten days later had sailed away on his famous voyage to Halifax. Washington had ridden into the Massachusetts capital on March 20.

The period from April 11 to April 25 was, therefore, not one of battles. It must have seemed, however, what it truly was—the lull that precedes a storm. With Boston in his hands, Washington decided to transfer his army to New York, and this troop movement, beginning on April 4, was in process from then onward until April 28.

It was not an easy movement for a comparatively raw army; and though no untoward incident marked it, one can still see in it the forceful hand of the seasoned commander. All during these two weeks the roads and lanes of Southern New England were crowded with columns of marching men—farmers from the adjoining Colonies, fishermen from Marblehead, Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket; riflemen from Virginia and Maryland.

They were marching, many of them, to wounds and death; all of them to hardship; almost all to glory. The picture, at this distance, has its idyllic touch: soft April skies, hillsides turning green, fruit trees beginning to blossom, boys following the troops through little towns, girls coming out of farmhouses along the line of march with jugs of cider, people turning out to cheer, new levies joining the ranks.

It was easy to forget, as one gazed upon these weather-beaten faces, upon the rows of bayonets, upon the smoothbore that hit squirrels and men so accurately, that these men would have to fight the best troops of Europe.

Ready for Hard Campaigning

At Norwich, Conn., Washington loaded the greater part of his army into boats and sent them on to New York by water. By this means he saved them many miles of marching, expedited their movements and landed them in the neighborhood of New York City in excellent trim for the hard campaigning he expected would follow.

The army was an army of talkers. That aspect had been remarked upon at the very beginning, when it first assembled at the siege of Boston. It had, at that time, some of the revolutionary enthusiasm that was to inspire the soldiers of Napoleon when they tramped through Europe overthrowing monarchies, setting up military despotisms and preaching the rights of man. Washington's victorious legions, passing through New England, were propaganda for liberty and independence. Even the privates had read Tom Paine.

So the army, moving west and south, met the North Carolina resolution flying north. Between the two of them the turn the American Revolution was to take was determined. From that time on independence was to be the battle cry, even though not all the politicians were as yet convinced.

Another army, then upon the seas, had something to do with this drift of opinion. It consisted of Hessians and Brunswickers, hired to recruit the British forces. The Colonists had heard of their arrival, and now, in April, 1776, were waiting the newcomers with something less than pleasure. British subjects, enlisted in a British army, seemed to them a normal part of a war against the British crown. Mercenaries were birds of another color.

The Continental Congress, in session in what the British called the "rebel capital" at Philadelphia, was acting more and more like the Legislature of an independent Government—or perhaps it would be better to say, in view of all that was to happen, of a league of independent Governments. The Revolution was still in its honeymoon period. Enthusiasm was still high—the horrors of war had not been felt over a large portion of the country; factional quarrels were still relatively unimportant.

Congress had raised troops; was issuing money, as well as borrowing funds; had licensed privateers to prey upon British commerce. On April 6 it had thrown open its ports to the commerce of the world, with the single exception of Great Britain and her allies. Thus the old "Navigation acts," the galling symbols of British control over the economic life of America, were at last thrown into the discard.

What this meant would require a complete history of American colonization to explain. In fact, it was soon to release the energies of a seafaring people; was not only to inspire the fighting spirit that gave so many brilliant victories on the sea, but also to send the American flag into every ocean and to almost every coast in the world.

Wordsworth has written of the early days of the French Revolution: "Bliss was it in that dawn to be alive." He might have said almost the same of America as it was in April, 1776. Some of the most glorious pages of its history had still to be written; but so, too, had some of the saddest. Valley Forge was the name of an obscure hamlet. Benedict Arnold was a revered patriot. Germantown, Brandywine, Saratoga, Yorktown caused no heart to flutter.

Bayonets passing under the New England apple blossoms; farmers and mechanics reading Tom Paine by candlelight after the day's work was done; Carolina gentlemen unanimously putting their necks into a halter; royal ex-Governors sailing up and down in sloops of war and waiting their chance to march back into their capitals with flags flying, and, meanwhile, a nation slowly coming into consciousness of its nationality—that was America in April, 1776.

FRANCE PROUD OF HER LEGION

Palmes Universitaires, usually known as the Palmes Académiques, which were intended for educators and their kind. The recipients wear a purple ribbon. There is the Médaille Militaire, denoted by a yellow ribbon with green edges. There is the Mérite Agricole, green with red edges, given to farmers and agricultural scientists. There are, naturally, many forms of war medals.

In the colonies the Third Republic has created various orders, such as those of the Black Star and the Dragon of Annam. But these are, with the possible exception of the Médaille Militaire, minor decorations, and the National Order of the Legion of Honor keeps its precedence on ceremonious occasions.

The Legion is composed of Chevaliers, Officers, Commanders, Grand Officers and of supreme dignitaries such as Presidents, Marshals and others who have received the Grande Croix. The Grand Master of the order is the Chief of State. The supreme functionary is the Grand Chancellor—at the present moment General Dubail, a former Governor of Paris.

The decorations consist of a star with five double points surmounted by a wreath of oak and laurel. For the Chevaliers it is in silver with white enamel. For the Officers, Commanders and Grande Croix it is in gold. Its size varies in accordance with rank. The Chevaliers wear it attached by a red ribbon on the left breast. The Officers add a rosette to their ribbon. The Commanders carry it hanging from a ribbon around their necks. The Grand Officers wear it on the right side with diamonds. The Grands Croix wear a sash over their shoulders, and also a plaque.

The headquarters of the Legion are in the Rue de Solférina by the Quai d'Orsay. The palace is an excellent example of the elegant French architecture of the eighteenth century. Originally built by Rousseau for the Prince de Salm Kyrburg, it was raffled in the Revolution and was won by a wigmaker's apprentice. Under the Directoire it was inhabited by the celebrated Mme. de Staël, who gave her remarkable receptions here. Later it was bought by Napoleon to serve as the Grande Chancellerie.

It figures again in history, for during the rising of the Communards in 1871, after the French defeat in the Franco-Prussian War, it was burned down. The members of the order raised funds by subscription and it was restored by Mortier.

In it is a museum containing documents and portraits of the best known members of the order. Among those who in modern days have reached the highest rank are the two Cambons, who were Ambassadors in Berlin and in London at the outbreak of the war; Jusserand, who represented France in Washington; Poincaré, who was at the Elysée during the dark days; Joffre and Foch and Pétain, the three greatest soldiers of the republic; Lyautey, the maker of Morocco, and Lépine, the unforgettable Prefect of Police who, like Haroun-al-Raschid, went constantly among the people.

But it would be invidious to pick out other names. Suffice it to say that here is an almost complete gallery of the men who have made French history in our generation, and of those who, in earlier generations, have contributed to the renown of France. There is a sense in which the Legion of Honor sums up the annals of France in the nineteenth and the first quarter of the twentieth century.

From the American point of view it should be noted that nearly all those citizens of the United States who gave extraordinary services to the sister republic across the seas are on the records of the Legion of Honor. You will find them, Generals and Ambassadors, humble soldiers and diplomatists, emissaries of all ranks, men and women who wholeheartedly devoted themselves to the great cause, believing it to be the cause of civilization. Here are writers and Red Cross workers, painters and poets, bankers and business men, Foreign Legionaires and fliers in the Lafayette Squadron, taking their honorable place as Chevaliers, Officers, Commanders and Grand Officers.

It is something of which America can be proud, that just as the names of Benjamin Franklin and Lafayette are coupled so the names of Americans and Frenchmen figure side by side on the roll of the Legion of Honor.

WORLD'S FASTEST GAME

HOCKEY-ON-ICE has been described as the fastest game in the world, but that honor has long been claimed for Spanish "pelotta," one of the oldest pastimes known. The Basques, inhabiting the western end of the Pyrenees and believed to descend from the early Iberian race, were indulging in this sport when Martial mentioned it in his "Epigrams."

The ball is made of hard rubber, bound with yarn, covered with leather and can be hurled with such speed as to bounce from the wall (about 30 feet high and 55 feet wide) for a distance of 240 feet. Professionals in Spain often play three a side. They employ a "chisters," a kind of wickerwork bat, 3 feet long and strapped to the wrist. With the "chisters" the ball is caught in a narrow groove and returned to the wall with such speed that the opposing players watch the ball strike and rush to the spot they expect it to reach.

Only players possessed of keen sight, speed and agility can hope to shine in the Basque game of "pelottas."

ALL FRANCE IS PROUD OF THE LEGION OF HONOR

Citizens of the Republic Regard the Decoration as the State's Supreme Reward of Public Service

By SIBLEY HUDDLESTON

THE desire for decorations is an amiable human weakness. France had no sooner, by a revolution, abolished all distinction between men, than she decided that a new order of chivalry was necessary.

Dukes and barons might well disappear or, rather, become ci-devants; the nobility might be deprived of its prerogatives; the Frenchman, whatever his birth or station, might become a simple citoyen, nevertheless, despite doctrines of equality, the deep-rooted desire for distinctions had soon to be satisfied. Napoleon, who understood the human heart, did not hesitate to establish the Legion of Honor, which is now the most famous body of its kind.

Napoleon had theories of government that were partly cynical and partly poetical. He knew that many men, like the hero of Browning's poem, could be won over by a title, and would render devoted services "just for a ribbon to stick in their coat." He went, of course, much further, and founded a new aristocracy, with princes, dukes and barons, and so forth, on an even larger scale than the ancien régime. His aristocracy was ephemeral, as was the aristocracy of the Restoration, and although the counts and the marquesses still figure in international marriage ceremonies, they have no longer as Frenchmen any legal right to any other title than that of monsieur.

The Government recently decided formally to repudiate titles, and the 60,000 "aristocrats" who belong to the ancien régime, the Napoleonic period, or to the Restoration, are, so far as official recognition is concerned, non-existent. Yet, even in the Republic—indeed, particularly in the Republic—the Legion of Honor flourishes, and the ambition of every Frenchman, and of many Americans who live in France, is to wear a narrow strip of red ribbon in the buttonhole.

Long Lists of Nominees

Not long ago it was proposed that on grounds of economy the recipients of this honor should not look to the State to present them with the insignia of their rank. They should be asked to supply themselves with the appropriate decorations. It has become an expensive business to furnish the members of the Legion of Honor with stars and plaques.

Hardly a month goes by without a long list in the newspapers of civilians and military men who have been appointed, or who have been promoted, in the Legion. It was intended that the membership should be strictly limited. Napoleon fixed the full count at about 6,500, but the civilians alone today, according to the statistics, reach 30,000, while the soldiers who are distinguished in this way run to well over 100,000.

In instituting the order in 1802, Napoleon said: "I am uniting under one interest all classes of the nation. It is a deep-rooted institution which will long survive my system." He did not foresee that it would be cheapened by excessive awards. Today it goes to officers almost automatically, while civilians obtain it whenever they fill certain posts, whenever they render certain services, or whenever a Minister wishes to be generous—and Ministers always wish to be generous.

Each Government department, it is true, has only a limited number of the coveted decorations at its disposal, but there have been many abuses, and every special occasion is taken to draw up an extraordinary list of recipients. The last big distribution occurred in connection with the International Exhibition of Decorative Arts. Parliament is becoming restive and is endeavoring to put on the brake. Yet the stream is inexhaustible, and is likely, with perpetual changes of Government, with successive teams of Ministers, to increase in volume.

We should not, however, fall into exaggeration. "Not decorated?" said the French detective. "Then we'll soon find him!" It is a popular joke, and certainly if the process continues it will be true to say that the real distinction will be to possess no distinction. The comic sheets demand from time to time that a bill should be passed as follows:

"That all Frenchmen above the age of 21, and all Frenchmen on reaching the age of 21, shall, unless they have been convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude, be received into the ranks of the Legion of Honor."

This kind of facetiousness should not be taken too seriously as a criticism of an order that has included many remarkable servants of France, and by arousing a harmless ambition stimulates the French to a noble rivalry in civic service.

Napoleon knew his countrymen exceedingly well. They love these little rewards. They are at heart romantic. One is even tempted to say, in spite of the strain of realism that sometimes manifests itself, that they are the supreme and incorrigible romantics of the world. It is just 100 years ago that the Romantic movement, properly so called, began with the trumpet blast of Victor Hugo, and although French literature has since given birth to realism, the prevailing tendency of the French is none the less romantic.

French Politics Romantic

French philosophy is indisputably romantic, especially that of the last fifty years, which has culminated in mysticism. French politics is unmistakably romantic, and if occasionally a statesman, using the big abstract word Justice, leads the French into an adventure that seems to have an essentially practical purpose, they quickly recover their idealism, and enthusiastically believe in Progress and Brotherhood and an all-embracing Internationalism.

This is not a digression. It is part of the Frenchmen's love of what they call the "panache," which in everyday life is expressed in many ways, but in no more striking way than the sporting of a red ribbon in public. They know how to make fun of their panache while still delighting in it. They are happy when they can dress up.

Think of the carnivals on the Riviera, with their battles of flowers, their flamboyant cars, their processions of quaintly clad figurants! Think of the promenades of Mi-Carême, when the boulevards are alive with silk and velvet taken from old wardrobes, and queens of a day are drawn through the streets on gorgeous flower-bedecked thrones. Then, too, there are the multitudinous student jaunts, the frequent fancy dress balls at the Opéra or at Bal Bullier, the grandiloquent Comédie Française, the ceaseless showing-off of little white-robed maidens who stroll proudly in the crowded thoroughfares for a whole day after their first communion! There is also the symbolic daily renewal of the Flame at the Unknown Warrior's tomb under the Arc de Triomphe.

Thus it was that, in the twelfth century, a number of orders of chivalry, of which the most celebrated is the Order of the Templars, sprang up in France. They were modeled on the earlier Celtic orders, such as the Knights of the Round Table, whose story has been told as well by French writers as by Tennyson. The Templars particularly distinguished themselves in Palestine. They were the soul of the crusades. Afterward these military and religious associations, zealous, chivalric, heroic, became so rich and powerful that they were regarded as a menace to the kings of the Middle Ages.

Philippe le Bel seized their vast possessions, caused their Grand Master to be arrested and instituted proceedings against them. By the beginning of the fourteenth century they were suppressed by the Pope at the instigation of the French King. The unity of France, then being achieved, would, it was contended, have been jeopardized by a society that was a law unto itself. There is, of course, today no such antagonism between the State and the modern order patterned on that of the Templars; the present order is fashioned and controlled by the State, and represents, in theory at least, the cream of the citizenry.

So numerous did the members become that from time to time it was decided to create not new orders but special decorations with which the Government might recompense military or civil merit. There are the

LEGENDARY RAQUEL MELLER COMES TO US

She in Whom All Men See Women They Have Loved Has Dared at Last to Cross the Trackless Sea She Feared

By H. I. BROCK

HERE are legendary ladies who are dead, but whose spirit cannot be laid with the contrite dust—like Helen of Troy, who remains contemporary the theme that frontiemen prelike Cleopatra, in whose name are practiced (in the movies) all wicked Wiles of Women. And are legendary ladies who are even in the body of this flesh—are, as only a little while ago, erday there were Bernhardt and e on the great stage of the tragic ss. And there is still Raquel er of the music halls.

rhardt and Duse are not more ndary now that they are dead, the Spanish woman from Cata- (where the language consists uch strange noises) is not less ndary because, at the moment, ericans who have been stomed to see her gloriously surrounded by sights of Paris, may mit themselves to her liar magic without go- further than New York. 'hether, after this de- t into the Capital of Commonplace (as a dious foreigner called great city), Raquel er can keep on being ndary is a question. in that question lies aps the real reason the singing woman— cannot particularly —has delayed so long coming among us, tak- refuge in such frivolous rts as that she cannot re her lovers or her dogs her glass house full of , or that the trackless, ving ocean terrifies her who was brought up a Spanish sea coast and sang to rough Catalan ermen in their drinking es along the wave-buf- shore!)

here is sound precedent. erybody knows that orge Bernard Shaw has olutely resisted tempta- to come to America, an Patriarch of Thea- dom Playwrights, be- use he fears that to do so ld shatter the precious ma that is, so far, all Shaw we have on our e. And some have ught, to go back a bit— t the Bernhardt and e legends were a little ained by being embodied en.

However that may be, e mischief, if any, is e. Raquel Meller is not Paris, where all good ericans may be a little and all Americans are to be more than a little d, but right here in New rk, where we are our ay-lay sensible selves, e appeal from Philip ber—on Gallic glamour—to Philip sober—on Ameri- reality, has been made. hat Raquel Meller really may presently appear more dary.

Meantime, there is the legendary man, who is more real than any man can be; the legendary woman who has become a part of the consciousness of so many Americans of others who haunt the places where the world amuses itself. You see one of them in Paris. He tells you flatly that if you have not seen Raquel Meller you have seen nothing at all Paris. You meet one of them back from Shanghai. All the enchantments of the East have not banished the bright magic of Raquel. She is only a music hall singer, if you will, and even one who is badly, but she is woman enrobed in artist, as only in the very greatest artists she is embodied.

That is, in the artist who is Raquel for all women. So runs the legend of this Catalan girl, who may or may not have climbed over a convent wall and run away to sing to the sailors before she was 12, but who has certainly bewitched the wise ones of the world with her singing since. It is as good a legend as Helen's own, whose private life has been the concern of all the world's best society since the day she welcomed young Paris so effusively to the house of her husband Menalaus.

This it seems—upon the accumulated testimony of the bewitched—is the way the legend has been gathering grace and glory since first the creature came up out of Barcelona and Seville and Madrid and began life. She sang the song all followers of the legend remember, the one called "The Procession," which once fell under the ban of the Holy Church as impious—only quite simply Raquel of the legend went to Rome and got the ban lifted by the Pope himself. Once again there was no doubt that the person the song was about was the person who was singing—she and nobody else.

When she was gone there appeared in her place a hariot, bleary and bloated, weary and worn out at 40. And she sang the legendary song, "Flor del Mal," the "Flower of Evil." And still the woman who sang was the woman the song was about—who and no other. Again it was the same when a young girl replaced the hariot. But she was the little girl—La Violetera, the violet girl—who sang the legendary song of that name, and was the little girl herself—she who (to take up the fateful legend again) was picking violets in a wood when a storm came up with thunder and rain and a flash blinded her. So that it was a long time before she could see again, and even then it was not till after a pilgrimage all the way across the sea—Mare Nostrum—from Spain to Italy—from Barcelona to Siena, where the saints are efficacious, and where the sight of that little girl was restored.

Also it was a stormy voyage and likewise legendary. For it is because of that voyage in a little wave-tossed ship with pink sails that Raquel Meller dreads the gray sea and cannot quite lay by her terrors of the Atlantic, though the Leviathan is her ferryboat. Observe how, after the manner of legends, it is all interwoven; the misty story of the Catalan girl who was born some thirty years ago to parents that she never really knew, and who was set lacemaking in a convent with a convenient ladder over the wall—and the vivid seeming reality of the multiple creature in the singing woman seen across the footlights.

It was one who holds very firmly to the legend of Raquel—one who whom youth has abandoned unsatisfied—all these things are included in the repertory and must be taken from the full armory with genius and discretion, so that each character may appear perfect in herself.

As has been said, this is the legend; New York is now face to face with the reality, which can never quite equal the legend full grown and full blown, as this one is. The point is that to create a legend is a miracle and to create one that looms up over the horizon of the world like the pillar of smoke and fire out of which the Afrite came stalking up out of the sea to the two unlucky Sultans in the Arabian Nights—the Afrite with the stolen bride in the glass case—to create such a legend out of a music hall turn of the simplest sort is an achievement not given to many artists in a century.

It was inevitable that Raquel Meller should be brought to America, just as it was inevitable that Jenny Lind should be brought to America.

Raquel Meller has resisted importation longer than any other foreign artist of equal réclame—any artist, that is, except the canny Mr. Shaw of the Adelphi. Quaintly, characteristically, however, Raquel Meller has not resisted the two Americas equally. She consented quite a while ago to forsake Paris and her aviary and go to Buenos Aires, where she had a most successful engagement and where the legend gained some local Argentine color.

It was in Buenos Aires that Raquel was married—as her press agent says, "temporarily." The husband, who thus becomes legendary, like everything that touches this extraordinary creature, was one Carillo, a Guatemalan and an artist, not unknown in Paris. It appears that, after the manner of actresses' husbands, he became husband-manager of his wife. But Raquel would not stand managing. She ran off to Lima to set up on her own among those delightful Peruvians who must sympathize with ballad singers because it was a ballad singer of their own who furnished Offenbach with an operetta, "La Perichole."

To Lima the husband followed Raquel, who was described as incorrigible or mad. But the good Peruvians listened to her dramatic recital of her wrongs, to her fierce artistic resentment at the outrage committed upon such a one as she by trying to manage her at all. The climax of her defense, it is said, was this: "Your Honor, if I am insane, this man has made me so."

It was said with a quivering finger pointed at the villain of the piece; with a voice thrillingly vibrant and an eye flashing fire. That settled the whole affair. The Judge took her into his own house under the protection of his own family, and Raquel—who in the legend is as devout as she is unconventional—was grateful and content.

So the legend leaves her till she is ready to come back to Paris. After that it brings her with her dogs, who must have all first-class cabin privileges, aboard the Leviathan, which is a legendary ship—or a ship with a past at least. When Raquel arrived in New York, nobody was quite sure whether she had left her legend behind her, like Bo Peep's sheep, or had managed to bring it along first-class like the dogs—who are a part of it. Time has already begun, as this is read, to write the answer.

Raquel Meller.

It is, indeed, a great magic—and I have heard other men say much the same of the Spanish woman, adding that it was a rare gift, but that there was also a rare art in using it. For the good and evil in women that lay spells upon the imagination, the sweet appeals of youth, the bold audacities of brazen hussies, the subtle fascinations of ripe-lipped experience, the contagion of wild desire, the perfidious flatteries of those who have his chosen haunts in Paris of all the world—who said that the magic of the woman was the greatest of all magic, because every man who saw her and heard her sing her little songs was mightily aware in her of all the women that he had ever loved. As for the women, they knew that this woman was every woman any man had ever loved. Therefore they were all consumed with curiosity.

THE MISSOURI PUT TO WORK

General Pike, a side-wheeler, came up the Mississippi. She was the first steamboat to land at St. Louis. The West got the growing pains. Settlements sprouted and transportation became a vital issue. A brave steamboat attempted the currents of the Missouri. The try was successful, and a fleet left St. Louis immediately under command of Major Stephen H. Long. This was a scientific and military expedition. Instructions were to proceed as far up the river as Yellowstone and to establish military posts.

The Indians were awed by this strange ship, which had a huge serpent painted in a wiggling manner along her entire length. Its mouth was blood red and steam escaped through its wooden teeth in a dragonish sizzling hiss. These tricks proved effective propaganda.

The Missouri River was the trade highway to the Northwest. Supplies for troops and settlers were carried up by steam as high as the Dakotas, and precious cargoes of fur were floated back. In the heyday of steamboats magnificent floating palaces plied these waters. Inside all was luxurious. There were the softest of Brussels carpets. Each boat had a ladies' cabin, a piano, a string band. The evenings were made gay with Virginia reels. Outside, however, all was grim, for the boat had to be prepared to withstand assaults from Indians. Each vessel had two brass cannons, one fore and one aft, and was ready to make war at any moment, day or night.

The stream was treacherous. After sundown they used to anchor in midchannel and wait until dawn. Much of the food and fuel was obtained by hunting parties.

The crew generally consisted of first-class captain, two clerks, two pilots, four engineers, two mates, a watchman, a lamplighter, a porter, a carpenter, a painter, a steward, four cooks, two chambermaids, a deck crew of forty men, a cabin crew, twenty general colored help, a barber and barkeeper. Wages were high. The pilot divided profits with the owner—$1,000 to $1,500 a month. The "Pilots' Benevolent Association" controlled salaries, and kept them up by allowing only a few to "learn the river." Pilots were Napoleons. Poker was the favorite river sport.

Many boats paid back on investment in the first year. They became so numerous that it was not unusual to see as many as five or six lying at a landing. But it did not last, for soon the railroad came galloping across country.

There was a brief revival, in 1862, when gold was discovered in Montana. People rushed off to make fortunes, Florida fashion, and the only way to get there was via the Missouri River. A first-class passage from St. Louis to Fort Benton cost $300. Enormous profits were made—$20,000 to $40,000 a trip. One old boat took in $80,000 in a single voyage.

Wild ducks are the only constant navigators now. They come yearly in great flocks. There are a few tiny drifting shanties, tramp houseboats, which float aimlessly downstream. These ragged river rats tie to the banks here and there, putting up a temporary willow matting fence for the cattle. They are the river gypsies, driving their lean animals along the bank as they drift seaward.

But the tide has turned again. Engineering work goes on. The Missouri is being trained for national transportation. The time is at hand when she must stop playing and shoulder the work of the great valley she has produced.

OUR DRAMA ABROAD

THE American invasion of the British stage has, it seems, ancient roots. "The Thundering Herd," recently seen at a Manchester theatre, was advertised as "the greatest thrill since ''Way Down East."

To the man who is 35 and DISSATISFIED

WE DELIBERATELY pass over a large proportion of the readers of the New York Times in order to address this page directly to men in their thirties.

There is a powerful reason for this.

The dissatisfied man of twenty-five is not usually in a difficult position. He has few responsibilities; he can move easily; he can take a chance.

But from thirty-five to forty is the age of crisis. In these years a man either marks out the course which leads to definite advancement or settles into permanent unhappiness. There are thousands who see the years passing with a feeling close to desperation.

They say

"I must make more money," but they have no plan for making more.

"There is no future for me," but they see no other opening.

"I am managing to scrape along now, but how in the world will I ever educate my children?"

To men whose minds are constantly—and often almost hopelessly—at work on such thoughts, this page is addressed. It is devoid of rhetoric. It is plain, blunt common sense.

Let us get one thing straight at the very start—

We do not want you unless you want us

There is the dissatisfied man who will do something, and the one who won't. We feel sorry for the latter, but we cannot afford to enrol him. We have a reputation for training men who—as a result of our training—earn large salaries and hold responsible positions. That reputation must be maintained. We can do much, but we cannot make a man succeed who will not help himself. So rest assured you will not be unduly urged into anything.

Now what can happen to a dissatisfied man who acts? We wish we could answer that question by letting you read the letters that come to us in every mail.

Here is one, for example—from Victor F. Stine of Hagerstown, Md. "I was floundering around without a definite goal," he says, "and was seriously considering a Civil Service appointment." (You can tell from that how hopeless he was. A Civil Service appointment means a few thousand dollars a year for life.)

"The study of the Course and Service was not a hardship," he continues, "rather it was a real pleasure because it is so practical and inspiring thruout." (The method of the Course makes it practical and inspiring. We teach business not alone thru study but thru practice. You learn executive thinking by meeting executive problems and making executive decisions.) "Added self-confidence and increased vision gained from the Course," says Mr. Stine, "enabled me to accept and discharge added responsibilities successfully."

He is Secretary now of the organization in which he was then a dissatisfied cog.

"Forging Ahead in Business"

For a man like Mr. Stine we can achieve really great results. By learning, thru the Modern Business Course and Service, the necessary fundamental facts of all departments of business, he insures his success. His judgment, his value, increase. The closed roads open. The worries disappear.

We attach a coupon to this advertisement. It is a little thing, but our experience proves that it separates out of every hundred readers the few who can act. If you are one of these let us mail you that wonderful little book, "Forging Ahead in Business." For thousands it has turned dissatisfaction into immediate progress.

"THE CITY THAT WAS"—20 YEARS LATER

the chill clear dawn of April 18, 1906, that San Francisco took to the street in pajamas. In the better residence sections the long rows of wooden houses stood secure save for toppled chimneys and dislocated steps, with occasional cracks in the cement walks. The business district lost cornices and a good deal of plate glass.

In the midst of this fancied solidity there appeared masses of ruin which people gaped at in silence. They were brick shells, many of them churches, a few theatres and a number of brick blocks or apartments—all of new construction. The older brick buildings stood without a crack. Even after the fire, the eight-story walls of the old Palace Hotel were left so sound that engineers recommended their use in the new hotel.

The possibility of rowdyism and crime were early foreseen by General Funston when, at sunrise, he stood on the heights of Nob Hill and studied the ribbons of thin gray smoke rising in the morning calm above the gas works mist to the south. He sought the police chief, ordered out all troops on the bay, sent for dynamite and began to remove army stores without waiting for instructions from Washington. The law of the loaded army rifle gave refugees a comforting sense of security in those terrible days.

On Nob Hill the conference was held which resulted in the famous Committee of Fifty. Crowds began early to climb this acropolis of wealth to view the progress of the fire. None imagined that the hill itself would be swept before another day. Strangely matter-of-fact were these crowds, out to see and exchange news. Never a sign of hysteria, just curiosity to learn what might happen next.

The fire advanced slowly. A slight head wind sprang up in the afternoon, which caused optimists to go about spreading the report that the fire would be turned back in its tracks. Only those fortunate enough to own vehicles were able to move any of their bulkier possessions. Most people took what they could carry, if anything, and trusted to luck.

Day and night a steady stream of refugees trudged west to the parks and the vacant lots. Some had only the clothes on their backs. Others lugged bundles, or pulled trunks with ropes, or pushed carts or sewing machines piled high. Roller skates were fastened to the ends of poles as improvised wheelbarrows.

As evening came, the whole Peninsula glowed red and the sea ran crimson under the reflection of the flames, cast down from the great pack of boiling smoke overhead. Dead cinders and pieces of charred board fell from the sky clear to Land's End. At intervals, mounted soldiers or citizens in horse carts or motorcars came by, shouting warnings. The earth would quiver under a blast of dynamite, and showers of cinders and dead coals would fall upon the refugees. It was depressing to visit the evacuated quarter in the glare of night, using a police pass to cross the line of vigilant sentries with loaded Krags, to see streets deserted and doors swinging wide.

Dawn revealed new streams of the homeless, wearily lugging parcels and dragging trunks, moving towards the western parks and the sand dunes. Sentries turned back those who sought to reach the ferries by way of North Beach. The ferry building itself, waiting rooms, halls and arcades, was packed with refugees, among them a group of Chinese quarantined for smallpox.

Twice victory seemed within reach of the heroic fire fighters, who numbered thousands of firemen, policemen, soldiers, sailors, guardsmen and civilian volunteers. But the wind veered. Not until the end of the three days did dynamiting, back-firing and the pumping of sewage end the suspense. The luckier folk moved back to homes on the edge of the fire line, but some 250,000 out of a total population of about 400,000 still remained in camp, sheltered and fed by the army.

A relief corporation was formed under the chairmanship of James D. Phelan, in which the Red Cross and Citizens' Relief Committee were united. One of the first purchases made from relief funds was for mechanics' tools, so that rebuilding might start. Grants were made to small businesses. Little eating-stands and lunch-wagons helped to relieve the strain on the breadline. By Fall cottages had replaced the tents of the official camps. Tenants bought these little huts at nominal prices on small monthly instalments, being encouraged to move them upon their burned lots. This plan bred self-respect and industry.

There were at first the spice of novelty and the stimulus of adventure in sleeping in parks or cooking in open streets. Fillmore, the improvised shopping centre, was as busily picturesque as a mining town. Then came the grind of reconstruction, the pressure of new and difficult problems, the cold realization of the tremendous work ahead.

In the torment of those days thousands of men in khaki and laced boots tramped daily among the city's bones, choked with the ashes that the Summer trades whipped into clouds. Through mists of driven ashes could be seen laborers with handkerchiefs tied across nose and mouth, painfully chipping mortar from old bricks for the new building that was to arise.

The Tenacity of San Francisco

Ash-dusted, wheezing horses toiled with lowered heads over the broken, littered pavement, carting débris. Long trains of flat cars laden with brick trash creaked and squealed over spur tracks in what was once the centre of local gayety and fashion. Nerves and health gave way at times under the strain—but not tenacity. The reconstruction felt a fierce sort of gratification in fighting ashes, if only to show the world that San Francisco was not bluffing.

Everybody had a hand in reconstruction. The Citizens' Committee appointed groups of distinguished men to work on fire protection, building regulations, street planning, sanitation, laws to restore burned records. Consultants commanding the highest fees gave their services freely. And so mighty were their names that the ring politicians accepted their recommendations with the best possible grace.

While the downtown was being cleared of débris, Van Ness Avenue, where the flames were checked, grew into a fashionable shopping street. Old dwellings were converted into restaurants. Gayety revived. Insurance money was coming in. Wages were high and contracts plentiful. But fate was soon to deal still more blows. A large share of easy money was sunk by visionary investors in ill-advised subdivision schemes down the peninsula, promoted by advertising land agents and high-pressure salesmen. As if the panic of 1907 was not enough, a big savings bank failed, ruining its trusting depositors.

While the city was struggling to re-establish commerce, the bubonic plague broke out. American and foreign ports quarantined ships from San Francisco. So the people sprayed their clothes with oil of lavender to ward off the bubonic flea and set themselves to exterminating rats, the flea's carriers.

In the midst of all this trouble the so-called graft trials became a national sensation. A dramatic thing, this indictment of proud millionaires along with greedy city officials who, as a South-of-Marketer expressed it, slept with their hands out of the window for fear of missing something. These prosecutions started a new and wholesome movement in politics, yet they also produced internal feuds from which San Francisco was years in recovering. Through all these and a hundred other difficulties the city kept on undaunted.

Back in the gold rush days, when San Francisco was a crude huddle of tents, shacks and beached ships, a French engineer of genius planned diagonal avenues, circles and streets that followed the contour of the steep hills. This plan was ridiculed as too fancy by the practical pioneers, who took a ruler and laid out a checker board. Heights to the north had streets with step-side-walks on their declivitous sides.

After the fire this Frenchman's vision recurred to a group of men gifted with imagination, who saw in the ruin an opportunity for repairing an old error. They retained Daniel H. Burnham, artist and engineer. Burnham's plans aroused the enthusiasm of all except the affected property owners, who feared they might not be properly compensated for street cuts and enlargements. These organised to prevent the adoption of his beautiful and convenient arrangement.

Something remained, however, of the Burnham ideal. A tunnel through a small mountain opened up a new residence tract, whose promotors placed its future in the hands of landscape artists. And certain Burnham ideas were carried out in the old areas. Nob Hill was tunneled, to the great advantage of traffic. The vertical streets along Pacific Heights were terraced with flower gardens and zigzagging steps.

The new industrial growth has been intelligently provided for. The park system has been extended. San Francisco has now a true civic centre—a lovely square about which are grouped the handsome and classic new City Hall, Civic Auditorium, Public Library and State Court and office building.

Twenty years after the world wrote her epitaph in tears and seventy-seven since the first gold hunters pitched their tents upon the sands of a Mexican mission San Francisco feels that her destiny is just beginning to unfold. She may still be "serene," as the early poet sang, but no longer "indifferent to fate." And a San Franciscan never looks at towering Manhattan without thinking, "That's the way San Francisco will look twenty years from now."

WINKS IN THE SUBWAY

An unmarried-looking woman arose from her seat in the subway indignantly. She turned as if to report something to the guard, and then, noting the smiles on the faces of those around her, thought better of it and walked into the car ahead. The man sitting next to her had fallen asleep, and his head, nodding this way and that, every nod accompanied by a troubled look on his face, had finally settled on the shoulder of the unmarried-looking woman. It was a round and comfortable shoulder, and a look came on his face similar to that which you will see on the face of a sleeping baby when its fond mother says, "He's dreaming of the angels."

His expression of peace did not remain long, for when his pillow was snatched abruptly away he was awakened with a jerk. Looking startled, then sheepish as he realized what he had done, he settled back in his seat, and again his head began to go to the right and then to the left.

Women nap on the subway in a fashion all their own. They may nod, but the nod is up and down, so that at no time is the shoulder of the man sitting next in danger. Nor is the sleep so sound; never is a woman so lost to her surroundings that her mouth drops open. She will fold her hands tightly across her shopping bag or bundle, sit upright and close her eyes, looking dignified and at her best to the last.

There is a little nod, another nod, and she is off to Slumberland, but every nod is forward, with a backward movement. Never does it happen that the man on the left or the man on the right is startled by finding a woman's head resting confidingly on his shoulder. The sense of propriety never slumbers in the soul of the woman who is old enough to fall asleep on the subway.

BLAZING TRAILS!

Beacons of Goodwill!

Dotted here and there in prominent locations Trans-Lux advertising projectors will shortly spring into being. Each machine projecting in light a succession of beautifully pictured advertising slides with an effect equalling in beauty a cathedral window.

Beacons of goodwill indeed!

Magnificent color effects are made possible by the new Trans-Lux combination of projection and Daylight Screen framed in the machine. It is quite the most effective method yet devised for applying color and light to this business of display advertising.

These little machines, each winking out its advertising beam of good-will, will undoubtedly prove a tremendous sensation.

Each is in effect a friendly "urge" on the prospective customer suggesting in effective fashion its compelling message "buy my wares"!

Advertisers who are interested in this wonderful new medium of advertising, may address their inquiries to us at the address below.

"THE CITY THAT WAS"—20 YEARS LATER

San Francisco's Intrepid Spirit Triumphs Over Disaster And a New Metropolis Has Replaced the Old

By HERBERT C. THOMPSON

TWENTY years ago today the news flashed around the world that San Francisco had been destroyed by an earthquake. In the chaos of fire that followed, the press everywhere published laments for the city that had been. But it was not easy to consign a city of so lively a disposition to the mausoleum of history.

As usual in great disasters, time quickly disposed of many fanciful tales, such as that the Cliff House had fallen into the sea and that a tidal wave had submerged the peninsula, not to overlook the "history" hurried out by an enterprising Chicago publisher, whose imaginative artists pictured the shaft-like Spreckels Building tumbling into a chasm in Market Street.

Still, after discounting these absurdities, the truth was appalling enough. Five square miles of the city's core, comprising all of the manufacturing, wholesale, financial, shopping, hotel and amusement area and a large part of the home district lay in black and smoking ruins. Everything that contributed to life and livelihood was destroyed. It was not without reason that the skeptic world, looking upon this desolation, smiled at the splendid rebuilding project of the intrepid Citizens' Committee.

The New City Builds On

Whatever the obstacles, San Francisco determined upon re-establishment on the old lines. Nine years later a rebuilt city, still marked with splotches of ruin about its rim, showed what it thought of world wars by holding an international exhibition unsurpassed in beauty. Since that event development has proceeded on an increasingly magnificent scale.

Few gaps can be now found in the 508 burned squares. The Spreckels Building, which before the fire projected like a monument above the skyline, is now overshadowed by larger buildings. Business has increased many-fold. Greater San Francisco has today a population of about 1,200,000, if permitted to enroll the politically independent trans-bay cities, which are no longer content to be called suburbs. No other city or local group of cities on the Pacific Coast approaches this total.

There is a difference between new and old San Francisco—a difference that will widen with time. The disaster marked a new epoch. Will Irwin, in his classic, "The City That Was," hit upon more than an apt title. The city he described is gone. For several years the people, influenced by custom and sentiment, reproduced the old life as best they could. But fire or no fire, the old city had to go. The pioneers, with their dominating influence, were dying off. The Panama Canal broke the isolation of the Pacific. New blood and new influences were intruding.

Competition became keen. Pleasure had to be taken as relaxation from work rather than as frank joy in living. The amusing South-of-Market and North Beach types adopted standardised dress and conventional ways. Golf replaced duck hunting. And the apoplectic politician, radiating fumes of rum and black cigars, yielded to the aggressive salesmen who represent taxpayers' leagues.

Nowhere is this change better illustrated than in the new Chinatown, with its zinc pagoda roofs, flashing electric signs and chop-suey cafés. American movies have run out the majestic chronicle play and its boiler-factory music. Chinese flappers trip along the streets, ogled by Chinese sheiks, who are rivaled only by the Filipinos for collegiate dressing. Bret Harte's pigtailed "heathen Chinee" would be "peculiar" indeed today if thrown among his grandsons, who, wearing European dress and jaux haircuts, roll about in touring cars.

Structurally the new San Francisco is the most advanced city, engineers say, in the world. What other city can point to five square miles built anew within twenty years? And what other city has theatres, churches and public halls that could be turned upside down without cracking the plaster?

Fire has lost its terrors, although the residence area is still of wood. First, there is the ordinary city water supply, with its hydrants. Then there are two separate, interlocking high-pressure fire systems, with extra heavy, sleeve-jointed pipe, fed from a reservoir high above the city. If this reservoir fails, a pumping station at the bay shore stands ready to drain the Pacific. In addition, bottle-shaped reinforced-concrete cisterns are buried at intersecting streets and fire tugs carry miles of hose on their reels.

Financially San Francisco is one of the most conservative of cities. As an instance of this conservatism, the Chamber of Commerce a few years ago engaged a well-known industrial engineer to make a survey of industrial needs and provide a plan for intelligent development. Such thoroughness did not appeal to a small band of boosters looking for quick results. The boosters, to arouse investment hysteria, held a widely advertised meeting where sober psychologists disclosed what was the matter with San Francisco. Its people, they said, were not "sold" to themselves, hence could not "sell" their city to others; but if everybody turned out and shouted, the city would resound over the world and business would boom.

So the boosters led off. And when they stopped for hoarseness, they found the city going about its business in the old sure and steady way. San Francisco measures its expansion by its needs, hence its security. Meantime the plans of the expert employed by the Chamber are steadily developing, and a great industrial terminal on the lower bay shore is on the way to accomplishment.

Greatest Damage From Fire

Not long ago a columnist remarked that the seismograph had "recorded a slight fire at San Francisco," implying that the city is a bit sensitive about earth disturbances. It is and it is not, according to the way the case is put. All it insists upon is that the quake damage was small indeed compared with the 3,400 acres of desolation left by the fire. Quakes and fires do not go ordinarily together. Santa Rosa, San José and other points were quite as hard-hit in 1906, without having a fire and its attendant refugee problems. The recent Santa Barbara quake was not accompanied by fire.

But, say the scoffers, did not the quake break the feed pipes of the city's water system? It did. Yet fire risks had always been high in this wooden, wind-swept city. Of the 28,188 buildings burned, 24,671 were wholly of wood. And the insurance companies fully considered the chance of conflagration in fixing the high rates which they collected for so many years.

For long months the Ferry clock pointed to 5:13 with a lest-we-forget gesture. It was at that minute in

CONCRETE TAKES NEW FORM IN A FRENCH CHURCH

Le Raincy, Near the Ourcq, Where the Germans Stopped, Breaks With Tradition and Expresses Emotions

Concrete Is Adapted to Church Architecture at Le Raincy, a Suburb of Paris.

By MURIEL HARRIS

AT Le Raincy, a suburb of Paris, the first concrete church of architectural claims has come into being. The circumstances are unique. Le Raincy is about eight miles from the River Ourcq, where on took place the battle that in 1914 vitally stemmed the German invasion. There Gallieni is still a name to conjure with. The story of how the Governor of Paris sent out every available man in taxis—the funny little red taxis in which you are bumped about Paris, feeling like a dried pea in a very large pod—has become immortal, for those taxis were largely instrumental in compelling that German turn under Von Kluck.

The church has been built on the hill at Le Raincy to commemorate the battle, and one of the stained glass windows—the rest are by Maurice Denis—shows Gallieni in uniform stretching out his arm toward his taxis, the modern note with a vengeance.

Le Raincy is historic ground. It is near Montfermeil and is country traversed many times on galloping horses by the "Three Musketeers." It is on the way to Meaux, which was reached by the big German guns in 1918. From it a large portion of commercial Paris goes in every morning to work, returning every evening to sleep. Its station is the Gare de l'Est, which used always to have a sinister suggestion. It was the way to Germany. Still more, it was the way from Germany. If Paris had been taken the German hordes would have poured in from the East. As it was, the twenty minutes between Paris and Le Raincy included more than a fair share of bombs and Big Berthas.

From Paris to Le Raincy is nowadays a more or less continuous chain of workshops. Many of them sprang up during the war. They are light and airy, built with great economy of means and for the sake of cheapness and speed, built chiefly of concrete and glass, one almost exactly like another. If you wanted to express what is really the outlying workshop—or at least one of the outlying workshops of Paris, you could not help thinking first of concrete and then of glass.

It is the idiom for that part of the world. Thousands of work people who know nothing of Roman or of Gothic styles, except that they most often indicate a church, take concrete and glass for granted and compare them favorably with the older, uncomfortable buildings of corrugated iron with a little brick thrown in. Perhaps the first idea that concrete of all things expressed the war, with its huge stimulation of effort, both for good and for bad, appeared in the memorial over the "Tranchée des Baïonnettes" (trench of bayonets) at Verdun. The idea is impressive. The weak point is that immense weight is suggested by a hollow shell.

Cement Transcends Itself

A church was also built of concrete two or three years ago, but the material was considered unworthy for all but utilitarian purposes and the concrete was disguised under a brick facing. Its great strength and cheapness were thus obtained under false pretenses. It has remained to the church on the hill at Le Raincy to demonstrate that a material—any material—honestly used, where the idea dominates that material, can transcend itself and become a thing, not only of supreme beauty, but an expression, not of old times or old traditions, but of a deep emotion of the moment.

There is no doubt about the feeling conveyed by the Church of the Ourcq. The people who built it, the workmen who handled the concrete, all knew literally the meaning of war, still more of undivided effort and clean-cut action impelled by necessity. The church with its tall, slender tower—so tall that in a photograph it often looks out of perspective—and the simple pure lines of the body has something stark about it. It is feeling without any frills; there is no room for anything but the essential. Moreover, owing to penurious days, it has had the further advantage of being restricted as to money and was subject to the necessity of making the very best of apparently inadequate material. During the war the French learned to put up buildings with exceeding speed. As it progressed, they learned the remarkable durability of ferro-concrete. Thus they took the means at hand and made the best of them. Glass and ferro-concrete—out of them they fashioned a workshop dedicated to God.

The whole of the church is built of concrete and the fittings are made of the same material. If a giant could take the church in his hand and throw it over, it would fall down intact. The altar is made of concrete, so also is the organ loft. The divisions in the windows are of the same material. The pillars are very slender—they could have been made thick to emulate the older traditions, but there was no necessity, and being no necessity, such thickness would have been false art. Thus they remain slender, but in harmony with the pillar-like structure which composes part of the tower.

The same necessity which dominates the whole scheme of the church dominates the details as well. The divisions of the windows, for instance, are all made in four or five molds, which at the moment are being used for a similar church at Montmagny. Squares, circles, triangles, these are repeated time and again, but with no monotony. The whole effect is not unlike that of the Moorish latticed windows, except that the divisions are a good deal larger. Another compulsory feature is the use of glass in the walls—like the workshop—not only for light, but also for economy.

The entry into the church is remarkable, partly because it is so surprising. It is like entering a bath of color. The phrase, "bathed in light," suddenly acquires a new meaning. It is a soft, mellow light—not mellow because of the darkness of the church, but mellow by reason of its own character, the quality and arrangement of the glass. The walls to a height of two or three meters are of the solid concrete. After that they are glass and concrete—and with a large proportion of glass. The roof is of concrete with five bays over the central aisle. The side aisles have the bays at right angles to those of the midaisle.

The central roof seems to be decorated with the same triangles and circles of the windows. This is, however, no mere decoration, but ventilation. Several steps lead to the altar at the back of which is glass and concrete in wonderful shades of blue. If the window divisions remain more or less the same, the coloring of the glass is infinitely varied within itself. Deep blue tones are used which recall Chartres and owe some of the secret of their light to the tiny dots of plain glass round the edges, which are also found in ancient glass.

But the deep blue is by no means all that it seems. Its whole effect is made by particular sections, some in blue, some in blue splashed with black or with deep red, some in violet and some in a paler blue. The large cross in the middle—hardly of the window at the back of the altar, but of the whole apse of glass and concrete—is made of the paler blue, through which the sun blazes.

Not one window is like the other, and each is varied within itself. Again, when one says window, one means the sections of glass and concrete which join each other without much division other than that of color. In each of the larger divisions there is, as it were, a window within a window.

The Maurice Denis glass represents the seven scenes from the life of Christ. Each scene is in the form of a Greek cross upon which a smaller square is laid. Apart from the difference between the coloring of the picture and the surrounding glass, there is no division between the two. One mass of light floats upon another.

Another new feature in the church was equally necessary. The church derson's Chinese room, lively dancing figures done in tempera.

Frances Burr's panel, "The Battle of Great Strokes," shows the battling knights as figures in high relief, modeled in gesso with silvered armor and wearing a quaintly archaistic aspect not to be confused with that of the medieval relics that have been preserved. Such "period" efforts contrast strikingly with the overmantel by Harriet Lord. This panel is properly divided into the traditional three parts and has its own period interest. The subject is "Old New York," and one sees the old harbor and houses and bright little Dutch figures. Little sailboats on the water, a windmill in the distance and the gracious outline of hills melting into a misty sky. It seems that the artist has no idea of losing the mystery of nature in becoming decorative. She carries out her design with great simplicity, and the spaces may not always be as interesting as further consideration might have made them. But something is there that would add a note of beauty to almost any surroundings where beauty already had entered. A quiet and homely poetry, bringing to mind Morris's vision of a "London small and white and clean," no pose of the antique or self-consciousness of treatment. One of the pleasantest "decorations" in the gallery.

Fabrics always do their part toward completing or spoiling a decorative design. Usually velvet may be counted upon to exercise a malign influence and by its look of costliness cheapen art. Why gild refined gold unless to make it less golden or decorate velvet unless to take away from its richness? E. Varian Cockcroft has defied our prejudice and with a design adapted from a Javanese temple sculpture done to velvet what hardly could have been so successfully done to any other material, made, that is, a sombre and exotic background with the value of heavy tree shadows for figures eloquent of ancient sources. At the other end of the line a very simple block print by Molly Williams Hand makes a rugged appeal.

There are many other things that could be mentioned for one merit or another, but the best way to get at them is to take the easy trip to the Brooklyn Museum. On the third floor of the building, in the American Gallery, is the memorial exhibition of paintings by Ben Foster, lasting until May 1, and in the print department an exhibition of drawings and etchings by Mons Breidvik and Uno Stallarholm. In this department also are poster designs by art students of Pratt Institute inspired by natural history designs in the museum.

Knowing by Painting

There is no reason for surprise that a landscape architect should paint portraits and etch apple trees with a sympathetic and knowing line. Charles Downing Lay, whose exhibition of water-colors and etchings is now open at the Weyhe Galleries, thinks painting the best training for a landscape architect or any other architect or anything at all in the way of an artist. Not until you paint a picture, he thinks, do all the niceties and fundamentalities of proportion and design and dark and light and space composition assume reality. The only true way to know anything, he thinks, is to paint it. His exhibition shows that the argument has its other side. He was a landscape architect before he did any serious painting, and nothing is more noticeable on the side of merit in his paintings than his beautiful space arrangement, which has the breadth and dignity we have learned to expect from his planning of gardens and parks. It would be a priceless advantage for any painter to have such experience. On the vast outdoor scale one learns to let the vision travel beyond the thing seen and, by wise planning of space, lift the mind and spirit toward what for many a century we have known as holiness.

Mr. Lay declines objective beauty alike in his portraits of persons and of places. However lovely his subject, he tugs away at its character until he frees this from all superficial graces. Exact truths entice him. Sunlight blazing into eyes narrowed behind their glasses; frown of concentration on the face of a woman reading in bed; twisting trunk of an apple tree that knows where it belongs in the deep earth; the gesture of a woman stirring cake batter in a big bowl—so long as it tells a true story.

The story will not always seem particularly true to an observer concerned with the anise and cumin of appearances, but it may be counted upon to stand investigation as to what actually occurred in a human countenance under given circumstances, and what actually occurs is what most painters scrupulously avoid putting into their portraits. Therefore, one hails with the friendliest shout this hardy explorer to whom unfamiliar areas are an invitation to discovery. The etchings in their austerity of black and white show still more clearly the dignity of design that characterizes all the work. An unusual plate, "Camp Fire in the Woods," shows the firelight illuminating the under side of pine branches with an oddly theatrical effect of footlights. The luminous quality of the shadow beyond the range of the firelight is one of the noticeable features of a generally distinguished etching.

A Vision of Color

It is amusing to observe how the color achieved by a great colorist sensitizes one's vision to color everywhere. Joseph Stella is showing his recent paintings at the Valentine Dudensing Galleries, but before they went they were seen by the present writer in the studio on Twenty-fourth Street. A humdrum pleasant street with old houses and a variety of façade and a little good ironwork. That was all you saw on the way to the studio. On the way back the street was seen to be filled with an extraordinary good fortune of color. One's eyes were alive to the laughing blue of doorways and window frames trying their best to sing the same tune as the skies, alive to the sharp pink of a scarf in a window, to the splash of oranges and lemons and green lettuces, to the pale yellow face of an aristocratic old building with arched black eyebrows and large windows; to even the effigies of beef in the butcher's shop, dark and veined with a sallow tallow white—even to those! Nothing with color escaped notice on that return trip. It is a marvelous gift to use a great color sense in a way to sublimate all color, the commonest and rarest alike, for eyes that have been refreshed by such recreations as those of Stella.

Creations would be, perhaps, the more natural word, but re-creations is the truer, since Stella takes from nature its essence and re-creates it in new forms. However fanciful his fantasies, you never miss from them the upward spring of natural growth—even when you feel in your heart that the source and origin of the items in the design is cousin, fifth removed, to actual nature. Take this festival of the rose done for a room in the house of a private collector. It all starts, of course, from the blooming rose, centre of interest, poised against its faintly glowing halo. A pair of herons support the central design with a lacy detail. Smaller birds draw near, perching on delicate branches, and butterflies hurry. Other birds, foot passengers, crowd the lower foreground. Birds of paradise are at the top of the design, where lily bells are ringing. Flowers attend, as gayly dressed as the birds, blue and pink and yellow and crimson and scarlet. All gather about the rose, yet keep their respectful distance, and you hear the sounds of Summer and see the colors of Summer, and experience the emotions of an Italian at one of the happy festivals occurring so often in his native land. As cheerful a panel as ever was painted, but the only way in which it can fit any environment is for the artist to do as Whistler did with the Peacock Room and make the environment over to fit the panel. Another beautiful panel is dedicated to the Australian lyre bird, burning crimson, carrying the feathers that play the title rôle with a drum-major dignity, graciously unbending to the small birds of the foreground. Did Stella ever see a lyre bird? Undoubtedly. But if not, he has made it as it should be and breathed into it the life of his abounding imagination. He does "Ophelia," the face sharpened and colorless in death. She drifts through a procession of sorrowful swans who droop toward her as they pass, each a different white from any of the others, each of a different weight and outline, each a perfectly realized individual, yet passing with as regular a rhythm as a group of white-robed nuns moving in orderly array. Not a cheerful panel, yet lifted by its beauty into the region of cheer, as grief is exorcised through the magic of ritual.

Swift-Moving Line

Another figure subject, "A Vision," shows a human form closely held within a rich contour line of dark orange and thinly veiled; as much like a tulip bud as like a vision of budding womanhood, the fullness of the interior modeling emphasized by two sharp spears of green on either side. Finally, as a complete contrast to bird forms and flower forms, a large canvas dedicated to a by-products factory, handsome and efficient and more emotional in color than the romantic compositions assembled in the artist's richly stored mind. That, of course, is the natural course of an art like Stella's. Why add emotion to romance which already does so much for you, provides you with entertainment and pleasure for the eyes? But a factory constructed to squeeze the last ounces of profit from the materials of industry—that indeed needs your profoundest contribution of color and powerful composition and swift-moving line in order to stir your mind and heart into forgetfulness of the by-products.

The greatest value of Joseph Stella's art for the present time is the excellent report it will make to the future of our contemporary attitude in art. It will say to the careful connoisseurs of the future that here at least is an artist who was willing to work for his love of art and his hope of fame. To work at the scales and finger exercises of his profession until he could ask of his practiced hands precisely what his brain and heart should desire. Observe, if you can get hold of them, some of Stella's drawings, some of those silver-points—a medium that permits no retouching—and respect the craftsmanship that would have been equal to the demands of the Renaissance, that is more than equal to the demands of this easy-going age.

WOMEN'S ART STRIKES DISTINCTIVE NOTE

Decorative Missions Fulfilled by Effective Screens and Fabrics at Brooklyn Museum Exhibit of National Association of Painters and Sculptors—Charles Downing Lay's Works Shown Old New York, by Harriet Lord, Decorative Panel.

In Exhibition of the National Association of Women Painters and Sculptors at the Brooklyn Museum.

THE National Association of Women Painters and Sculptors is holding its exhibition in the Brooklyn Museum, whose halls are consistently showing themselves hospitable to contemporary effort. There is a more or less logical expectation in the minds of the public that a museum exhibition shall be definitely superior to an exhibition held in a private gallery. The public mind feels the weight of institutional authority and is prepared to admire the least admirable work that has a museum background with a greater sense of security than attends its lurking love of something it has seen in an out-of-the-way studio, with the artist hanging anxiously over his handiwork and the delicious smell of turpentine on the April air.

Of course, this fondness for the thing you yourself back, helped only by the artist's sincerity of belief that it is the best thing he has done, works like madness in the individual brain. There are people who fill room after room in their houses with the pictures of one single painter, each the best thing he has done. It is absolutely necessary for institutions to take responsibility upon their shoulders and direct the public mind. It is a good thing, too, for the artists themselves to show their things in a museum gallery. The sense of responsibility communicates itself to them, or should, even if it doesn't. Quite often it doesn't. Quite often it seems to be happiness enow to sit under the sheltering cloak of the museum. But the National Association of Women Painters and Sculptors has taken no unfair advantage of its favorable environment. It has put forth its best effort and assembled an exhibition of which it justly might be proud, if pride had any rightful place in the vocabulary of art.

The Essence of Decoration

The exhibition strikes a distinct note: that of decorative intention. The phrase is used advisedly, since there is no subject upon which exists wider variation of opinion than the definition of a decoration. Kenyon Cox in a lecture at the Art Students' League a score of years ago gave the fullest account of essentials, and as the lecture was published only in an obscure little magazine long since out of print, it is worth while to quote its most significant passage: "No fault, not even bad color, is so grave as faulty design," Mr. Cox said to his attentive students. "The very essence of decoration," he said, "is the relation of spaces and the treatment of spaces. In mural painting you may have a wall, a ceiling, a lunette or other panel to cover; and your space may be flat or curved, but it is bound to be a space of some particular shape, and your first problem is to treat that space interestingly, to divide it up into interesting masses and shapes, to make the amount of space occupied by a figure in just proportion to the amount occupied by a background or a sky; to make other things in relation to these; in a word, to produce a harmonious balance of what are called full and empty spaces. But you cannot begin directly with your panel; you must have thought of its place on the wall, of the size and detail of any decorative moldings, of the columns, if there are any; in fact, of everything about it. After you have considered the subdivision of spaces, you go on to consider your great masses, then the subsidiary and internal lines. The composition of line in the best decoration is a thing of wonder. One line echoes another, or is sharply contrasted with it, or falls in with a greater line, and not one is an accident or contradicts the decorative scheme. In a subject like Veronese's 'Marriage at Cana,' a great canvas 20 by 30 feet, not a single line is a sixteenth of an inch away from where it should be, not a fold on a garment could be altered without harm. After your design is completed, and only then, you may consider light and shade and color."

"David," by Charles Downing Lay.

In Exhibition at the Weyhe Gallery.

Another decorative painter of the same period has insisted upon the importance of general culture, not only by the road of literature, but by knowledge of the way great masters have worked in all times and all nations. He learned, he says, from Hokusai how to hit hard so as to seize the attention of people passing hurriedly through a great building with only a moment to give to the mural decorations.

These are the points of view of men embarked upon serious undertakings and accepting their responsibility toward the public. The decorative intention now spreading over contemporary art is a different and a lighter matter, yet even more significant, indicating as it does the general desire for harmonious assembling and unity of effect. The desire has become so general that almost every painter is thinking a little about what he can accomplish in decoration, of how far he can pull his work into line with the prevailing demand. Most people miss, however, the right attitude toward the general desire, the sharing of responsibility between artist and the individual choosing a work of art for his own habitation, and it is precisely this attitude which is emphasized in the catalogue of the exhibition at the Brooklyn Museum. A work of art, the writer of the introductory text explains, "serves as decoration when it adds its note of beauty to surroundings that harmonize. Since homes and gardens are individual in expression of personality, so decorative art may be of many schools, of varying degrees of conventionalization, of unlimited variety of color scheme. The discriminating lover of Beauty, whose sensitive reactions assist in the selection of a painting or a bronze for some particular spot may be considered as the only person who may rule on the question of what, for that particular spot, constitutes decorative art."

In considering these paintings and sculptures from the angle of their effectiveness as decoration, then, we are forced to keep in mind the fact that they are decorations in the air, and the owner of any one of them is asked to do his part in making it fulfill its decorative mission. The painters have taken it this way and bound themselves as little as possible to empty formula. Screens have proved an easy and agreeable avenue of escape from too embarrassing freedom. Elizabeth Price does a good ship screen, meeting a contemporary taste for antique design, but her "Galleons" and her "Treasure Ship" have less enchantment than her "Platycodon and Verbena," in which from her garden plot she has chosen two plants that were made for each other, has muffled the intensity of the blue and daintily played upon the broken surfaces until the mind is filled with the realization of their charm.

With Crisp Contours

Esperanza Gabay's screen, ornamented with figures from "Le Journal des Demoiselles," 1859, is a clever, faintly mocking, comment upon a current taste, and perhaps in deference to the temporary interest of the theme is put into a rather slovenly frame. There are panels with Chinese motifs, this again a contemporary concern with an earlier fashion. Marian Gay Traver's "Ming-shu Gonig to Yu Ping" is drawn with crisp contours, painted with bright colors and enameled surfaces. Georgiana Browne Harbeson's two panels are for John Murray An-

ENGLAND'S YOUNGER SON HAS A CHAMPION

Lord Birkenhead Hits At Family Seniority By the Right of Birth

"Only by Means of Primogeniture Can You Correct the Homicide Tendencies Afflicting Exclusive Families."

By P. W. WILSON

THE statement is made that Britain is at last abolishing primogeniture — seniority by right of birth. The bold bad man who does the dark deed is Lord Birkenhead—but yesterday the Chancellor and Keeper of the Conscience of his Kings.

Ten years ago Lord Birkenhead was merely Galloper Smith, the archrebel of Ulster. Yet here we have him, a belted earl of the later Lloyd Georgian era, playing the part of a wolf in sheepskin, a peer in parchment, a Guido Fawkes in scarlet and ermine, who explodes a bomb amid 600 pedigrees of that old nobility which is ever new. It is no wonder that at such impudence marchionesses are amazed, dukes are indignant and flunkeys are a-fluster.

There Is a Reason

It is true that more than a century ago primogeniture disappeared even from a State so aristocratic as Virginia, and that hardly anywhere, save in Britain, does this admirable improvement upon natural selection now survive. But if Burke and Debrett are still authorized to be read in the churches and clubs of Belgravia, there is a reason. Once appreciate the argument for primogeniture and you will find it to be unanswerable.

It is not merely that, judged by intelligence tests, an eldest son embodies the warmest affection of his parents. Nor is it only that eldest sons when, like Lincoln, they take after their mother, often turn out to be amiable members of society. Nor is primogeniture merely the inevitable result of birth control, which regards every youngest child as an error of judgment, until only the eldest offspring is left. The real reason for primogeniture is deeper by far than all this.

The experience of centuries has shown that only by means of primogeniture can you correct the homicidal tendencies afflicting exclusive families of pure Nordic descent. According to the highest authorities primogeniture was adopted in the early Middle Ages as an alternative to murder in the first degree. It is merely a question of which custom you prefer.

You say that in Turkey, in India and in the Orient, as a whole, primogeniture was seldom the tradition. But what was the result? In order to fortify the succession, entire families were slaughtered, like the innocents. On one stone that prudent Judge, Abimelech, slew seventy of his brethren. Whether the massacre was or was not meritorious is fair matter for argument. Eugenically regarded, it was not only correct but Malthusian. But as a sedative for rivalries in the family, primogeniture would have been, perhaps, more polite.

It is, of course, possible that an eldest son, somewhat too eager to acquire his heritage, may assassinate his father. That is the risk that must be faced. But in the twelfth century when far-seeing reformers advocated primogeniture the real danger was not parricide but a certain misunderstanding between uncles and nephews. Even a kindly uncle—and there were many such—would regretfully kill his nephews as the only argument whereby the most dutiful of nephews could be dissuaded from killing their uncles. Primogeniture was thus a form of avuncular disarmament; a League of Cousins who, subject to contingencies, such as civil war, agreed to live and let live, on condition that the eldest son was the head of the family. What was in the head made no difference.

The question today is whether in any essential respect Britain changes. Is she not at heart the same Christian country that she was when King John, after due anointment with the sacred oil of coronation, put out the eyes of his nephew, Prince Arthur, with red hot irons, or otherwise caused the boy to vanish from the scene? Did not King Richard III, in his turn, continue a valuable precedent by smothering two of his nephews with pillows in the Tower of London? Nor was the justice all on one side. Did not King Henry II, when a nephew, incarcerate his excellent uncle, Count Robert of Normandy, for twenty-eight years in a castle until he died? And did not Cousin Mary cut off the head of Cousin Jane Grey; Cousin Elizabeth that of Cousin Mary, Queen of Scots? These courtesies are deeply imbedded in the subconsciousness of the Anglo-Saxon. Primogeniture, like prohibition, is an antidote.

"Somewhat Too Eager to Come Into His Heritage."

Jealousy Was Eliminated

Take the Prince of Wales. Under the rule of primogeniture he has no reason to kidnap young Master Lascelles, tie him up in a sack and throw him into the Bosphorus. So with the ex-Kaiser and with the late King Edward. Primogeniture meant that Wilhelm could not be King of England and that Edward could not be Emperor of Germany. Not being rivals for a succession, these potentates were at liberty, whenever they felt so disposed, to love each other. The green-eyed jealousy was eliminated.

In abolishing primogeniture, then, Lord Birkenhead has proceeded with caution. To begin with, he exempts from his bill a detail like the dynasty. The fact that, through no fault of his own, the Prince of Wales happens to be the eldest son of the sovereign, is not to debar him, as yet, from ascending the throne of his ancestors. The Liverpudlian leveller has, for the moment, spared the monarchy.

Also, he has not been deaf to the appeal of Lord John Manners, ancestor of the incomparable Diana:

Let wealth and commerce, laws and learning die,
But leave us still our old nobility.

Despite the abolition of primogeniture, heredity titles are to descend, as hitherto, by heirs male of the body begotten; which concession applies, of course, to the Earldom of Birkenhead. As a Bolshevist, then, Lord Birkenhead manages still to be a baron; and in abolishing primogeniture he thus resembles a modern painter who is wildly a futurist, except when he perpetrates his own portrait. At such a time he becomes pre-Raphaelite. Lord Birkenhead combines the proletarian bark with the plantagenetarian bite.

The disappearance of primogeniture from Britain, therefore, does not mean that primogeniture will disappear. On the contrary, the fortress of feudalism is still to stand precisely where it stood when it was found, photographed and filmed by Douglas Fairbanks in the ancient days of Robin Hood. What Lord Birkenhead achieves is what England loves, namely, a distinction without a difference.

Nine out of ten estates are settled estates, and on these primogeniture will still be what it has always been—the golden rule. The properties have been, are, and will continue to be, bequethed to the son, "in tail," for the grandson. Nor is there the slightest reason why the Marquis of Salisbury should fear lest his younger brother, the Viscount Cecil, will claim half the family heirlooms and the best bulbs in the hothouses of Hatfield. The real danger is not that younger brothers will claim the patrimony but that mortgages will be foreclosed.

Once or twice in a century there are, however, cases where some absent-minded landowner, intent on breeding Shetland ponies, forgets to make a will. In the event of such intestacy, land, as real property, has descended to the eldest son. What Lord Birkenhead proposes is that such land should be included with loose cash, the kitchen crockery and the golf clubs of the deceased, and as "personality," not as "realty," be divided among the next of kin.

If, then, the bill passes, the landed aristocracy must be the more careful to employ a family lawyer who will remind any preoccupied parent of his duty to make a last will and testament. The safe way to continue primogeniture will be in future to state it in writing.

Nothing, then, is so easy to understand as the British Constitution when you do understand it. changes; but the more it chan the more it is the same.

It may be asked why, if primoge iture is so excellent a principle i its abolition must be only a pretens you do not find it in the Uni States. The reason is that t United States is still empty. Th is ample room for everybody in wide open spaces of Brooklyn Texas. On a prairie like Manhatt you cannot expect the same sta rated civilization that you find in old and settled country like the Is lands of Scotland. But in the Uni States, as in Lancashire and Yo shire, the squeeze will come. Bonfires will be marquises. Bank will be barons. Directors, like dun will be addressed as "your grace It will then be discovered that t man nature in Florida is precis the same as was human nature France when Charlemagne was m monopolies over Europe. Only the Old World do people make believe that primogeniture is a thing of t past. In the New World it is th thing of the future.

Be Aristocracy the Only Je

On Long Isla there is no Labor Party. You do arrest Communists at Newport, R. The motto in there heraldic: Be ar tocracy the only joy.

In fact, Froude used to say, "T are epidemics of nobleness as well epidemics of disease." Let a Ge Duchess announce a reception Fifth Avenue and the entire Fou four Hundred goes willingly into hereditary quarantine.

Despite the sad fate of the th born in the land of Egypt, primoge iture is, then, the clue to the gr time that lies ahead of us. All th will really be changed is the spelli of the word.

PUTTING THE MISSOURI TO WORK AGAIN

The Great, Untamed, Loafing Stream Is Soon to Be a Busy Transportation Route—Glamour of the Past

By ANN PEPPARD WHITE

Down I come with the mud in my hands
And plaster it over the Maple lands. —Kipling.

THEY are conquering the Missouri River, the most willful, most contrary river in the world. They are making her waters navigable, so that the products of a vast agricultural valley can find cheap passage to the sea, via the connected waterways.

There was when she carried the responsibility of a young nation on her waters. Fur trappers and voyageurs knew her banks. Adventurous pathfinders used her current, and in the Montana gold rush she bore many a gay steamboat load northwest to the mountains.

The river was always hard to navigate on account of sandbars and snags. The past generations seemed to have more time and patience. A few days spent stuck on a sand island were never dull, with Indians to fight or poker to play. But the iron horse put an end to the Missouri River boats, and only their ghosts have floated there during the past fifty years.

Our Longest River

Now, whether the stubborn Missouri likes it or not, she's coming in for her fair share of the transportation load once more. Her lands provide for butchers and bakers' shops all over the world. Sixty-five per cent. of the total United States wheat crop has its roots in this valley, and 50 per cent. of the best cattle find pasture here.

The Missouri's empire is enormous. She starts on the great divide in Montana, comes diagonally across South Dakota, serves as a boundary between Nebraska and Iowa, cuts off the northeast corner of Kansas, breaks through the middle of Missouri and tumbles finally into the Mississippi at St. Louis, having grown to be, by then, the longest river in the United States.

The inland waterways is a connected system, and when the Missouri has been tamed the Middle West will no longer be landlocked. A sack of wheat may travel from Kansas to the sea and sail for foreign ports from New York Harbor or from New Orleans. Should Georgia and Tennessee need a little extra corn for their corn bread, just put it on at a Nebraska town, let it float in a general southeasterly direction; it can dock at Nashville or at Memphis. Pittsburgh will be able to send her coal West on boats, and the motor cars bound for Missouri from Detroit can have a boat ride to their dealers' doors. So the fruits of the soil will go East and the fruits of the factory will come West—a fair exchange—when the system is complete.

Perhaps no other river is so changeable as the Missouri. Yearly at its largest flow it contains sixty times as much water as at its lowest ebb, because of snow melting on the Rockies. Each year it develops from a small river into a giant river, passing through all the moods of growing pains, and then shrinking again.

Most rivers have a rocky bottom; the Missouri has an unreliable mud bottom, with a fifty-foot channel more than three-quarters of its course—the rest of the way is clogged with sandbars. These bars have a habit of shifting, continually seeking a new place to sit down. The Government engineers, through patient experiments, have discovered how the river may be made to dig its own channel without need of dredges. Revetments are placed parallel to the natural stone cliffs. These force the water into a narrow channel. They are built of rock, great piles with three to ten foot spaces between. The river is so full of soil and mud that it builds up between this framework and makes its own wall, more durable than cement—for the Spring ice jams would crack a solid surface.

And the river is made to behave herself as she races around corners by banks that are nothing more than many willow mats with layers of stone between, all attached to steel shafts that grip deep into the earth. Willows do not rot. The stream uses its force to dig a deep channel, and thus is compelled to stay in its own tracks, so to speak.

Interest in the Missouri has been quickened by looking freight rates in the face. When a certain merchant living in Omaha and selling a manufactured article to his biggest market (which happened to be Philadelphia) found that he could get a better shipping rate from San Francisco to Philadelphia by water than he could from Omaha to Philadelphia by rail, he promptly moved out to California. And the Omaha Chamber of Commerce got busy asking why.

Shippers Are Enthusiastic

Farm organizations of seven Mid-Western States have been meeting and conventioning. Dignified delegates go to the big speeching and come back to sit around the grocery stove and tell the folks at home how "the Missouri will carry our freight." They wag their fingers, get excited and discuss the appropriation Congress will make. Most of their money is in wheat. "What good does it do to be the bread basket of the world unless you can get to market cheap enough?" Every wise farmer knows the price of wheat is regulated according to Liverpool. Wheat worth so much, plus passage to Liverpool—that's what it amounts to.

And, oddly enough, the railways are for the river now. Conditions have changed. Ten years ago the mention of river freight made a railroad magnate bristle. Now he has worries of his own. Overcrowded terminals is the main problem. River navigation would relieve this congestion, taking care of the slower freight—raw materials principally.

For instance, a manufacturer of shoes would probably have hides shipped by water. After they had been turned into footwear they would be dispersed quickly by rail over the country. So the old fight between river-way improvements and railways is at an end. There is not only an armistice, there is a joining of interests. What builds up the country builds up the railroads. As Secretary Hoover said in his able address before the Inland Waterways Conference: "Here is an old saying that is true: New transportation facilities create business. Traffic breeds traffic."

At present there is virtually no freighting on the Missouri. The river is as untamed and as primitive as in the days of the Jesuit explorer, Marquette. It still tears along with terrific, unbridled, impatient force. In 1924 the Government engineers estimated conservatively the Missouri threw away one square mile of farm land, 400 feet deep.

Henry Joutel, a young French explorer, nephew of La Salle, made an illuminating note on Sept. 1, 1687: "We passed by the mouth of a stream called the Missouri, whose water is always thick with mud and to which our Indians did not forget to offer sacrifice."

In 1900, Coxe, an Englishman, owned a grant of land extending from the coast of South Carolina to the Mississippi River, or "from sea to sea," issued by Charles I of England. He went adventuring in his kingdom, and when he found the Missouri River wrote: "It will be one great convenience to this country, if it ever becomes settled, that there is an easy communication to the South Sea, which lies between America and China." This conception was held by many early explorers.

French voyageurs ascended the river in their wooden canoes as high as the mouth of the Platte. They traded with the Indians and brought back tales of their savage myths. They told how the great river emptied into the South, or Vermilion, Sea. "It was the passageway to China; also the way to the Spanish Mines—only a ridge of hills, passable by horse, foot or wagon in half a day, between them."

Then, in 1792, Sir Alexander MacKenzie crossed the continent, blazed a path over the Rockies and into the Northwest, and viewed the Pacific. Lewis and Clark followed and traced the Missouri to its source on the great divide. Correct surveys trapped the river into a concrete map.

The Louisiana Purchase came close on the heels of the Lewis and Clark expedition. After this important real estate deal the Missouri ran through United States soil, and was destined soon to become one of the great highways to the Far West. Lewis and Clark brought back so many tales of beaver and other fur-bearing animals that dreams of wealth arose in merchants' minds. St. Louis became a great river port for fur boats. Then the keel boat came into being. It was a flat-bottom boat from 50 to 75 feet long, with a 15 to 20 foot beam. The boat, carrying a small cannon, was manned by a "brigade" of a hundred well-armed adventurers. It was pulled up stream by the crew, walking on shore. When the land was too rough, oars and poles were used; but the main power of the boat was man-power. The total distance, 2,000 miles, took from five to six months. To make fifteen miles a day called for good muscle work. Most boatmen were French-Canadians or Creoles.

A Race Up the River

In the Spring of 1811 John Jacob Astor was preparing to establish his trading post, Astoria, at the mouth of the Columbia River. He sent an expedition by sea around Cape Horn, and his partner, Wilson Price Hunt, started across the continent with the same objective, using a Missouri River keel boat. A competitor, Manuel Lisa, also a pioneer fur trader, wanted to get there ahead of Hunt. He made a record trip of 1,100 miles up the Missouri in sixty-one days, an average of eighteen miles a day, and won the race.

Fulton's steamboat caused a new link to be forged in the evolution of watercraft. Then years later the

DECORATIVE ARTS PUT TO MANY USES

Ship Models Make Interesting High Spots—The Modern Business Office —Harmonizing Lamp Shades

By WALTER RENDELL STOREY

THE eagerness with which the landsman reads the news of a Captain Fried standing by to aid a distressed vessel, or the stirring tale of a vessel that battles her way through hurricane weather to port, shows that the age-old interest in ships is still much alive. Some of this interest is reflected in the prevalent use of models of ships in room decoration. Once coveted only by collectors, the ship model now provides in many cases just the touch that completes the atmosphere of an apartment.

Studying ship models as collector's items, legend-bearing heirlooms or as articles with a high decorative value, one soon learns that there are many sorts. There is the highly ornate, painted and gilded galleon, made today solely as a decoration—this, of course, the true ship model lover scorns. Then there are the sailor-made models, prized for their origin, though they are not always accurate as to proportion. Higher in the technique of construction are models made carefully to scale and with the most minute detail. These were the patterns used by ship builders in the old days before drafting of ship plans had developed. A fourth class comprises reproductions of famous old vessels made today by men who are exceedingly clever artisans—sometimes veritable artists.

Models and Half Models

Models made with jack-knife, by sailors in their hours of ease, used formerly to be found in every seafaring family or harbor tavern. They often display great ingenuity and a thorough knowledge of rigging. In this class are the half-models, glued on a board with painted waves in front and perhaps a clouded sky in the background. Model ships made by sailors were generally miniature copies of particular ships, for seamen bear a love and loyalty to their vessel that landsmen often do not realize. Some sailor-made ships are of bone, ivory and boxwood and generally referred to as "prisoner-of-war models." Many such were fashioned by French prisoners in English prisons during the Napoleonic wars. The cleverness of the work is accounted for by the theory that some of the prisoners were ivory workers of Bordeaux or Dieppe before being conscripted for Napoleon's navy.

But the real prizes are the sloops and frigates of the seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries, made in the dock yards of England, France and Spain as models for actual ships. These are marvels of accuracy and beautiful in their time-tarnished color. A recently shown English galleon of the seventeenth century was valued at $20,000.

In reproductions made today there is a demand for authentic detail. In order to re-create one of these old ships—whether it be an English frigate, an American clipper or Columbus's Santa Maria—months of research work must first be done. Old shipyard records, old books and prints, a study of every art or trade entering into the construction of a ship, must be covered, so as to insure that the details are as nearly correct as possible.

A Passion for the Authentic

Such ships are built up plank by plank. Months are given to the carvings, which in vessels up to the nineteenth century were most elaborate. Cannon and hardware must be cast to suit the exact style of the time. This passion for authentic detail has developed a new school in ship model building, improving upon the picturesque but inaccurate seaman's work. Some, when finished, may be given the glory of age, while others are frankly a modern-built copy of an old ship. If you have the money, you may want to have one made to order. If not, perhaps you will decide to make one yourself.

While the construction of a really fine ship model requires natural craft and art possessed by few, the admirer of ships, with a love for them and some mechanical dexterity, can set a limit to his ambition and still make an interesting model. There are many aids for those who need them, such as blueprints of famous ships and wood blocks already routed out for the chisel or knife of the amateur shipbuilder. The Bon Homme Richard and Constitution, the famous American clipper, Flying Cloud, Drake's Golden Hind, all may be made for decorative purposes today from a prepared wood block or from plans.

As decoration a miniature ship is an adaptable creature. Against a window it forms an attractive silhouette. Above a door it gives something of its nautical air to the room. It may be hung from the rafters, as once it hung in old churches in Spain, where it was taken to be blessed when its life-sized counterpart was launched. It may grace the mantel shelf or repose in dignity upon a high chest of drawers. If your forebears sailed the seven seas in China clippers or fought on an American frigate, you may wish to place your ship model high on the wall of the living room as a sort of family shrine, honoring departed ancestors and reminding of their former glory.

Carefully designed period rooms call for a ship model that accords with its surroundings. French and English frigates fit well with furniture contemporary with them. Old whalers and clippers go well in early American, American Empire and Victorian rooms. In general, the more colorful models fit in with ornate or rich-hued furnishings, while the more sombre clippers and whalers appear at their best in simply furnished rooms. In apartments arranged in not too precise a manner, the picturesque ship model seems to make itself at home with astonishing ease.

When ships are placed against the wall, a simple background is important. A picture behind a ship detracts from the effect, while to surround the model with other objects takes away from the dignity that such a fine thing as a ship deserves. Sometimes it is effective to place a model in front of a mirror.

The American clipper with fine clean lines, tall masts and slender body, is a thing of beauty. Shown with all sails unfurled, the tiny model seems almost to move. In models of American ships there is a value beyond that merely of the vogue of the time. In the early days of the nineteenth century shipping loomed large and American ships traded with all the world, especially with the newly opened East. Models of vessels of that time suggest something of the importance of the period. Such decoration has a twofold value, and will doubtless be cherished much longer than some of us imagine.

INCREASINGLY broad and versatile is the scope of decorative art today. The business man, for instance, is replacing the bare formality of his office with modern furnishings that in many cases achieve real distinction. Sometimes it is the private office that is thus improved and sometimes a conference room. In the conference room of one large New York advertising firm this distracting air of the hurrying city has been successfully supplanted by the quiet of a New England farmhouse. As one enters from the large outer office full of the bustle of the day's business one is almost startled by the contrast the quiet Colonial interior offers.

At one side is a deep, wide fireplace, equipped with all the iron pots and pans and cranes and andirons of a century and more ago. Broad wooden boards brought from old New England houses—wider than any that can be obtained today—panel one side of the room. The pine floor from the attic of an old dwelling and the low ceiling beamed with heavy timber, together with the simple pine furniture, give the room an authenticity no antiquarian could adversely criticise.

To assemble all these component parts required long search on the

ROLLS-ROYCE
These resale cars deliver new-car performance and security at a saving of 30%

"OWNING a Rolls-Royce," said a man recently, "would be like heaven. Awfully jolly, but a long way off." That was yesterday. Today, heaven is nearer and the Rolls-Royce within reach. This man and many other people can own "the best car in the world" at a saving of 30 per cent.

These cars, offered at resale, include a number of different coachwork designs. The mechanical history of each car is known in minute detail. Each one has been carefully examined and any part showing evidence of wear has been replaced. Consequently, these cars carry the same 3-year guarantee as new Rolls-Royce cars.

These cars will be painted and upholstered exactly as you wish. You will have the same freedom of choice as in a new car. When you ride or drive in any of these cars, you will be pleased to see that in comfort, responsiveness, performance and appearance they cannot be told from new automobiles. Freedom from mechanical ills . . . luxury which is only Rolls-Royce . . . and at least 10 years of use from the day you buy . . . this is the promise they make.

OXFORD—7-passenger open model. A design most admirably expressing exceptional comfort and spaciousness in an open touring car. Price $9500.

Open models offered at resale for $9500. Closed models $10,500. These prices include complete Rolls-Royce accessories, new tires, freedom from tax and delivery charges. Satisfactory terms of purchase can readily be arranged without expensive financing charges.

All Rolls-Royce owners, whether the car has been bought at resale or not, have access to the interested, helpful service of every member of our organization. The delivery of the car is the beginning, not the end, of our obligation. Direct works branches in every part of the United States and throughout the world.

You are invited to examine these cars and try them, or to write for a booklet which answers the questions many purchasers ask.

Even one beauty treatment at the Helena Rubinstein Salon youthifies your complexion and contour remarkably—and includes suggestions on the correct daily home care of your skin and on the fine art of make-up.

Erase the years from your face

TODAY—science is your greatest aid to prolonged youth and beauty!

MME. HELENA RUBINSTEIN—after a lifetime of the most intense devotion to beauty culture from its scientific aspect—has developed an unparalleled technique for keeping the contour of the face youthful, and for removing the "look of years."

Her Valaze Beauty Preparations are not merely delicate and fragrant—they are scientific and genuinely corrective. Her Valaze Salon Treatments youthify by stimulating the natural action of the skin tissues and bracing relaxed muscles.

The basis of beauty

VALAZE PASTEURIZED FACE CREAM—marvelous for cleansing, for molding out the "tired look" about eyes and forehead, and for protecting the skin. Unsurpassed for all average skins—at the same time, the only cleansing cream beneficial to an oily, rough or acne-blemished skin. Creates a charming smoothness and is an excellent make-up base. 1.00, 2.00, 3.50.

Clear and whiten

VALAZE BEAUTIFYING FOOD—"the skin-clearing [illegible]ce"! Whitens, purifies and [illegible]es the skin. Removes sallowness, darkened skin pigment of neck and throat, 1.00.

Maturing contours—puffy eyes—drooping chin

VALAZE GEORGINE LACTEE—wonderful muscle tightener. Strengthens and braces the relaxed muscles and tissues, correcting double chin, puffy eyes, sagging contours, restoring a youthful clear-cut appearance. 3.00, 6.00.

NEW!

VALAZE ROUGE—POWDER SIFTER—VALAZE DOUBLE COMPACT—Stunning new vanities in Chinese-Red, created by Helena Rubinstein and all the rage in Paris. Conveniently small, yet containing as much powder and rouge as ordinary large compacts. Choice of shades. 1.50.

At WELLESLEY and BARNARD 415 GIRLS tell why - - they are using this soap for their skin

"Fraternity dances—and the thrill of popularity, of success . . ."

NEARLY two thousand girls at Barnard, Wellesley, Smith and Bryn Mawr were asked what soap they prefer for their skin. Their answers brought out the overwhelming popularity of Woodbury's Facial Soap

LATIN VERBS, yes—

But what girl of twenty does not believe supremely in the importance of a lovely, fresh, rose-leaf complexion?

We asked 804 girls at Barnard and Wellesley what soap they use for the care of their skin.

More than half answered, "Woodbury's Facial Soap!"

"It leaves my face wonderfully smooth." "Keeps my skin soft and clear always." "Lately (2 years) I have had the reputation of having a very clear, fine skin—and it's due to Woodbury's." "It soothes and improves my skin." "Gives a freshness and glow." "Is least irritating to a very sensitive skin."

These were some of their comments.

A SKIN SPECIALIST worked out the formula by which Woodbury's is made. This formula not only calls for the purest ingredients—it also demands greater refinement in the manufacturing process than is commercially possible with ordinary toilet soap.

A 25-cent cake of Woodbury's lasts a month or six weeks. Around each cake is wrapped a booklet of special treatments for overcoming common skin troubles, such as blackheads, blemishes, excessive oiliness, etc.

The same qualities that give Woodbury's its beneficial effect in correcting these common skin troubles make it ideal for regular use.

Get your Woodbury's today—begin tonight the treatment your skin needs!

The Andrew Jergens Co., Cincinnati, Ohio

To overcome dandruff and falling hair work Ed. Pinaud's Eau de Quinine well down into the roots of the hair—here is the seat of all scalp troubles.

If your hair is not what you would like to have it, regular treatment with Eau de Quinine will restore your hair to shining beauty.

THINNING HAIR and DANDRUFF can be checked and the hair restored to full health

THINNING hair and dandruff are always sources of worry. But now we know that it is usually dandruff that makes the hair fall.

Specialists say that dandruff is an infection and that to cure it just two things need to be done.

FIRST, the dandruff germs must be destroyed.

SECOND, the scalp must be stimulated to more vigorous health.

The ideal safe disinfectant for the hair in Ed. Pinaud's Eau de Quinine is more effective in destroying dandruff germs than any other known preparation.

There are also special ingredients in Eau de Quinine that stimulate the inactive glands and awaken the sleeping hair roots so that invigorating blood flows freely to every tiny part of the scalp.

To get the full benefit, wet the scalp thoroughly with Eau de Quinine and then, pressing the fingers down hard, work the health-giving tonic to the hair roots by moving the scalp in every direction until the whole head is warm and glowing. This nourishes the hair so that it grows to new health and beauty.

BEGIN THIS TREATMENT at once and watch your hair take on a new smooth shining beauty. All druggists and department stores have ED. PINAUD'S EAU DE QUININE HAIR TONIC. Each bottle bears the signature of Ed. Pinaud. Pinaud Incorporated, 90 Fifth Avenue, New York, sole distributors for Parfumerie Ed. Pinaud, Paris.

Brand Whitlock says:

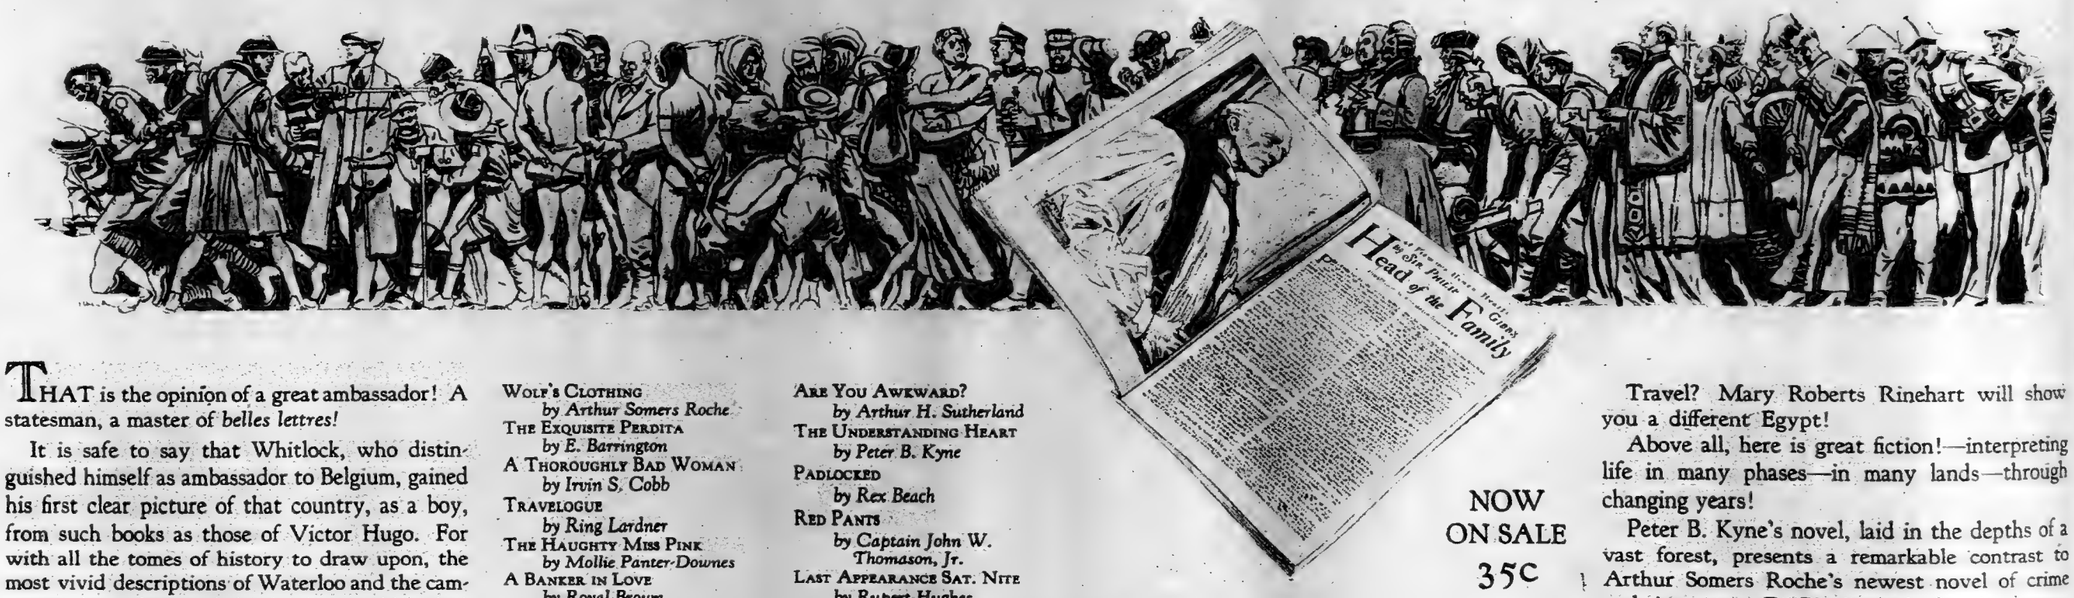
"THE best, perhaps the only reason, why one should read fiction is because one likes to, because one finds it interesting, or amusing, or consoling. And yet, since one nowadays must be, or at least pretend to be, practical, there are other advantages to be gained.

"Fiction, written by the great artist—a Thomas Hardy, a Joseph Conrad, a Henry James—is a synthesis of human nature, a history of human emotions; it is life itself, interpreted by a noble and distinguished mind, in whose presence one is permitted for a while to dwell.

"And then, are not the historians themselves, or certain of them, writing their histories today as though they were novels?"



THAT is the opinion of a great ambassador! A statesman, a master of belles lettres!

It is safe to say that Whitlock, who distinguished himself as ambassador to Belgium, gained his first clear picture of that country, as a boy, from such books as those of Victor Hugo. For with all the tomes of history to draw upon, the most vivid descriptions of Waterloo and the campaigns that culminated there are invariably taken from the pages of "Les Miserables," "Charles O'Malley" or "Vanity Fair." "The Angels of the Marne" brought courage and inspiration to crushed and badly shaken soldiers who, after reading that fiction, swore they had actually seen the angels!

For, while history is like a dreary lecture, current fiction is the racy conversation of humanity.

Cosmopolitan Magazine is an unending study of this conversation of humanity. No university has ever assembled such experts on life as those who give their interpretations of life in this great magazine. Here, for instance, appears a new story by Sir Philip Gibbs, whose reports of the battle-fronts were arousing the Allied World at the same time that Brand Whitlock was struggling as a diplomat for the salvation of Belgium!

Cosmopolitan Magazine provides you with a practical knowledge of life in all its phases—in all parts of the world—that no individual could possibly acquire in many years of travel and study.

PEOPLE? Here's Captain Thomason, the most striking new personality in current literature. Miss Willson who lived penniless in New York. Pussyfoot Johnson telling how he lied to bring about prohibition. And George Ade's house full of guests. O. O. McIntyre will take you to another kind of house for a better understanding of life!

Sport? Gibson flashes a delightful baseball picture. Fred Collins shows you a gory bull-fight. And Arthur Sutherland demonstrates how a man of sixty may become a tumbler!

Travel? Mary Roberts Rinehart will show you a different Egypt!

Above all, here is great fiction!—interpreting life in many phases—in many lands—through changing years!

Peter B. Kyne's novel, laid in the depths of a vast forest, presents a remarkable contrast to Arthur Somers Roche's newest novel of crime and its cure. E. Barrington's heroine moves through the salons of eighteenth-century London; Rex Beach's behind the bars of a reformatory!

Mollie Panter-Downes tells a charming tale of a London salesgirl; Irvin S. Cobb a story of a thoroughly bad woman. Ring Lardner records a three-cornered conversation on a Pullman; Rupert Hughes a three-cornered pantomime viewed from an office window! Captain Thomason brings back the fury of battle—to the life! Sir Philip Gibbs finds drama in a bishop's household.

A clinic of love! Royal Brown shows a banker's love. Kathleen Norris the fierce Irish love that burns for the persecuted. Tom Gill the love of a Mexican sheep dog for its master. Bruno Lessing, Jewish love with a Gipsy temperament! Thomas Burke, the immolating love of a Chinese! But love has its laughs as well as sighs, and the biggest come with Wallace Smith out of Mrs. Fisher's boarding-house for vaudevillians!

Cosmopolitan Magazine costs more than other magazines because it is the finest magazine of fiction ever published.

What! 4 vessels cooking over one burner?

AT your Gas Company is being conducted a new-day cooking demonstration.

Women are marvelling at it! Never a gas-range which did such things before! What does it mean?

Mean? Why, the gas range has been revolutionized. Now, in one range, are combined the automatic convenience of the electric range, the easy capacity of the coal range, the quick heat of the gas-range. The modern cooking heat is here!

The Smoothtop Gas Range has a flat top, like a table—a solid top, like a coal range. Underneath this top are Super Vulcan Burners. This new burner with its ingenious aeration plate, doesn't look like an ordinary burner—and it isn't. It operates on the advanced principle of pre-heating. So hot, so steady is the flame that each burner produces a cooking-warming area of 4 times its own size. You can do speed-cooking, boiling, simmering, warming—all at one time, all over one single burner.

Now—on the top of your gas range—you get a selection of zoned heats. Meals almost cook themselves. Food acquires that old-time flavor and savor. It is an entirely new cookery—better, easier.

Note all these things at your Gas Company's demonstration. Note also how smart are Smoothtop's lines. There are new things to learn, now that Smoothtop is here.

Oven-heat Control, too!

75% of all cooking is done top-stove. But Smoothtop also has oven-heat control, the little wheel at the oven's side.

Architects and Builders are especially invited to investigate the New Smoothtop. Its console lines and space-saving proportions spell a big step forward in kitchen-planning.

A transformation of charming insouciance. It simulates exactly the coiffure of a well-known actress.

You don't know how many women are wearing these TRANSFORMATIONS!

WHILE their own hair is being treated for thinness and lack-lustre, smart women adopt Pierre Transformations.—"Why show it to the world," they say, "in this struggling, unbeautiful state? Let it rest and improve beneath a becoming, natural-looking and well-ventilated transformation—one of Pierre's!"

And the world remains none the wiser. For who—except Pierre—would doubt that such lovely hair was, in very truth and naturalness, the owner's own?

Talented and accomplished women, known for their beautiful hands, care for them the effective Cutex way.

At the FASHIONABLE FRENCH RESORTS they prefer this method of manicuring . .

"Cutex preparations are seen in all the smart shops of Nice and Deauville, of Cannes and Biarritz — small salons patronized by women who observe the niceties of the toilette." Mlle. Spinelly, charming French actress, known here and abroad.

"I believe most Frenchwomen feel as I do that the safest, easiest way to have smooth, even nail rims is with Cutex." Madame Simone, distinguished French actress of international fame.

THE Frenchwoman, who is known for the perfection of her toilette, has enthusiastically endorsed Cutex.

Her nails are delicately rounded. Smoothly framed in ovals of firm skin. And gaily boast their radiant pink finish.

It is the effective Cutex method that keeps her finger tips so flawlessly groomed. For at the smart French Resorts—Deauville, Biarritz, Nice, Cannes, Aix-les-Bains—this is the method that the exquisitely groomed woman depends on. In fact, there and in Paris itself, more Cutex manicure preparations are sold than any other kind!

The Frenchwoman uses this method: First she washes her hands and files the nails. Dips orange stick in Cutex, twists a bit of cotton around the end and dips in the bottle again. Gently she loosens and removes the dead dry skin which clings to the nail base. Passes the stick, still wet with Cutex, under the tips to clean and bleach them, and smooths a tiny bit of Nail White under them. Now gives her hands a final rinsing.

Then, for a lovely brilliance, she chooses one of the splendid Cutex Nail Polishes. How exquisitely finished her hands look!

Cutex sets are 35c to $5.00. Separate preparations 35c. Or see special offer.

Moulded Inlaid No. 5063.

NOW, confess, what was your first impression of these pretty floors? Did you guess "l-i-n-o-l-e-u-m"?

Or did you mentally echo the enthusiastic comment of Miss Ada F. Howard, decorator with the Arden Studios, New York, "prettier than I ever dreamed a floor could be"?

And really this is not linoleum as most women know it. For, ever since Armstrong's Jaspé Linoleum was first introduced eight years ago, Armstrong has given new significance to linoleum as a floor material.

Each year new designs by Armstrong have swept away old ideas about linoleum. And in 1926 Armstrong again presents new standards in linoleum manufacture, achievements in beautiful floors that will well repay a trip to the stores to see.

Embossed Handcraft Tile Inlaid the latest Armstrong creation

All the linoleum you have ever seen had a perfectly smooth surface. But now Armstrong offers a new linoleum possessing what architects call "texture." It is illustrated at the right.

Here are tiles of similar color not monotonously matched—a free pattern with no repeat to catch the eye—and these tiles stand upraised beside the cement-toned interliners that frame them. Truly a sensation in linoleum making and an exclusive Armstrong offering.

A sun room in the Kapock House, Philadelphia, with a floor of Armstrong's Marble Tile Inlaid Linoleum No. 76 laid with black border.

A floor of inexpensive printed linoleum appropriate to kitchen and breakfast alcove. No. 7183. A mop keeps it clean.

Marbleized Tile Inlaids—with a very special quality

Armstrong's Marbleized Linoleum is truly inlaid—even the "marbling" or graining runs through to the burlap back.

Designs of Armstrong's Inlaid Linoleum will remain clean and distinct as long as the floor lasts—and no one can say how long that is. For when one of these floors is properly laid—cemented in place over a lining of builders' deadening felt—it is a permanent floor. Refinishing is never needed.

Wax it occasionally; it will glow with a mellow sheen. Throw your fine fabric rugs over it; what a rich background it makes for both rugs and furniture!

Printed Linoleum that is low-priced but doesn't look it

Fine linseed oil paints are used to print the neat designs on to a genuine cork-base linoleum body.

While not expensive, these printed patterns are far too durable and attractive to be confused with temporary floor coverings.

Armstrong's Linoleum is being featured in most good department, furniture and linoleum stores this week.

In "The Attractive Home—How to Plan Its Decoration," Hazel Dell Brown outlines her simple, effective method of planning pretty rooms based on patterned floors of Armstrong's Linoleum. Also contains colorplates of model interiors and new linoleum patterns. A postal brings it.

The Duchesse de Richelieu tells how to keep the skin exquisitely soft and lovely

BEAUTY, charm and one of the mightiest names of France have made the Duchesse de Richelieu a young woman whose word is sought by many. In her New York home she presides over the famous collection of books, furniture and bibelots, which has come down to her husband from the great Cardinal, first Duc de Richelieu

AS a young girl growing up in aristocratic Baltimore, there was that about the future Duchesse de Richelieu which caused all who saw her to predict for her an unusual career. Her head was finely modeled with its crown of golden hair. The blue eyes looked out from under delicately level brows. Her skin had exquisite fineness, fragile delicacy, the bloom of a young race.

When by her marriage this favored young American added to her native endowment one of the proudest names of old France, she was drawn at once into the glamorous whirl of international social life.

Asked how, through all her exacting social activities, she continues to retain her freshness and bloom, she replied:

"Care of the skin. It is an obligation always to appear with a complexion fresh and radiant, never betraying the least trace of any weariness or imperfection. And this care, in my opinion, can best be had by the daily use of Pond's Two Creams."

EVERY SKIN NEEDS THESE TWO CREAMS

Before retiring, cleanse your skin deeply with Pond's Cold Cream, patting it on lavishly and letting it stay on several moments. Now with a soft cloth or tissue remove all the cream and dirt which its pure oils have brought to the surface. Repeat the process. If your skin is dry, pat more cream on and leave it over night.

SEVERAL times by day, especially after an outing, cleanse your skin with Pond's Cold Cream the same way, and finish with a dash of cold water or a rub with ice to close the pores.

After these daytime cleansings, smooth over your refreshed, invigorated skin, ever so little of Pond's Vanishing Cream. Its soft protection against wind and dust and chapping cold makes it delightful to use just before going out. But what pleases you most of all is the even exquisite tone it lends your skin. Flick on your powder and see with enchantment how evenly it lies, how natural is the glow it gives your skin, how long it stays!

Begin today to follow this method recommended by the lovely Duchesse de Richelieu. The Pond's Extract Company, 131 Hudson Street, New York City.

DANDRUFF?

Bottle Bacilli, the cause of Dandruff. Illustration Reproduced from Hazen's "Diseases of the Skin." C. V. Mosby, Publisher.

Dandruff is a disease difficult to cure, but easy to check.

Unless properly treated it has a persistent tendency to reappear, and often in more virulent form, with possible loss of hair or even total baldness.

The treatment to check dandruff requires constant cleanliness and the use of a suitable antiseptic solution to combat the disease and to heal the scalp.

It's a danger signal!

DANDRUFF is a danger signal. If you have it you should do something about it.

Perhaps you never knew it before, but dandruff is a germ disease. It spreads by infection from personal contact, as with the common use of combs and brushes. Children, for instance, are never troubled with dandruff until actually infected by some contact.

Dandruff is a disease difficult to cure but easy to check. It has a tendency to reappear, unless properly treated, and often brings with it the possible loss of hair or actual baldness.

The ideal treatment to combat dandruff conditions is the systematic use of Listerine, the safe antiseptic.

We have received hundreds of unsolicited letters from Listerine users, who are most enthusiastic in their claims for what Listerine will do in this way. If you are troubled with dandruff you owe it to yourself to try it.

The use of Listerine for dandruff is not complicated. You simply douse it on your scalp, full strength, and massage thoroughly. The effect is antiseptic, cleansing and healing. And you will be amazed to see how this treatment, followed systematically, combats dandruff.

Moreover, Listerine will not discolor the hair nor will it stain fabrics.

Not only men but women have become devoted users of Listerine for this purpose—women, particularly, since bobbed hair has been in vogue and has made them more conscious of dandruff if it happened to be present.

Try Listerine some evening when your scalp feels tired and itchy. Dandruff is probably causing the trouble. Apply it generously and then massage vigorously. You will find it a stimulating tonic for the scalp, and in addition to combating dandruff, you will find that it adds that luster and softness to the hair that is so important a part of being well-groomed.—Lambert Pharmacal Co., St. Louis, U.S.A.

"Oh, but they're hard on shoes!"

But millions of mothers are grateful in having found these "Better shoes for less money"

LIVING costs are high. Household allowances are generally limited. And dollars don't stretch.

But boys and girls go racing and tearing along just the same. It's such a wonderful world—so new to them!—they never think of easing the strain on the family purse by being careful with their shoes. "How can the budget for children's shoes be reduced?" you ask.

We have the answer. We have had thirty-five years of shoemaking experience. We make more than twelve million pairs of boys' and girls' shoes every year. Our facilities for tanning leather, making rubber soles and heels, and manufacturing shoes are among the largest in the world. All these advantages are reflected in

Endicott-Johnson shoes for boys and girls

Never before have you seen a line of shoes having so much quality for so little money. Never have you bought shoes made under working conditions such as exist in this "Industrial Democracy"—an organization whose principles and plan of operation are unique in the shoe industry. . . . Where 17,000 trained E-J Workers are given special incentives for putting their best workmanship into every pair of shoes they make.

Endicott-Johnson shoes are based on actual wearing tests. We put shoes on real, active youngsters. We try them out. Watch them wear. See that designs are right. Lasts correct. Soles, heels, toes and uppers proportionately strong.

Every step in the manufacture of Endicott-Johnson shoes is considered from the viewpoint of those who buy them.

Fifty thousand stores

We urge every mother of growing boys or girls to examine a pair of Endicott-Johnson shoes. Note the leather—tanned by ourselves, by special processes. The sturdy construction. The solid foundations. See how nicely these shoes are finished. The comfortable shapes. Up-to-date patterns. Finally, consider the reasonable prices*—made possible by our huge production.

PLAYS AND PLAYERS OF THE SPRINGTIME STAGE

BARRIE THE UNTAMED

"What Every Woman Knows" in Revival With Helen Hayes—Satirical Low Comedy

By J. BROOKS ATKINSON.

IN the last act of Sir James M. Barrie's "What Every Woman Knows," now in revival at the Bijou, Mr. Venables complains of John Shand's political speech, "But it has no special quality of its own." As every one remembers, however, Maggie slyly supplies that "special quality" in a second draft of her husband's speech, "those delicious little touches" that Venables admires so enthusiastically and that ultimately, one assumes, raise John Shand to the ministry. In a sense, Sir James here supplies the precise phrases to describe the glamour of a Barrie play, like the womanly bloom of which Maggie wisely observes: "If you have it you don't need to have anything else, and if you don't have it it doesn't much matter what else you have." That bloom, that charm, that glow suffuses this imaginative little comedy, purging its sentiment of all sentimentality and giving its romance the limpid illusion of wisdom.

But, unlike the woman who has charm and who therefore need not have "anything else," Sir James has "something else" far more rare in the theatre and far more vigorous than the ideology of his plays; he has a vision of life outside the theatre. All the most alluring touches in "What Every Woman Knows," for instance, are as foreign to the ordinary commerce of the stage as Barrie is to the narrowly circumscribed company of professional playwrights. His pawky humor, his enjoyment of the obtuseness of his characters, his dramatization of spirit, to say nothing of his initial character conceptions, do not smell of the theatre. But, most of all, the domestic allusions in "What Every Woman Knows" bespeak the sense of values peculiar to a man who knows the homes of middle-class people with a sympathetic understanding. In the first act, to quote Barrie's own flavorsome stage direction, "There is one very fine chair, but, heavens! not for sitting on; just to give the room a social standing in an emergency. It sneers at the other chairs with an air of insolent superiority, like a haughty bride who has married into the house for money." And in the last act, when Maggie wants to bring romance down from the azure empyrean to the plain homes in which even lovers must live, she gives final instructions to the swanlike Lady Sybil: "I think you'll find the house in good order, Lady Sybil. I have had the vacuum cleaners in. I'll give you the keys to the linen and the silver plate; I have them in that bag. The carpet on the upper landing is a good deal frayed. The ceiling of the dining room would be the better of a new lick of paint"—Could anything better describe the tyranny that patient housewives exercise over their influential and dignified men folk? In fact, these are the touches not of a playwright, but of a novelist.

NEVERTHELESS, the Barrie genius is his ability to translate all these ideas and fancies in terms of the theatre; essentially a novelist, he yet writes for the stage like a dramatist. For many of the most illuminating incidents of "What Every Woman Knows" are purely visual business. John Shand's initial entrance by the window, his settling down to work at the table with his pen, his spattering of ink on the carpet and the astounded Wylies looking in cautiously by the door are pure theatre. Consider the visual contrast between the brilliant Comtesse de la Brière and the overdressed Maggie, to say nothing of the egregiously beautiful Lady Sybil. Or, more subtly, John Shand's complacent self-analysis: "I'm an extraordinary, queer character, and I suppose nobody knows me well except myself; but I know you, Maggie, to the very roots of you." Here the dialogue is purely literary, but the effect in the theatre, with Maggie making no reply but looking ineffably wise, is the gayest sort of dramatic contrast in spirit. Although "What Every Woman Knows" affords the completest delight in reading by the lamp, especially with Barrie's deftly entertaining stage directions, in the theatre it ripples constantly with dramatic effervescence. Like his neighbor in Adelphi, the beaverized G. B. S., Barrie lives not in the theatre but in the broad world. In comparison with Shaw, however, he writes his plays solely for the actor.

In the leading part the current revival presents Helen Hayes, who is not only one of our most promising younger actresses but has already a wisp of a career of which she may well be proud. At least once before, in "Dear Brutus," she spread a surface of charm over a Barrie play, and now in "What Every Woman Knows" she is molding material with which she has some familiarity. Her performance has moments of piercing beauty, and after the curtain fell upon the third act on the opening night, closing a most tenderly vivid scene, and Miss Hayes wept a little from gratitude as she took repeated curtain calls, even the sternest John Shands in the audience were not above weeping a little for the same reason. Being a sincere and earnest actress, Miss Hayes's performance communicates exactly those moving qualities that are no less divine inside the theatre than outside. Under the circumstances it would be invidious to suggest that as an actress Miss Hayes feels the emotions of her part a trifle too deeply, and that as she progresses in her craft she will convey the same qualities of feeling, and greater qualities, too, artistically rather than personally. Many of the more volatile facets of Maggie's character escape Miss Hayes: the crisp pride, the mockery, the natural understanding that even Barrie, who caught it, could never explain. In short, there is a good deal of original sin in Maggie. The revival would improve with a description of these tenuous personal traits, as it would likewise improve with a more contrastive John Shand and a better shaded performance.

Satire in "The Cocoanuts."

FOR several months New York playgoers have indicated in the most practical form their entire approval of the Marx brothers in Irving Berlin's and George S. Kaufman's musical comedy, "The Cocoanuts." While most musical shows are giving short weight in comedy, arrogantly substituting for humor a vast scenic wealth, Oriental in its opulence, "The Cocoanuts" offers as much rowdy comedy as the average man can endure in one evening, and gives good measure, whatever the quality, in beauty, chorus and music. One does not envy the soprano and tenor compelled to compete with the Marx brothers on any program, for slapstick always earns a quicker response than the most golden of sentimental melodies. But even though "The Cocoanuts" does not enjoy Mr. Berlin's most ingratiating score, and certainly puts up with execrable lyrics, the conventions of musical entertainment are nevertheless sufficiently honored to serve the general occasion. Of this genre all we need is sufficient breathing spell to adjust our waistcoats and neckwear between the boomerang comics of the Marx brothers. They hold the stage, not perfunctorily, but boisterously almost constantly after their first appearance. And the solemn face of the curtain does not ring down until nearly 11:30, after Harpo's humiliating flourish with the heavy Spanish cape and Chico's roulade at the piano.

Indeed, so loud and chaotic is the humor, so relentless in its accumulative effect, ringing two or three changes on even the vilest puns, that we sometimes forget that most of it is satire. Not gentle satire, smilingly acquiescing in light-hearted amusement, but stinging and mordant, fairly bitter in its contempt for the stupidities of American commercial life. Of course, one does not take it seriously from the loquacious lips of Groucho as he swings around the stage, with a racial stoop at once hopeful and fearful, peering through his hastily adjusted spectacles. Nor does one bestow the accolade of the higher criticism upon jibes that ridicule themselves as well as their objectives. Part of the hilariousness of Groucho's patter, it will be remembered, rises from the amazing resourcefulness with which it shifts field and whacks its own ivory pate, as in the auction scene:

Now, folks, we'll take lot number twenty-five. Right over there where you're standing. Say, would you people mind taking your feet off of that lot? You're getting it dirty. Now here is a lot! I know it doesn't look very big on top, but it's yours as far down as you want to go. Now, then, what am I offered for lot number twenty-five? Where did Joseph P. Day go? What am I offered for lot number twenty-five? What am I offered for lot number twenty-five and a set of O. Henry? What am I offered for the O. Henry alone? Does anybody want to buy a set of dishes? I'll wrestle anybody in the crowd for five bucks.

AS nearly as any single excerpt from the script, this auctioneer's harangue indicates the method of the travesty. Here is a hustling auctioneer, not merely eager to sell nothing for something, but confident that he can do so by offering a stock premium if necessary; and so engrossed in trade that anything goes, dishes or wrestling if real estate fails him. All this with a useless pun hammered into the middle. It is comic because it employs the barefaced sales devices that we tolerate and to which we often succumb, even though we know that business is not philanthropy. Buyer and seller eagerly cover the harsh realities of business transactions with a golden mist of bogus romance. The central satiric idea of "The Cocoanuts" does not vary much from this auction scene. ("Do you know what an auction is?" says Groucho. "Sure," replies Chico the Wop. "I come to this country on Atlantic Auction!") On the one hand we have the suckers, incredulous, stupid, ambitious; and on the other the handkerchief-game experts, up to their old tricks again, or perhaps the old-time dealers in gold bricks. Beneath the elaborate formality of the occasion, the immaculate hall-boys in the hotel, the pretentiousness of the lobby, the suave sales instinct in Groucho (so meagerly achieved), whether he is selling lots or estimating the cost of a state dinner; beneath all this is space, emptiness, a vacuum—just nothing at all. If every one is on his guard against being bunked, every one also confidently expects to bunk some one else. We have the usual cajolements, the false visions of what this lot may be if something unexpected happens to it, the trading in futures, the safeguarding of appearances, the reliance upon quick wits, the crowd formula, the time element, the old bromides—all worked up into hysteria and fever. As Groucho says, alluringly:

Eight hundred beautiful residences will be built right here. They are as good as up. Better. You can have any kind of house you want to. You can even get stucco. Oh, how you can get stucco. Now is the time to buy, while the new boom is on. Remember, a new boom sweeps clean, and don't forget the guarantee. If these lots don't double themselves in a year, I don't know what you can do about it.

"The Cocoanuts" does not stop with real estate salesmanship, thrusting on the customer something that he does not want. In the same ebullient spirit it punctures the conventions of criminal probes, the hotel business, the ordering of dinners, the rhapsodies of love-making, the unctuous manners of musical comedies and unimaginative life in general. Perhaps the neatest thrust is the long after-

THE COURSE OF BARRIE IN AMERICA

SPEAKING botanically if not downright arboreally, in the garden of theatricals some playwrights flourish as luxuriantly as tropical undergrowth and fade as quickly; a few come up afresh year after year like the delphinium, or, to get to common gardening, asparagus. Among those in the latter classification is Sir James M. Barrie, whose "What Every Woman Knows" was brought to New York last week for the first time without Maude Adams, but with Helen Hayes, which as a compensating factor seems to mean a lot.

Barrie's plays are probably performed more often in this country, reliable statisticians assert, than those of any other modern dramatist, not excepting Bernard Shaw, who is kept in the running largely by the Theatre Guild. And this has been Sir James's fortune since Maude Adams first introduced him to the American theatre through her appearance in "The Little Minister" in 1897. As long as she acted, she kept Barrie to the fore—indeed, the two names, hers and his, became as closely linked as those of her entrepreneur—the late Charles Frohman—and the scene of most of her appearances—the Empire Theatre.

For Miss Adams, following a hiatus of six years in the Barrie cycle, played "Quality Street" in 1903, "Peter Pan" in 1905, "What Every Woman Knows" in 1908, "The Legend of Leonora" in 1914 and in "A Kiss for Cinderella" in 1917. It was in this last that she was taken ill on tour and since then she has never appeared on the stage.

The first Barrie revivals in America reared their whimsical heads under Mr. Frohman's direction, with Miss Adams, of course, as star, back in 1907, when both "Quality Street" and "The Little Minister" were done again. It was in that year also that Miss Adams revived "Peter Pan" on tour. Thus for almost a score of years Barrie revivals have come and gone, with more or less success. Again when, in 1916, Miss Adams appeared for the second time in "The Little Minister," it was her next to last season in Barrie or anything else.

Another star took a fling at Barrie early in her career and likewise met with success. This was Ethel Barrymore, who found "Alice Sit-by-the-Fire" so popular that she played two seasons in it. In 1911 she tried again, this time with "The Twelve-Pound Look," which has long served her as a vaudeville vehicle and will do so again this Spring. John Barrymore made his Barrie début with his sister in 1905 in "Alice" and rejoined her in 1912 in a play which few, including the wiseacres, can remember—the reason for this being that it was, in the argot, "a flop." The play was "A Slice of Life," and in addition to a brace of Barrymores it contained Hattie Williams among its luminaries.

Any mention of Barrie in America would not be complete without recalling that William Gillette made a tremendous success in "The Admirable Crichton" when it was produced in 1903. It was fifteen years before Gillette tried again, and even veteran playgoers can remember back as far as 1918 when "Dear Brutus" came to town and Helen Hayes played her first Barrie rôle. And, of course, there were "Mary Rose," which Ruth Chatterton did not so long ago, and her recent revival of "The Little Minister."

The Barrie revivals, then, have been confined mostly to Maude Adams, who brought again to the light of day "Quality Street," "The Little Minister," "Peter Pan" and "What Every Woman Knows." In New York but two have been revived without her, and these the last two of the above named.

As long as Miss Adams was on the stage the majority of the Barrie plays were restricted for her use. Since then they have been released for stock and have been quite popular with a variety of companies, such as those run by Jessie Bonstelle in Detroit, Henry Duffy in San Francisco and Stuart Walker in Cincinnati. Obviously this lessens their possible drawing power if staged by legitimate companies.

Whatever Gilbert and Sullivan are in the field of operetta to musical organizations in small towns—and no person who has seen one of these productions can deny that they are something—Barrie is in the straight dramatic field. In spite of the stiff royalty asked—Sir James, for example, with a New York production gets 10 per cent. on everything up to an $8,000 gross and 15 per cent. of all the receipts over that, and amateur rights are correspondingly high—all of the dramatic clubs seem to have a preference for his works.

Records in the Frohman office show that there have been ninety-six performances of various Barrie plays since July. "Quality Street" is the most popular with twenty performances; then follows "Dear Brutus" with eighteen; "The Admirable Crichton" with sixteen; "The Twelve Pound Look" with twelve; "A Kiss for Cinderella" with seven; "Shall We Join the Ladies?" with six, and "Rosalind" with five. "Alice Sit-by-the-Fire" has had four performances; "What Every Woman Knows" three; "The Old Lady Shows Her Medals" and "Half an Hour" two each, and "Mary Rose" one.

The three performances of "What Every Woman Knows" were in two places, in Berkeley, Cal., at the State University's Greek Theatre, where Miss Adams was wont to play, and in Hastings, Neb. Hastings is too small ever to have seen a first-class touring company, as its population is about 11,000. But the directory lists it as having a Presbyterian College, which accounts for it all. . . . And now, as addenda, comes the announcement that "What Every Woman Knows" will be done once again, this time tomorrow night by the Repertory Theatre of Boston.

THE WEEK'S EVENTS

IOLANTHE—Tomorrow night at the Plymouth Theatre. Herewith Winthrop Ames turns his attention to Gilbert and Sullivan, and that should be an interesting event. The company will include Ernest Lawford, John Barclay, J. Humbird Duffey, William Williams, William C. Gordon, Adele Sanderson, Vera Ross, Kathryn Reece, Sybil Sterling, Paula Langlan and Lois Bennett.

POMEROY'S PAST—Tomorrow night at the Longacre Theatre. Clare Kummer, in recent seasons only an occasional writer for the theatre, is the author of this comedy. Ernest Truex will be starred, and Laura Hope Crews, Helen Chandler, Osgood Perkins and Richard Barbee will be among others in the cast.

BUNK OF 1926—Wednesday night at the Broadhurst Theatre. This is the revue recently seen at the Heckscher Theatre. The chief entertainers are Gene Lockhart, Dolly Sterling, Jay Fassett and Boots McKenna.

GOSSIP OF THE RIALTO

Mr. Marcin's Plays — When the Audience Speaks—London and "Abie's Irish Rose"

MAX MARCIN, who has been devoting himself to the Coast and films in recent months, came back to New York last week with news of two new plays. One, of which he is sole author, is entitled "Shopworn" and will be produced next season by Crosby Gaige and Sam H. Harris. It is a play of motion picture life, being concerned with the calamity which befalls the popular screen actor who permits scandal to touch his name. Mr. Marcin has been encouraged to hope that Jeanne Eagels may play the leading rôle.

The second Marcin play, now being written in collaboration with Donald Ogden Stewart, is a comedy entitled "Help Yourself." Mr. Stewart is at present in Los Angeles, and Mr. Marcin's plans, at the time he vouchsafed all this information, called for his own departure today.

Considering the size and polyglot nature of theatre audiences, it is perhaps surprising that members of audiences do not more frequently deliver themselves of eloquent and audible opinion. Which introduces the fact that at a performance of "The Chief Thing" a few evenings ago, along about the middle of the first act, a woman in the first row solemnly arose in her seat. Fixing her eye on McKay Morris, then in the middle of a scene, she paused long enough to say, "Mr. Morris, I wish you good evening," and proceeded up the aisle.

The London Morning Post permits itself a bit of reminiscence about "Abie's Irish Rose," apropos of the fact that Robert Courtneidge is angling for the London rights. Thus one learns, not without a good deal of surprise, that in this country the play "was refused by most of the managers and ultimately put on by an 'art group,' tired of searching for highbrow material with money in it." . . . The Post further adds that the play is not likely to succeed here" (meaning London, of course) "unless it can be modified and put in the shape of 'Paddy the Next Best Thing' or 'Peg o' My Heart.'" And guesses are in order as to just what that means.

"Countess Maritza," which the Shuberts have lately been trying in Brooklyn and environs, is said to be highly promising. Lee Shubert, who may be excused for being prejudiced, declares that it will be a greater success than "The Student Prince." The New York première is being deferred until the Fall.

Russell Janney, having encountered fortune with "The Vagabond King," is preparing to do another next season by the same authors. It will be a musical version of Justin Huntly McCarthy's "The O'Flynn," again with Mr. Friml's music and Mr. Post's and Mr. Hooker's book and lyrics. The production will not be ready until December. Meanwhile "The Vagabond King" continues to be enormously successful and three troupes will carry it on tour next season.

The play entitled "We Americans," referred to in this column a week ago, is the work of Max Siegel and Milton Herbert Gropper, and not of Mr. Gropper alone. Sam H. Harris is the producer and the play will be tried in Atlantic City during the week of May 17.

Albert Lewis, solo producer since Max Gordon went over to the varieties, announces several productions for the new season. There will be a farce called "S. O. S.," written by Rudolph Lothar, author of "The Werewolf," and adapted by Owen Davis; there will be "Storm Center," called a domestic comedy, by Jessie Ernest and Max Simon, the latter a play agent; there will be "Loose Ends," by Dion Titheradge, an English actor who played here with Laurette Taylor in "The Harp of Life," and who has written about nine hundred sketches for English revues since that time; there will be "The Spider," by Fulton Oursler, once one of Mr. MacFadden's managing editors, and Lowell Brentano, and there will be a musical entertainment called "The International Revue," which will include items American, French and English.

Lynn Starling's newest play is entitled "A Handful of Silver." It will probably receive its first production on the Coast. . . "Twelve Miles Out" will end its New York run in another week. . . . A play entitled "Just Life," by John Bowle, will open in Connecticut a week hence. The cast will include Marjorie Wood, Millicent Hanley (remembered by a few, at least, from "It's a Boy"), and Vivian Tobin.

There will be only one more week of Mr. Jolson and "Artists and Models" at the Winter Garden. Doubtless the Shuberts would be glad to keep their comedian longer, but there is also Europe to be considered. The next revue for the Winter Garden went into rehearsal during the past week, so it can hardly be ready a week hence. It is more likely, revues being what they are, to be four weeks or five before it is ready for Winter Garden presentation. The new production, incidentally, will not be called either "Artists and Models" or "The Passing Show of 1926," but "The Great Temptations."

"White Collars," which every one in New York has surely forgotten, ended its Los Angeles run last night. The news, however, is that the run was 116 weeks long, albeit the playhouse was a minute one.

"Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" will open tonight in Detroit, and goes thence to Chicago. . . . The Copley Theatre in Boston will offer a hitherto unproduced play tomorrow night. It is the work of one William Cotton, who surely comes from New England and its name is "Andrew Takes a Wife." . . . Walter Hampden will play "Cyrano" for another four or five weeks, and will then call it a season, and be entitled to. In the Fall, he declares, he will be seen in a modern play. . . . Marjorie Rambeau, out on the Coast, is said to be anxious to act "They Knew What They Wanted." The Bennett-Lord company, incidentally, wound up its tour in Cleveland last night. . . . Mr. Cohan will open his new Chicago playhouse on or about May 10 with a comedy of his own authorship. Its name is "The Home-Towners," and Mr. Cohan himself will not play in it—or so he thinks now. He will then devote himself to that promised revue.

The theatrical season is about spent. But two new productions come to town this week; for the 26th only a single première is announced to date. This is "At Mrs. Beam's," coming to the Guild. Other possibilities for the week are "Over Here," a play about the returned soldier; "Storm," by the author of "At Mrs. Beam's"; "Bad Habits of 1926," a revue, and "The Smart Alec," a play with a little music and a good deal of Frank Fay. . . . Last night's departures included "The Butter and Egg Man," after a season's run at the Longacre; "Glory Hallelujah," a failure at the Broadhurst, and "Schweiger."

This, in part, is how the Atlantic City Daily Press described "Over Here":

"The play opens in the 'John Prendergast Canteen,' established by a Connecticut pink-pill magnate, who is talked into giving jobs in his home to a number of the boys who have just returned from 'over there.' An epidemic of missing things, which occurs immediately after their installation, brings about a complication of suspicions and vindications that is amusing and at times thrilling. A romance between the daughter of the 'self-made' millionaire and one of his most violently suspected employes provides the love interest so necessary to a play of this type."

VAUDEVILLE NOTES

CANTOR JOSEF ROSENBLATT and Willie and Eugene Howard will be at the Hippodrome for the coming week, but they won't all attempt "Eli, Eli." Further among the Sixth Avenue music hall's attractions will be Lady Oden Pearse, British violinist; Toto, and Charles Chase, who eats lighted matches, if you must know.

Naximova will be the headliner at the Palace in "That Sort," described, and probably with truth, as a "tense little drama in one act." Basil McDonald Hastings is the author. . . . When Naximova last appeared at the Palace, it may be remembered, her vehicle was "The Unknown Lady," by George Middleton, a sketch which was not pleasing to the Keith-Albee office. She was asked to withdraw the playlet and her salary of $15,000 for the weeks she was booked was paid in full. This time, it appears, she will probably have no such luck. . . . Also at the Palace will be Ted Trevor and Dina Harris, English ballroom dancers, with Carl Fenton's Gypsy Orchestra, and Sylvia Clark.

Eighteen Albertina Rasch Girls, lately occupied with George White's "Scandals," will start tomorrow as the permanent ballet corps at the Hippodrome. They replace the Allan K. Foster troupe, which goes into rehearsal for a new Shubert revue. . . . Jack Delaney, light heavyweight boxer, will head a sports carnival at the Hippodrome the week of May 3.

B. F. Keith's Eighty-first Street celebrates its twelfth anniversary this coming week. . . . Louise Glaum has been given ten weeks' booking in the two-a-day houses in "The Sins of Julia Boyd". . . . Norman Phillips Jr., who has been in the "Scandals," is returning to vaudeville with his father and mother in a new act.

VARIED NEWS OF THE THEATRE AND ITS PEOPLE

JUST BEFORE THE BATTLE

WHAT do actors and actresses do during the portentous hours just preceding their openings?

This question has been asked, the writer knows, by several different people and it has probably been speculated upon by countless others. Wherefore at least one person has constituted himself an investigating committee to inquire into the private lives of the players and extract from them information concerning their actions during the period of nervous strain and tension that precedes a theatrical première.

The results are somewhat interesting and are appended herewith in the form of a symposium, to which many of the prominent players in current productions have contributed.

Florence Reed of "The Shanghai Gesture"—I begin the day as usual, passing the morning in practicing at the piano, taking the dogs for an airing and pretending there is nothing afoot. By 3 o'clock in the afternoon the pretense is worn thin and I admit, reluctantly, to myself that opening in a new play is not the casual business I pretended it was in the morning.

By 5 o'clock I'm nervous. There was a time when terror of the critics smote me at this hour, lending an additional charm to the twilight. That's over now. By 6 o'clock, it is possible that I may be regarded as a menace by my family and friends. Should the weather be inclement, my mother will most likely suggest that I wear my rubbers. The suggestion always makes me collapse completely. By 8 o'clock, I understand thoroughly what is meant by aberrations and martyrdom. After that it isn't so bad, unless the notices. . . .

Ina Claire, currently the star of "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney"—Before the opening of "The Quaker Girl" I walked around town for hours and came to the theatre even more tired than I normally am when I come to the theatre. Now usually I do what I did before the openings of "Polly With a Past" and "The Gold Diggers"—that is, go to a vaudeville or movie show to take my mind as far as possible off the impending event. In the mornings, of course, I am occupied with such matters as getting my hair done, my hands manicured and generally trying to look my best. Just before I go to the theatre I lie down in an endeavor to take a nap, but I usually end up by just beating the bedclothes. This last opening, however, I didn't have time to go any place, as we were busy with scene and light rehearsals almost up to curtain time.

Groucho Marx, constituting himself an unofficial spokesman for his other irrepressible brothers—We rise at 5 A. M. and have an alcohol rub, after which we take the alcohol internally. Then we do our shadow boxing, which we follow with a light breakfast, consisting principally of steak. After that Harpo reads to the rest of us from the works of Maeterlinck, Shaw, Pinero and J. M. Barrie. We next practice thumbing our noses at pictures of the critics, except two or three who shall be nameless. Before "The Cocoanuts" we had to add to this by walking up back alleys to avoid our relatives, all of whom wanted seats for the opening.

Jack Osterman, seen in a dressing room somewhere in the recesses of the Century Theatre—I'll have to base my whole story on "A Night in Paris," as it was my first real event of the sort. The evening before we had a dress rehearsal which lasted all night. At 4 o'clock in the morning I drank some grape juice and smoked eight Corona Coronas, which were not furnished by the Shuberts, and managed to stick it out, having previously forgotten all my lines. Finally I got to bed and when I arose in the afternoon I took a shower and then went for a long drive. Then I asked myself, "How nervous can a man get?" squared my shoulders and went to the theatre.

Fay Templeton—Before "Pinafore" I sat alone and thought about it, going through my part constantly. I had been away from the stage and particularly from this sort of thing so long that I was actually afraid of disgracing my family and home. I came to the theatre at 6:30, although we didn't ring up until 8:40. As a good luck omen and in accordance with my pet superstition, I always carry the verses of my first song somewhere on my person—this night I had them in my basket together with a cup of water and a sponge to wet my lips should they get dry.

George Jessel of the "The Jazz Singer"—I was really sort of an actor-manager, and so the day of the première I went around to all the ticket brokers, asking them what they had heard about the show. They looked up my pals and requested them all to come the second night, because I knew if we weren't a hit, the second night would be terrible. During the afternoon I suddenly wanted to change all the suits I was supposed to wear and I couldn't remember my lines. When I arrived at the theatre I was absolutely nerveless, and then everything went all right. I was more scared the second night than the first. But why ask me? I've only had one opening.

Mary Boland of "Cradle Snatchers"—When I get up on the day of an opening—and it's usually pretty early—I say to myself over and over, "I'm not going to be nervous," and with each repetition I get more and more scared. About 3 o'clock my heart begins to flutter and it keeps up until I speak my first line. Instead of getting easier, each opening becomes worse for me, and I think for most all players. I attribute this to the fact that as the public gets to know us better we imagine they expect more of us.

Louise Closser Hale, speaking both generally and as "One of the Family"—It was just last Autumn that a woman in a high-powered car was driving me to the opening of a play which was to make its timid first bow before a Great Neck audience previous to the New York première. I was to be in that play, and I was suffering the old, old fear which the psychologists have decided has become among actors "class consciousness." There wasn't a chance with our lives that woman wasn't taking as we tore in and out the traffic of the highway. But suddenly she thought of me and slowed down a bit. "I forgot," she said, "Perhaps you're thinking you'll end up in a hospital instead of a theatre."

"Oh!" I gasped. "If I could—if I just could!" A peaceful picture rose before me. The white bed, the mangled limbs, the smell of ether. I tell you it was sweet to me in preference to that zero hour when the curtain was to slither up.

Al Jolson, regarding the Great Winter Garden Tradition—During the day of an opening, depending, of course, on the season of the year, I try to take part in some outdoor activity—motoring, golfing or swimming—and I get as far away from Broadway as possible. Thus before the première of "Big Boy" I could have been found motoring through whatever open country there is near Poughkeepsie. I usually arrive early at the theatre, around 7 o'clock, even if I'm not supposed to go on until 10. From then on I allow myself to get tense and nervous, for if I can scarcely wait for the barrier to be raised, using a racing term that is not unfamiliar to me, at least I know that I will do my best when I finally get on the stage.

Glenn Hunter, after all these months still Young Woodley—I rehearse. And then when I can't rehearse any more for the simple reason that I can't get the rest of the company to work with me, I study my part. Between alternating these two I sometimes sleep and eat. My characterization does not actually jell in my mind until the curtain is up and I play the part, but I try to give it every opportunity to do so in advance.

Thomas Mitchell of "The Wisdom Tooth"—So far I have not become the victim of any particular nervous strain. I regard an opening simply as another performance, and I naturally try to do my best. If anything, I am glad to be rid of the period of rehearsals and study and to begin really to play the part.

Augustin Duncan—Instead of just what an actor does on the day of his opening, I usually have to worry about what a director does, too, and that is at least a thousand and one things. From early morning until curtain time I have instructions to give about electrical effects, properties and costumes. I usually hold a rehearsal or two, make arrangements for flashlights and then, if I'm lucky, get a half hour's rest before dinner. Before the opening of "Juno and the Paycock" I even had to make a final trip to the wigmaker to have him crop the mustache that dripped too much soup at dress rehearsal.

Dennis King, who is also "The Vagabond King"—I usually spend the day of opening in playing billiards. I am a bad player, anyhow, and on that day I seldom even hit any of the balls, but I find that it is a great thing to keep me active. It is also to a certain extent a calming influence upon me. Just before the performance I am naturally very nervous, and as I go on I can't help murmuring a little prayer.

Donald Meek—I get sick. I am so nervous all day that I can't touch a morsel of food, but nevertheless during the performance, in the interludes between my appearances, I usually give an excellent imitation of mal de mer. This is not romantic, but unhappily true. I imagine that many actors have an aversion to food on opening days. George Abbott had to jump in and play a part while we were on the road, prior to the New York opening of "Love 'Em and Leave 'Em." I asked him if he was nervous. He said, "Oh, no." Then I invited him to come downstairs for a sandwich. "I tell you, Donnie," he confessed, "I don't feel much like eating." I can't understand those actors who tell me that they're not nervous at openings. I played stock once for eleven years running, fifty-two weeks a year. I went through the same experience every Monday, except that sometimes it was worse.

Alice Brady, currently in "Bride of the Lamb"—"Eat and grow calm" is my motto before an opening. My panacea for all forms of nervousness is a hearty meal on the night of the gala occasion. Nothing hinders my acting more than an attack of nerves, and to avoid any such mental disorder I make it a point of eating a substantial dinner. No order of caviar or pâté de foie gras forms any pièce de résistance, but steak—indelicate as it may seem. My routine preceding dinner is rest in the afternoon. For me there is no form of relaxation so beneficial as a nap. And this, during my stage experience, has been an unbroken rule. The morning of the opening I usually rehearse. Invariably a director wants one or two scenes tried over again.

Sam White and Eva Puck—If every night were a first night for us, we would be the champion hikers of the universe. Just before "The Girl Friend" opened we had plenty to do. Rehearsals, hairdressers, bootmakers, costumers, more rehearsals and whatnot filled one-half of the twenty-four hours which preceded the opening of our show. You might think that we tried to rest at every other moment, preparing for the ordeal. Instead, this was our program.

8 A. M.—Walk through Central Park.

10 A. M.—At the costumer's.

11 A. M.—Rehearsal.

1 P. M.—Walk to a restaurant and luncheon.

2:30 P. M.—Walk back to the theatre for a rehearsal.

4-5 P. M.—Odd appointments, including hairdresser for Miss Puck and barber for myself, always walking to and fro.

6 P. M.—We met and took a mile walk together.

7 P. M.—Dropped in to see our music teacher to try out our voices. Light supper at 7:20, thence walk to the theatre.

Chrystal Herne, for several months Craig's wife—The hours before an opening are very difficult for me. I am horribly nervous. I get up early because I can't sleep; the day seems long, queer and unreal. If possible I spend it alone, for I find in my nervous state I fritter away too much precious vitality if I see people. I usually do not leave the house. I find a book, something biographical, and try to forget myself in reading of the struggles and achievements of some one of far greater importance than myself. It's a grand way to put things into the right perspective. It lifts me out of myself and makes me completely forget the part I am to play. I never allow myself to think of my part—until late in the day. I leave for the theatre about 7:30, feeling as if I were to be executed, but with a lot of stored-up energy to help me through the ordeal.

Charles Mack of the "Greenwich Village Follies" team of Moran and Mack—I am straining at the leash for three days prior to the opening of a show, and the fact that revues are the most flagrant offenders in the item of postponing openings adds nothing to my peace of mind. From my days in minstrelsy I have drafted the superstition that evil will come to the actor who sits down on an opening day. I even stand while making up. The derivation of this notion I cannot establish, and I wish some one would advance an argument to destroy it. The folly of my eagerness is best indicated by the fact that I madly make up some three hours before I am due to step on the stage, with the result that the black grease paint starts to run—the dressing rooms are always fearfully hot on opening nights—and has to be augmented and reinforced fifty times before I make my hesitant appearance.

William Harrigan, seen at "The Great God Brown"—For me the theatrical première in which I have a part is so much slow torture. The day on which it takes place is never a red letter day for me, but always Blue Monday. In the morning I usually take a long walk, substituting this for my usual daily boxing. Unless there is a rehearsal I stay out until noon. After lunch I try several measures to induce forgetfulness, all of which are usually without success, particularly if they have to do with reading or sleeping. About 7 o'clock I go to the theatre and try to kill more time by repeating the afternoon performance. Just before my first entrance I invariably mutter in agreement with Sir Henry Irving, "Hell is just a succession of first nights."

Mrs. Thomas Whiffen, with "The Two Orphans," but not one of them—Years of work have at least served to make me so methodical in preparation that I am usually letter perfect in my part by the time of the initial performance. During the day before an opening I manage pretty successfully to keep my mind off the event by reading, writing letters, taking a walk and playing poker with my family. I don't worry, for if I have achieved anything in all my years in the theatre it is a calm disregard for the usual "heebies-jeebies" of a first night.

Queenie Smith, engaged for the nonce in "Tip Toes"—Fortunately I have never experienced the ordeal of "opening cold" in New York, but even then on a first night I am nervous beyond the limits of description by printed word. I am saved from hysteria solely by the press of last minute details—new bits of dialogue to go over, dance practice, vocalizing and scene and light rehearsals, which usually consume most of the day. The day of this last opening, about 4 o'clock, they were decorating my dressing room, the stage was being used to hand the scenery, and so as a last resort I hired a taxicab and told the chauffeur to drive me anywhere, as long as he returned to the theatre by 7 o'clock. Hours later I was in what seemed a wilderness—it was really Bronx Park—and, of course the machine would then proceed to break down. The driver was unable to cope with the situation, and as no automobiles were in sight I started on foot for the outskirts of civilization. Finally a park wagon lumbered along, and hailing a teamster, I got to the 180th Street station of the subway. This was in Winter, too, which didn't make the jaunt any pleasanter. The subway, luckily, wasn't tied up, and I got to the theatre just as the half-hour call sounded. After this, I resolved never to travel on an opening day.

Helen Hayes, doing the honors by "What Every Woman Knows"—I usually elect to spend most of the day that a show opens in the familiar routine of rehearsals. The balm of this is that the others are as nervous as I am and in their state I find a certain reassurance. I eat sparingly, walk a lot, get to the theatre early and avoid chattering, except to my maid and mother, who are with me constantly.

Frank Tinney of Mr. Carroll's "Vanities"—I have a roaming tendency that becomes evident on opening days. I am so nervous that I walk around and around, and I rarely eat because I am not able to sit still long enough to do so. Although I am very talkative before making my initial bow, I never know what I have said afterward. The rabbit's foot that I depend on to bring me luck is one of my son's first baby shoes which I hang above the mirror in my dressing room.

James Rennie, currently the Great Gatsby of the Davis-Fitzgerald play—My most important rule is never to go to dinner with any one on an opening night. I try to keep to myself all day long, avoiding the telephone as well as personal contacts, and at night I slink off to a convenient lunchroom and munch in peace, if not in quiet. I try not to be temperamental, and because of my Scotch ancestors I usually am not, but I am superstitious. And my pet superstition is never to take care of my friends for opening night seats.

Berton Churchill, whose current alias is "The Deacon"—I used to spend the twenty-four hours before an opening in fasting and prayer. But having gone through the ordeal on Broadway exactly twenty-five times I have given up these preparations as not particularly efficacious. Now, being a suburbanite, I usually engage a room at the Lambs, determined upon at least ten hours of sleep before the grind of the next day. I toss the night through, and have fitful dreams in which I appear but partly clad before the footlights and read my lines backward. Early in the morning I walk around Central Park reservoir breakfastless and wishing that instead of being an actor I was a steeplejack or a deep sea diver. I regard it as an act of mercy if I can rehearse for the rest of the day.

Mildred Macleod, seen just before departing for Detroit, where she opens tonight—I entered the cast of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" after they had been rehearsing a week, which leaves even more than the usual million last-minute things to be done and worried about during the final day before we open. And, to make matters worse, these twenty-four hours will be spent en route from New York to Detroit accompanied by a distracted dressmaker trying to make eleventh-hour alterations in costumes, a frantic director trying in vain to rehearse in a parlor car, and all the while there will be the awful thought in the back of my mind that I'm not really blond enough to play Lorelei and that beauty salons probably are not open on Sunday.

Claiborne Foster—Instead of spending the day before the opening of "The Patsy" in frenzied consultation with dressmakers, milliners and in rehearsals, I went up to the "Briar Patch," my farm in the Connecticut hills, and succeeded in putting the first performance far out of my mind. I rode through the countryside on my horse and didn't once think of the theatre until it was time to go there to make up.

Hugh Cameron of "Song of the Flame"—After a day that has been sheer agony I reach the theatre on an opening night. Then I drink a long, cool glass of water. Then I drink another long, cool glass of water. I wouldn't go on the stage without it, for it sets me right and restores my lost voice.

And that's that.

Madge Kennedy, Back Among Us in the New Comedy Called "Love-in-a-Mist," at the Gaiety.

HENRY MILLER

By A. E. THOMAS.

For God's sake let us sit upon the ground
And tell sad stories of the death of kings. —Richard II.

A PRINCE of the theatre has made his final exit from the stage. It would become us all if that exit were allowed to pass without such salute as is becoming to the departure of so much grace and dignity and power. I should esteem it a most grateful office if I were allowed to give a voice to what I know is in the hearts of so many who knew and loved this big man of our theatre. Doubtless it will be admitted that I knew him uncommonly well, when it is said that he produced no less than seven of my plays, five of them in New York. If there is any more thorough way of becoming thoroughly acquainted than such an experience I wish some one would tell me what it is. I knew him in three distinct capacities—as a director, as an actor, as a man.

As a director and producer, Henry Miller did more for American authors than any man who ever touched our theatre. From the time he left Charles Frohman's management and became his own manager he produced a steady succession of plays of American authorship. I cannot at this moment give a complete catalogue of these dramatists, but my list includes Richard Harding Davis, Louis Evans Shipman, Rida Johnson Young, William Vaughan Moody, H. S. Sheldon, Lawrence Eyre, Philip Moeller, Lee Wilson Dodd, Percy Mackaye, James Forbes, Jean Webster, Arthur Richman and George Tilton. Of the very few plays of foreign authorship which he produced, "The Servant in the House," by Charles Rann Kennedy, since become almost an American, was the only one to reward him to any appreciable extent. When one remembers that Henry Miller, though he lived and acted in this country for nearly half a century, remained to the day of his death an English subject, this record appears the more extraordinary.

As a director, no one who ever came in touch with him could deny him greatness. Of course he could go wrong, but when he slipped it was either because he had no faith in the play or because he was distracted by external concerns of a personal or business nature. But give him a play he liked and let him concentrate upon it, and no director of our time was his superior. He had a genius for getting inside a manuscript. After he had studied it a few days he knew more about it than the man who wrote it. Not that he ever thought so himself. I have read a deal of humorous writing about the downtrodden author and what he suffers from the tyrannical stage director. Miller was never a tyrant with authors. He treated them with the utmost consideration. He would occasionally make suggestions to me for alterations and the uncanny instinct that was his almost always led him aright; but on the very rare occasions when I could not agree he would always say: "All right, my boy. It's your play. Let it go as you wish."

Henry Miller was highly temperamental. He was like a fine violin which vibrates to the slightest touch. He was exquisitely sensitive to color and especially to sound. A harsh or discordant voice caused him acute agony. I once saw him rehearse and dismiss seven leading women one after the other, all of them competent enough, because he could not get the right tone from them. He thought of a play in terms of music. If his actors were unmusical it caused him genuine suffering, and when he suffered he seldom did so in silence. He relieved his grief occasionally by comments not wholly agreeable to the victims, for when stung by incompetence or stupidity he had a mordant tongue. Yet he was not patient. It was only after repeatedly vain efforts to get the result he wanted that he ever lost his temper. He was quite aware that some actors thought him difficult and he once defended himself from this charge in these words.

"On the first day I say: 'Mr. Jones, this is the effect I desired here. Will you be so kind as to try to give it?' On the second day I say: 'It has evidently stopped your mind, Mr. Jones, that the desired effect is so and so. Please try to remember.' On the third day: 'Dear Mr. Jones, is it that you can't do what I ask or do you refuse to do it?' And on the fourth day, when there is no change, I'm afraid I sometimes get a bit annoyed."

By "getting annoyed" he probably meant that he may have fallen on his knees and implored his Maker to tell him what he had ever done to be surrounded by such a record-breaking group of incompetents. Or perhaps he may have inquired politely into the offending actor's motives in adopting the theatre as a profession. I have known him to do both these things, but under such circumstances that I really could not blame him.

Once at a dress rehearsal of "The Rainbow," in which play he introduced Ruth Chatterton to the New York public, he said to a careless stage manager who allowed a butler's tray to be brought upon the stage with only one handle: "Here, take this tray away and fix it. I haven't time to do it myself. I've got to wash the windows."

Mr. Miller used to say that he learned all he knew about stage direction from Dion Boucicault, who had once said to him: "Stage direction is nothing but the use of common sense." But Henry Miller's stage direction had more than common sense. It had proportion and grace and delicacy and beauty. When the curtain rose for the first time upon a play of his direction one could be sure that, fail or succeed, that play would be shown to the public as only a master of the theatre could exhibit it.

As an actor, this master of the stage has painted many memorable portraits. Once I tried vainly to get him to tell me what was his favorite part. I have always suspected it was the rough diamond hero in "The Great Divide," though I know he had a warm affection for Sydney Carton in "The Only Way." His range is all the way from the bleeding sergeant in "Macbeth," his first part, played as a boy in Toronto, to "Hamlet," which he once did for a short time on the road. He knew Shakespeare almost by heart and could finish any quotation you chose to start; nothing delighted him more than to sit up till daybreak discussing various interpretations of this bard. As an actor his range was wide. He could be tender, as in "The Rainbow"; he could be terrific, as in "The Great Divide"; he could be sophisticatedly humorous, as in "The Marriage of Convenience"; he could be tragic as in "The Only Way."

Grace and understanding overlaid everything he touched as an actor. He was not faultless. At times his diction was imperfect, but it was almost always the result of some unusual fatigue or worry. Not always did he cast himself perfectly. To me he never seemed at his best in the lighter sort of comedy. It is not easy for dynamite to be witty, and this man was always full of TNT. But even in such plays as were not best suited to his natural bent he always gave you certain wonderful moments, even in the midst of that very light comedy, "The Man in Dress Clothes." Here he met for a moment the woman he loved and had parted from her for her own good. She asked him why he had ceased to love her. At this point Mr. Miller slowly raised his glance from the floor, let it rest for a moment on the face, so loved, so lost to him, then let it fall again. Just a glance—yet over the actor's face there swept a lifetime of adoration, an eternity of self-sacrifice.

Henry Miller's life was not a peaceful one. He would have been bored to death with peace. Struggle, accomplishment, defeat, victory—all these were his portions. All his life lightnings flickered about his head. In his time he made and lost several fortunes, but at his death he stood at the head of his profession, owner and master of his own theatre. Certainly he was unique. Shall we see his like again or have those days gone by forever?

Probably the greatest grief of Henry Miller's professional life was his disagreement with the Actors' Equity Association. He complained with bitterness that, while he owed no actor a dollar and no player had ever cause to complain of unfair treatment at his hands, yet at the time of the strike Equity had closed up his theatre along with the rest. As I understand Equity's answer, it was an admission that it had nothing against Henry Miller, but that war was war and the innocent sometimes had to suffer with the guilty.

I think that Mr. Miller did very few things with an eye to publicity, but he got a good deal of it in various ways. On more than one occasion I have known him to stop the actors of the play while he addressed a rebuke to occupants of a box whose chatter was annoying him and the audience as well. And more than once when angered by what seemed an unjust criticism of himself or his play or company he launched an attack upon the offending critic in the form of a curtain speech. And once, but this was years ago, he had himself interviewed upon the state of dramatic criticism in this village of New York. One gathered that he had a low opinion of it. He went into detail in this matter in a fashion so witty and so scathing that Broadway buzzed with it for days. He was especially concerned with what he called the "Ashcan School of Criticism." I think no one who read it ever again doubted his ability to defend himself.

His last appearance upon the stage of his own theatre was in a play called "Embers," adapted for him from the French. He played it there for the last time on Saturday, Feb. 27. To me and to many others who saw him it was one of the noblest of all his creations. I think perhaps nothing was ever written about him in all his long and brilliant career that pleased him more than these words of Philander Johnson, written of this very impersonation and published in The Washington Star when "Embers" was produced in the national capital.

"No such portrayal of majestic grief has been seen for many a year. In searching for a comparison it might seem needful to go far afield into a domain very distinct from that of the modern drama and recall the chronicles which tell of the superb power, with restraint, of Salvini's Lear. Though wanting the glamour of regal romance, it is difficult to imagine a scene more convincing than Miller's portrayal of a noble soul betrayed and stricken."

It was fine, too, that Charles Belmont Davis could have written of this last performance in The Herald Tribune: "It is not often that even one of the aristocracy of our stage can act the principal role in a play that he has directed and produced on the stage of his own theatre. And yet Mr. Miller did all these things last night and with unusual distinction. Indeed, we can recall no other part which gave this fine artist such splendid opportunities to show the various phases of the art which is his."

It seems a pity that others of the town's so-called first-string reviewers could not have restrained their im-dinner speech by Groucho in which he twists the most banal phrases of a thousand standard stories into a perfectly designed and meaningless yarn. Although the motivations of these scenes are pointedly satirical, and arise not from enjoyment of the phenomena burlesqued but from weariness and from disgust with commonplace stupidity, the humor does not patronize nor smirk with the self-consciousness of wit. Mr. Kaufman does not hand down judgments from an ivory tower, and from the theatre point of view his lines serve the actors perfectly. Mr. Kaufman has adjusted his phrases to the tongues of the comedians; the words can be spoken with the inflections characteristic of Chico and Groucho; indeed, without that precise delivery they lose much of their glamour. And here, in a low comedy production, we have the willing cooperation of playwright and player now so earnestly desired in the arid realms of the artistic drama.

NONE of this observation takes account of Harpo's comic skullduggery—Harpo of the flaming wig and the sealed lips, whose vocal silence is his only resemblance to President Coolidge. Without uttering a single word Harpo manages to act a character, as the few moments indicate when he steps out of character to ac[illegible] for his mu[illegible]ert artist. [illegible] counte[illegible]erior to [illegible] around [illegible] com[illegible]. In [illegible]man. [illegible]hi-canery, debauchery and vices usually considered the nadir of humanity—are thrice familiar to him. He treats the ordinary symbols of social communication with broad contempt, as when he rests his leg wearily in a hand proffered for courteous shaking. Much greater things, he suggests, lie waiting within his power. Far from being part to this stage entertainment, he is always outside it, above it, and he expresses his opinion of it in no uncertain terms. All this might come easily to any practiced clown. Harpo's distinction is the variety of his silent expression, the degree and proportion of his projection over the footlights without the aid of the spoken word. Think how quickly he must establish communication with the audience on his first appearance in order to make his rifling of the letter-box immediately intelligible, so that no one will miss the anarchistic humor of that scene. Like Charlie Chaplin, Harpo also can translate one motion into some quite unrelated motion; in the probe scene he turns the routine rhythmic motion of the company into the pantomime of rowing a boat. Again, he translates the one word "bum," spoken contemptuously by a hotel guest, into the anvil chorus and a comic parade across the stage. As arrogant as he is vulgar and monstrous, he becomes thoroughly articulate without speaking, and sometimes he conveys much more than even the wide latitude of modern stage license would permit.

"This world is mere chance, and this life mere opinion," said the phlegmatic Marcus Aurelius. In the midst of its comedy, "The Cocoanuts" conveys a degree of opinion rarely encountered in much more purposeful drama.

NEWS AND NOTES OF THE LONDON STAGE

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 14.—The London stage has been having a week full of new plays. One of them was "Hell-Bent fer Heaven," an American importation which one critic described as having "more power than anything Eugene O'Neill ever wrote." It was likewise well received by the audience.

"Conflict" is a political play, but, unlike many of its kind, contained as many heartbeats as sociological platitudes. The case for capital and labor is so fairly stated that the play outrages the convictions of neither.

Another of the new plays was "Enchantress," by Karen Bramson. It proved to be "Faust" turned the other way around—it is concerned with the bitterness and sorrow which old age brings to a woman who has been beautiful in her youth. It is then that the devil strikes a bargain with her and she becomes a rejuvenated siren with a cold heart. The rejuvenation, however, turns out to have have been only part of a nightmare.

"The Marvelous History of Saint Bernard," a translation of Henri Gheon's reconstruction of a mystery play written by an Augustinian monk of the fifteenth century, was a daring experiment which succeeded beautifully.

"Byways," produced with Margaret Bannerman in its leading part, was almost as badly received as Countess Cathcart's "Ashes." It was greeted by the pit with hilarious laughter.

Sean O'Casey has told London newspapers that he is very sad over the American production of "Juno and the Paycock." He has heard that errors have been made both in the production and the casting. He said: "I sold the American rights to a couple of managers outright for £100, at a time when I had only half a crown in the world. I wish now that I could repurchase the rights and have the play produced there with a London cast."

Tom Douglas, who recently revived "Fata Morgana" here, has suffered a nervous breakdown. The revival, accordingly, has come to a halt.

George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" has been done as a ballet by a midnight cabaret with great success. As played by Paul Whiteman's band, it also greatly intrigued Londoners.

Noah and the Flood Story Wins $1,000 Movie Prize

THE winner of the Cecil B. De Mille film idea contest is Miss Catherine Comstock of Long Beach, Cal., who in her letter of 200 words offered "The Deluge," or Noah and the Flood, as a theme for a motion picture. The prize was $1,000.

Of the 38,000-odd letters received, 157 of the number were devoted to the subject of the Flood. The judges awarded Miss Comstock the prize because she set forth the pictorial possibilities better than the other contestants. Miss Comstock is a Sunday school teacher who has never written anything for publication. She was a stenographer in Kansas City, her home town. On winning the prize she declared that she would obey the biblical injunction and give one tithe of it to a church fund.

The second prize of $300 went to Dolores Thomas of Salt Lake City, Utah; the third prize of $200, to Emmett L. Flynn of Beverly Hills, Cal.; the fourth prize of $100, to Michael J. McHugh of Providence, R. I.; the fifth prize, $50, to George W. Pierce of Santa Barbara, Cal. There were several other prizes of $50.

An examination of the tabulated statement of the letters received discloses that they came from every State of the Union and from nineteen foreign countries. The furthest north letter was from Norway, and the one from the most southerly point came from Cairo, Egypt. There were letters also from Hawaii and Athens, Greece.

Mr. De Mille said that the contest has convinced him that there is a fund of untouched material available for motion picture use. He is to spend $1,000,000 in the making of the production, which is to be called, "The Deluge."

In an official statement, Cecil B. De Mille announces that Producers' Distributing Corporation will release forty-one productions, including one special picture to be personally directed by Mr. De Mille and two feature-length comedies produced by Al Christie during the next fiscal year. The schedule of the productions will include adaptations from twenty-two well-known novels, eight stage plays, four popular magazine stories, six original scripts and "The Deluge," on which Jeanie Macpherson now is working. The authors include Jack London, Irvin S. Cobb, Willson Collison, Izola Forrester, Avery Hopwood, Samuel Merwin, Albert Payson Terhune, Peter B. Kyne, Rosita Forbes, Owen Davis, Edgerton Castle, Edna Ferber, Zelda Sears, Frank R. Adams, Fred Jackson, Monte Katterjohn, Welford Beaton, Charles Brackett, Wallace Smith, Don Marquis, Lenore Coffee, Rudolph Lothar, Hans Backwitz, William Slavine McNutt, Agnes Parsons, J. Palmer Parsons, Frederic Chapin, Anne Warner, Denison Clift, A. A. Milne, Lajos Biros, Frank Condon, Mann Page, Aubrey Kennedy, Henry St. John Cooper and Jeanie Macpherson, who, besides writing "The Deluge," will adapt three other stories for screen presentation.

Patricia Avery, who never, it is said, sought to be an actress in the movies, has been engaged by Louis B. Mayer to enter the acting field. Miss Avery has been secretary at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios for about a year. She has brown hair and blue eyes and has always been considered attractive. Nevertheless she did not long to be a screen player. In fact, it is said that she refused several offers to take part in productions. Now, however, she is joyful over her good fortune.

Vilma Banky, whose blond hair has been one of the reasons for her success, is to appear as a sort of brunette in Rudolph Valentino's production, "Son of the Sheik." This film is being directed by George Fitzmaurice, who made "The Dark Angel," in which Miss Banky made her screen bow in this country. Mr. Fitzmaurice says that the transformation in Miss Banky's hair will be made without a wig or false hair, but wholly through a lighting arrangement.

Rin-Tin-Tin in "The Night Cry" is to continue at Warners'.

HENRY MILLER

patience to view "The Shanghai Gesture" long enough to see the aristocrat's final impersonation.

He died as he would have wished, at the height of his career and powers, peacefully, after only a few days of sickness. He came to his theatre at 6 o'clock on Monday night, declaring he would open that night in Mr. Dodd's new play and sticking to it until he collapsed and was carried all but unconscious to his hotel.

It is, of course, impossible to attempt an adequate estimate of the art of this accomplished man of the theatre in this brief article, written hurriedly on this day when so many hundreds have crowded the Little Church Around the Corner to look their last upon the still face that has expressed so much for them. This is not the time for calculating criticism, nor, if it were, am I the man to do it. And so, be it understood, this is merely an appreciation of a fine artist of the theatre by one who knew him well and held him in admiration and affection.

A TRIBUTE—From the World's Greatest Artiste to the World's Greatest Motion Picture:

"'The Big Parade' est une des rares oeuvres de l'écran qui m'aient vraiment profondément émue. C'est une belle chose. Et Renée Adorée est une grande artiste,-pas une vedette comme on en fabrique quand on veut, avec de la publicité, mais une vraie artiste comme on en peut être une qu'avec du coeur."

"She generously rewards the interest that for several weeks has heralded her approach." —J. Brooks Atkinson, N. Y. Times.

"Her art is simple with a truly great simplicity. There is nothing like it." —John Anderson, New York Post.

"She smiles through her tears as Bernhardt did so often. Wonderful eyes! Seeing them you will never forget them." —Burns Mantle, Daily News.

"As good, if not better, than advertised. Even the skeptics became persuaded of her magic." —Percy Hammond, Herald Tribune.

"Senorita Meller fulfills the seemingly extravagant promises which were made." —R. W. Osborn, Eve. World.

"Raquel Meller is equally master of comedy and tragedy—held her audience spellbound." —Stephen Rathbun, Evening Sun.

"For those who relish superb artistry, she is a genuine tingling treat." —Frank Vreeland, Evening Telegram.

A First Scene—Work Done Before Photography Begins

IT WAS the first scene to be made of a picture called "The Great Deception," and the players, the director, the camera man, the lights men, property men, costumer and art director were all gathered in the Cosmopolitan Studio, 127th Street and Second Avenue, at 9 o'clock last Monday morning.

But before describing what happened in the studio it is perhaps informing to know that which had taken place before any camera work could be done.

First, Robert T. Kane, the producer, who served with distinction in the A. E. F., decided that he wanted to make a Secret Service story. After discussions he bought the film rights to George Gibbs's novel "The Yellow Dove," which it was decided to rename for the picture. Simultaneously he arranged to have Howard Higgin direct the picture. Then Paul Bern was called in to write the scenario, Mr. Bern being an expert on motion picture scripts who has also directed several productions, including one of Pola Negri's pictures. Mr. Bern and Mr. Higgin read the novel and the work of constructing a motion picture story was commenced. The story has to be told within a certain footage, and in this case the whole story is not to run over seven and one-half reels and, according to Mr. Higgin, it will be better in seven than in seven and one-half. Motion picture exhibitors are averse to booking long pictures. So the story has to be condensed in such a way as to convey the plot lucidly.

The next step was to have a meeting of the heads of departments. The art director then took his turn at the story and he, the director and others discussed the construction of the sets and the locations for exteriors. For "The Great Deception" a good deal of research work was necessary. Two men for a fortnight were busy getting accurate information for the settings, some of which were supposed to be in Germany and others in England. The location men sought the proper locations for a coast line and for those of an English road. It is probable that some of the exterior scenes will be made near Asheville, N. C., where there is a replica of a Tudor village.

Arrangements were made with the Curtiss Aviation Company for the planes, which are to be of the types used in 1914-1915, and also with the United States Government for the use of submarines and different aviation fields and hangars.

Fashions and Players.

Simultaneously the costumes for the production had to receive attention, and this necessitated research work regarding the uniforms, accoutrements and equipment. Mr. Higgin said that he was not going to attempt to gown the women in authentic 1914 dresses, but would endeavor to strike a happy medium in fashions.

There was also the task of engaging the cast and making tests of all the players. No two actors or actresses must appear alike, as it would be confusing to the spectator. Tests were also made of all gowns. Several days before production work was started more than 200 Germans appeared in the lobby of the studio hoping for a chance as extras in this picture. Mr. Higgin is a stickler for knowing all he can about his film beforehand and he believes that a director should take time to see everybody who is going to appear in the photoplay.

Thirty-five sets have been constructed for this film. The players include Ben Lyon, in the leading rôle; Aileen Pringle as the heroine; Ulric Haupt figures as a German; Lucius Henderson is to play the part of an English statesman; Basil Rathbone is to be seen as an energetic spy employed by the Germans; Amelia Summerville will act the rôle of a nervous English woman, and Charlotte Walker fills the character of the hero's mother. Other parts are still in abeyance.

Then the schedule had to be made out so that the picture will be finished in a certain stipulated time, as time means a great deal of money in film production.

Ernest Haller is the chief camera man. He photographed some of the really important pictures, including "The White Sister," "Mare Nostrum" and "Romola." Joseph Boyle, production manager, was abroad with the same productions Haller photographed. Robert Haas, the art director, officiated in the same capacity for "The White Sister" and "Romola."

So on last Monday morning in the studio everything was ready for Mr. Higgin to start filming the production. Ben Lyon was dressed in a morning suit and a shiny silk hat. Sam Hardy, who played the part of the enterprising publicity man in "Bluebeard's Seven Wives," was ready for the male comedy rôle in this effort. He is tall and wore a checked suit with spats and a ridiculous cap, one which looked very small after seeing the army and navy caps. Charlotte Walker wore an afternoon gown. Aileen Pringle, the heroine, was not present. Mr. Kane, the man behind the gun, was at the studio in the morning, and soon after work started he went to his West Forty-eighth Street office.

The First Scene.

Mr. Higgin commenced the picture with the English sequence of the production, which is not the first chapter of the story. The scene was a comfortable room, with a larger one in the background. On the floor was a big trunk decked with a few Continental hotel labels, and two or three traveling bags.

500 Scenes in All.

Lights men were going here and there, while property men with hammers slipped in a loop in the back of their overalls attended to their work. So that everybody would know where the sofas, chairs and tables ought to be, tacks were hammered into the floor to show where the legs should come. Mr. Higgin calculated that roughly forty scenes would have to be taken on that particular set. There will be about 500 scenes in all in the picture. The musicians, a violinist and a pianist, who struck one as being enthusiastic about their work, began by playing "Song of Songs," and Mr. Higgin, in directing, showed that he bore these two men in mind when he was making a scene, for on one occasion he turned to them, saying:

"Play it over again from the beginning."

The continuity clerk sat on her camp stool looking over the many pages of the script, the imposing document prepared by Mr. Bern.

Miss Walker was playing an emotional scene, and Mr. Lyon approached. As he entered the room, he put his hat and stick on a chair, and while Miss Walker and he were acting, the stick fell to the floor.

"Cut," instructed Mr. Higgin.

The acting ceased and everything was started over again. Mr. Howard explained that while the falling of the stick did not matter, it might possibly have caused just a flicker of distraction on the parts of the players.

An Attentive Valet.

When Mr. Lyon finished his work in that scene he went over to his negro valet and took his lighted cigarette. The negro brushed his master's coat carefully every time Mr. Lyon went into the penetrating glare of the strong lights.

Mr. Higgin is an exceptionally quiet director. You might wonder who was directing the production if you had not met him. Everything is done in low tones, and so far as possible every effort is made to have nothing distract the players' attention. All hammering is stopped by a whistle signal.

The scene is supposed to take place soon after the outbreak of war, when there existed a great deal of spy-mania and when the newspapers printed reports that England was honeycombed with German spies.

At first the work of making a scene of a picture seems incredibly slow, until one appreciates that there is so much detail that needs attention. Not only does the director have to watch for inaccuracies while he is directing the players, but he and others make doubly certain when they look over the "rushes" of the work of the previous day in the projection room.

Considering the ticklish job of approaching a secret service story which has so many ramifications, one of the English episodes seemed to have been well on its way by 12:30 o'clock when the players and the workers went to luncheon.

The foregoing gives some idea of what has to be done on a production before the first scene is taken.

The twelfth anniversary of the opening of the Mark Strand is to be celebrated this week. The feature film at this theatre is "Old Loves for New," which was adapted from E. M. Hull's novel "The Desert Healer." This picture was produced by Marion Fairfax, and the cast includes Lewis Stone, Barbara Bedford, Tully Marshall, Katherine McDonald, Ann Rork, Walter Pidgeon, Arthur Rankin and Albert Conti. In Joseph Plunkett's anniversary "Frolics" there will be heard and seen Allen White's Collegians; Bernard De Pace, mandolin player; De Haven and Nice dancers, and others.

BROOKLYN STRAND—"The Sea Beast," with John Barrymore and Dolores Costello.

Lya de Putti Is Thankful

ACTING under David W. Griffith's direction in the picturization of Marie Corelli's "Sorrows of Satan," is a young woman who is perhaps the most thankful and the happiest actress in the East or the West. She is Lya de Putti, the daughter of the Count and Countess de Putti. She was born in Vescy, near Budapest. When a girl she found that her parents frowned upon her desire to become a danseuse, but eventually, when she proved her ability, they could not deter her from going on the stage. Then she went to Berlin and two years ago she began working in motion pictures, in which she made a startling success. Her last two pictorial characterizations are to be seen in the Ufa productions "Varietes" and "Manon Lescaut."

Last Tuesday Mr. Griffith was directing a stupendous scene for his forthcoming film. The setting, which held 400 persons, reminded one of the Savoy Hotel in London, although it was not intended to be an exact replica, but merely a hotel in a city. Adolphe Menjou, looking as fit as a fiddle and happy as the proverbial lark, wore faultless evening clothes. Lawrence d'Orsay, the veteran stage actor, officiates as Lya de Putti's father in the photoplay. These three were seen together at the head of the stairs and afterward making their way to a table in the thronged dining room. As Miss de Putti's knowledge of English is virtually confined to "O. K." "Yes," "No," and a few other words, Mr. Griffith has to rely on an interpreter to impart to her that which he wishes her to do. The celerity with which she grasped what was wanted seemed really wonderful. She would stand before a long mirror near the cameras putting the last touches to her hair, face and gown, and then, with a look at Mr. Griffith and an "O. K." to his assistant she went forth to meet her "father" and Mr. Menjou.

When the time came for luncheon, Miss de Putti was informed that she would not be needed for two hours. She went to her dressing room with her maid, her secretary and her special representative. She has been in this country seven weeks, and in that time she has had an operation for appendicitis, so she has to be careful still not to do any dancing. She is filled with praise for America and Americans. She finds the men so gallant and polite and the women so attractive and lithe.

Speaking in French she said to a NEW YORK TIMES representative:

"You know that I am so thankful to be in America, acting under Mr. Griffith, that every Sunday I go to St. Patrick's Cathedral to give my thanks to the Bon Dieu. In Berlin I prayed to the Bon Dieu to let me go to America, and now I am here, I am so happy. Do you know in Berlin I asked a friend to introduce me to the grand Griffith, but she told me that Mr. Griffith would not have time to see me. In Germany the motion-picture people were amazed at the quiet way in which Mr. Griffith went about his work, never getting excited or angry. Now I am here acting at the present moment on a set that cost $50,000, which is as much as they spend on an entire production in Germany.

"Coming to this country was my first voyage on the sea. It was wonderful. I was not seasick, yet it was very bad weather. My maid was very ill, poor thing. One day, just to show how nice are American men, I was sitting in my deck chair and I struggled to cover my feet. Quickly a gentleman stepped up and asked to be permitted to help me. Afterward I told this to my maid. She laughed at me, and said: 'Madame, you are young and you are pretty, so they do that for you hoping that you will permit them to introduce themselves.' Nevertheless I still thought it was nice of that American. Then came a day when my maid was better and she was able to sit up in a deck chair. I watched her from a distance when she, like I had done, was trying to cover her feet with a steamer blanket. Quickly, just as quickly as a man had done it for me, an American bowed to her and covered up her feet. Now I said afterward to my maid: 'You see I am not so wrong. You are not so young and you are not pretty, yet it has happened to you. Eh, what?'"

Miss de Putti has rather large eyes, dark and bright. Her nose and mouth are small, and her hair was trimmed so that she looked like a boy. She now weighs only 107 pounds, and despite the fact that she has lost a good many pounds since she left Berlin, she is now very careful not to put on any more weight. She is 22 years old. She delights in dancing, but now, as she must not exercise unduly, she spends most of her spare time looking at pictures. She has seen several and those she prefers are "The Big Parade" and Norma Talmadge's "Kiki." She is taking lessons in English. Since she has been acting in Berlin, she said that she had sent most of her earnings to her mother and her two brothers, because conditions are so changed since the war in Hungary. She is an actress who radiates personality and charm, and she at least seems earnest in everything she says.

De Mille's Conception Of Russian Revolution

By MORDAUNT HALL.

OUT of Hollywood via its Czar's imaginative brain there came to the Times Square Theatre last week a peep through crimson glasses at the Russian revolution, or Cecil B. De Mille's conception of the strife between the autocrats and the plebeians. In the initial chapter there was the sight of broad-shouldered, deep-chested men straining, every muscle in pulling a heavily ladened craft, singing as they forged along step by step. These river boatmen in the picture, which is called "The Volga Boatman," are depicted as slaves who crumple up every now and again, worn out by their efforts in the slow trudge along the two path. Accompanying these flashes of the men in harness was a chorus that rendered most effectively the famous song of the Volga boatmen, which buzzed and gradually broke out into words, some of which mean:

See the birches growing there,
Curly birches drawing near!
Heigh da da, heigh da!
Heigh da da, heigh da!

The last chapter calls for the same music, the same words, but the characters harnessed to the barge bear a different aspect, a true De Millean touch. There is the same heroic Volga boatman who started off the close-ups in the picture; then the Prince, whose uniform fits him like the proverbial glove; the Princess Vera, in a glistening evening dress and high-heeled satin shoes, also with a strap over her shoulders as she goes through the drudgery of a boatman, and also other men and women whose costumes are not suited to the towpath's dirt. There are close-ups of their feet as they bear along, half a step at a time, particularly of Princess Vera's high-heeled satin shoes.

In the first glimpses of the boatmen there was drama, despite its exaggerated idea—for after all these boatmen sing their song as sailors aboard ship render their chanteys at the windlass in hauling up the anchor, or in making sail. Mr. De Mille, nevertheless, paints this with splendid effect and a moonlight scene with a figure standing up in the boat and the bent heads and backs of the boatmen jerking and tugging is worth all Mr. De Mille's décolleté gowns, his shining bath tubs or his pillared ballrooms with mirrored floors.

Jarring Contrasts.

However, this omnipotent producer sees fit to drag in contrasts in which it is infra dig. for any woman to make an appearance without an evening gown that scintillates in the well-lighted room, and sometimes makes the characters look like mermaids when they are in half light. On the other hand, the proletariats must be robed after De Mille's idea, and the Tartar girl must have a touch of grace, but no silks and satins, no high-heeled shoes, no finery. She wears boots in this picture and no stockings, and she swings her skirt like a Highlander does his kilt. So far so good, but—and, unfortunately, one has to employ this word—Mr. De Mille runs clean off the story track when he endeavors to impress one with the drama in his film. His characters turn out to be brainless when he insists they shall not think. He has them for a while believing that a woman has been killed because somebody has poured a little red wine over her bodice. The Tartar maid snatches at the rings on the beautiful Princess's fingers as she is being carried out of the place by the susceptible Volga boatman, and then the vixen discovers that what she took to be blood is wine.

Senseless Characters.

Feodor, this Volga hero, is able at the psychological moment to press back the mad mob and close the doors on them, and then with remarkable nonchalance he leaps with his lady fair into a little cart and crashes down the road, lashing the three horses, just like Ben-Hur.

When Mr. De Mille wishes to carry out a bit of drama he picks up one of his puppets and puts it aside. No matter what the spectator may think, this person is not to do the expected or the intelligent thing. He is to fiddle around, looking for something to keep him busy, so that he does not know what is going on in a certain place. In the episode where the Czarist officers discover Feodor and the Princess Vera one would have thought that these prisoners would have been brought before the Prince Dimitri, who is in command of the troops. This could not be, for Princess Vera happens to be disguised for the nonce, and she is Prince Dimitri's fiancée. Fancy having officers coming up to their commander and asking whether they can have some fun with the female prisoner! Fancy the commander, looking like thunder when he remembers what has happened (as he thinks) to Princess Vera, assenting to the request! Thereupon Mr. De Mille puts in another touch in his familiar style. He has the officers seated around a big, oblong table, snatching here and there at the girl's garments until one is led to believe by their grimaces and their lascivious eyes that the Princess has very few clothes left. Mr. De Mille does not attempt to show the Princess during this episode until Prince Dimitri covers Vera with his overcoat.

Comfort and Pain.

One of the true examples of De Mille box office genius is constructed for the picture theatres in the wild and woolly regions. The Princess is back in a palace and her Volga boatman is slung up by the wrists to the iron gate, with soldiers ready with bayonetted rifles to pepper him with bullets. The Princess, being high-born, must never forget herself and appear, as she did for a few seconds, in a shoddy garment! So she forthwith changes into a dazzling evening gown, not forgetting to adorn her faultlessly dressed hair with a tiara. This gives Mr. De Mille an excellent opportunity to dodge back and forth from Feodor strapped to the railings to the undeniably attractive Vera, who during the moments of greatest stress appears to have a sense of humor, the sort of person who, if she has to die, will die with her tiara on straight and a twinkle in her eye.

From the Glare of the Studios to the Velvet Darkness of the Theatres

MARION DAVIES appears garbed as a young army officer in the film conception of "Beverly of Graustark," which Major Edward Bowes has booked for the Capitol this week. Other players in this film are Antonio Moreno, Creighton Hale, Roy D'Arcy, Albert Gran, Paulette Duval, Max Barwyn and Charles Clary.

The film version of "Irene" is the pictorial offering at the Broadway.

Harold Lloyd in "For Heaven's Sake" is to be held over at the Rialto.

The offerings of the International Film Arts Guild at the Cameo this week are very interesting. Today and tomorrow the attraction will be "Humoresque"; Tuesday the feature is "The Golem"; Wednesday, "The Connecticut Yankee at the Court of King Arthur"; Thursday, "The Golem"; Friday, "The Connecticut Yankee at the Court of King Arthur," and Saturday, "Humoresque."

The National Navy Club of New York will conduct a "Black Pirate" treasure hunt on May 6, the proceeds of which will be devoted to carrying on the club's activities. The hunt will start from the Sulgrave, where clues concerning additional stopping places will be given. Douglas Fairbanks is Honorary Chairman of the committee in charge of the event.

Adolphe Menjou is to be seen as a barber in the picture entitled "A Social Celebrity," which is at the Rivoli. This production was directed by Malcolm St. Clair, who produced "The Grand Duchess and the Waiter." Chester Conklin and Louise Brooks head the supporting cast. Frank Cambria's stage offering is "A Bird Fantasy," the music for which is from Grieg, Chaminade and Chopin.

The first week's run of Norma Talmadge in "Kiki" set up a record at the Capitol, the receipts for the seven days being $74,241. Norma Talmadge also held the previous record with her picture, "Graustark."

Report has it that if Douglas Fairbanks decides to make a picture in Russia, or in some other European country, it is likely that Jack Pickford, his brother-in-law, will direct it. Jack Pickford expects to go abroad in a few months to join the Fairbanks party. He is quoted as saying: "Douglas and Mary have long wanted to co-star in a picture, but it is difficult to find a story that will suit both. Each has been identified with such strongly marked characterizations that it is difficult to find the vehicle that would give them both the opportunity to do the sort of things that have made them famous."

Sidney Olcott has finished work on Richard Barthelmess's picture, "Ranson's Folly," which now is in the cutting room.

Clive Brook is to play the leading male rôle in "Love—the Magician," Florence Vidor's first starring film for Paramount, the story of which was written by Ernest Vajda.

Puccini's Chinese Opera in Milan; Promised Here Also Next Season

By MARIO BORSA.

MILAN, April 1.

"TURANDOT," the posthumous opera of Giacomo Puccini, which for various reasons could not be produced last year, will be given its première at La Scala in the latter part of April. The performance will take place under the most distinguished auspices. The conductor will be Signor Toscanini, who has concentrated all his efforts on the work. The principal characters will be taken by Signora Raisa (soprano, Turandot), Signora Zamboni (soprano, Liù), Signor Fleta (tenor, Calaf), and Signor Rimini (baritone, Ping). The spectacle will be staged with great pomp and care. The scenes have been painted by the painter Chini, and the costumes designed by the noted artist Caramba. Great expectations and curiosity have been aroused. As to the music, there is no need here to anticipate what the judgment may be. With a work destined for the theatre, only the theatrical performance can give the measure of its artistic value. But the reader will wish to know in advance the history of his work and the story to which Puccini set his music.

In the Spring of 1921 Giacomo Puccini was anxiously seeking a new libretto. For three or four years he had composed no music, and now he was tired of his inactivity. He wished to set to work again; he was longing for the stimulating and tormenting labors of creation. One day he unexpectedly left the quiet solitude of his beautiful villa at Torre del Lago, near Pisa, and came to Milan, where he immediately sought out Renato Simoni, the dramatic critic of the Corriere della Sera, and Giuseppe Adami, the playwright, with whom he had already collaborated on other occasions. These friends he begged to suggest to him some good subject for a new opera, a grand opera, to which he felt ready to give all his reborn energies. Simoni and Adami consented and set to work. First of all, their thoughts turned to a drama of Dickensian inspiration which would have taken place in the underworld of London about the year 1830; but this subject did not please Puccini, and their minds then turned in another direction. After much searching in company with the maestro, Simoni proposed to set to music one of the theatrical fables of Carlo Gozzi. The idea was not unpleasing to Puccini, and the three ended by choosing Turandot as the subject.

Puccini did not wish that his friends who had been charged with writing the libretto should faithfully follow the fable of Gozzi, as, for example, Schiller had done when he had translated it for the theatre of Weimar. He requested them to adapt the fairy tale, strip it of all that was heavy and conventional, and, above all, "humanize it." This was a slow and difficult work. The traditional masks, for example, were abandoned, but the authors conserved the burlesque element of the masks in the three court dignitaries, Ping, Pong and Pang, who will be seen as three amiable caricatures. In addition, many incidents were abandoned or modified, while scenes and personages not found in the original play of Gozzi were introduced. The slave Liù, who represents the sentimental element of the drama—that element for which Puccini always found the best music—is a novelty introduced in the plot by Simoni and Adami.

The maestro was only satisfied with difficulty. He had anxieties and moments of regret and discouragement. When he found himself again in the right mood he was as happy as a boy. My friend Giuseppe Adami has shown me a portfolio full of unpublished letters of Puccini, in which the composer speaks of nothing else save Turandot. It was his continual preoccupation.

Little by little, as the work went forward, the maestro grew more contented with himself, and in the letters to Adami there often recur expressions such as these: "It is fine... I am pleased with it... Turandot is going well... I am on the right road... Let us hope that the melody (without which there is no music) may come to me still fresh... I am convinced that I have written something really good..."

Toward the end of 1924 Puccini was about to give the last touches to his work, when he was stricken down by illness and had unexpectedly to leave for Brussels for an operation. He took with him the manuscript of the last part of the opera—about thirty-seven pages of composition, which extend from the death of Liù to the finale—hoping to be able to complete them in not more than a fortnight, as he himself said, during the period of convalescence; but fate was against this happening. Before taking to his bed Puccini had a presentiment of the end. What distressed him most was the thought of perhaps not living to see his opera performed. Signor Adami keeps in a frame the last letter the composer wrote him, on the eve of the operation. It contains these few moving words: "Here I am, alas! poor me!... and Turandot?..."

After Puccini's death the friends and admirers of the maestro at once decided that the best way to honor his memory was to provide for the production of his last opera. He had left it completely finished, even to the most minute particulars, up to the last duet. Of this there was the music, but not the orchestration. Even the music for the finale was complete. Puccini, in fact, wrote in May, 1924, to his two librettists: "For the finale, you already know that the music exists: nothing is yet written out, but the motif is the one you know."

So Maestro Toscanini, who had already heard "Turandot" played over on the piano, and had admired it very much, proposed to entrust to Maestro Franco Alfano, a skillful composer, and friend of Puccini, the task of carrying out the little amount of work which was still necessary. Maestro Alfano accepted the honorable assignment and accomplished it with great devotion. He had only to do the orchestration for the last duet and the finale, making a few connections, without putting anything of his own into it, but adapting themes already used in the preceding acts, such as the theme of the Enigmas and that of the Imperial Hymn.

In preparing his score Puccini directed extensive investigations carried on in Pekin and other places into all classes and periods of Chinese music—popular, imperial, ancient and modern. The British Museum, jealous of its precious collections, sent for his inspection the only existing copy of a codex of the old Chinese musical rhythms. But these researches served only to give the composer a general thematic character for his musical setting. As for the reality of the human and scenic setting, the reader may judge for himself.

Let us betake ourselves, then, to China; but to a China which is fantastic, and of a kind which has not and does not mean to have any pretensions to be faithful to the reality.

The first act shows the walls of the Imperial Palace of Pekin. To the right the bastions which surround it are broken by a great covered portico, sculptured and carved with monsters, unicorns and phoenix, with the pillars supported on the backs of massive turtles. At the foot of the covered portico is a gong of the most resounding bronze. On the bastions are planted the poles which carry the skulls of persons put to death. It is sunset. The open space in front of the portico is filled with a picturesque crowd listening to a mandarin reading a decree from the heights of the bastions. The decree says that Turandot, the pure and chaste, will be the spouse of the one who, being of royal blood, shall succeed in unraveling the three puzzles that she will propound. Whosoever shall rest defeated must pay with his head.

The young Prince of Persia, the last of the cavaliers to make the attempt, has failed, and his head will now fall at the hands of the executioner. The crowd makes various comments, grows excited, shouts. In the midst of it is an old man who in the confusion falls to the ground, despite the efforts of a girl who accompanies him. There comes to him to help him to his feet a young man who, as soon as he sees the old man, recognizes him as his father. The old man is Timur, the dethroned Tartar King, and the young man is Calaf, whom, however, nobody knows, and who passes for this reason as the Unknown Prince. Both are in exile, persecuted and constrained to hide their identity. The girl who accompanies the old man, Timur, is the slave Liù, who loves Calaf in secret.

Meanwhile there appear on the bastions the executioner's assistants, who bring and sharpen the enormous sword with which the head of the young Prince of Persia will be cut off; then comes the cortège with the young Prince himself, followed by the gigantic executioner. The crowd, deeply impressed by the youthful appearance of the Prince, demands that he be pardoned, inviting Turandot in a loud voice to show herself and to be clement. The unknown Prince also calls for pardon, and bitterly condemns the cruelty of Turandot, whom he has never seen. At this moment she appears, like a vision, on the high loggia. A silence falls upon the crowd, which prostrates itself on the ground. The Unknown Prince alone remains standing as if enchanted by so fascinating a vision of beauty. Turandot makes an imperious gesture; it is the sentence. The executioner nods his head in assent, and the procession moves toward the place of execution. The Unknown Prince still remains rigid and ecstatic. The beauty of Turandot has unexpectedly kindled in him a burning flame of love. He also will now attempt the test, and makes as if to approach the gong to give the signal that he is ready to challenge Turandot, and to unravel her enigmas.

Ping, Pong and Pang, the three court dignitaries—three personages depicted with a grotesque and very successful humor—place themselves between him and the gong, and do their best to dissuade him from his mad intention. Why seek for death? Nobody has ever saved himself; the enigmas of Turandot are more obscure than a moonless night. Why grow crazy over a woman when there are so many women in the world? In vain! The Unknown Prince insists like one obsessed. In vain appear on the bastions, almost as if to warn him, the ghosts of the lovers of Turandot who have had their heads chopped off. In vain he sees the executioner place on a pole the head of the young Prince of Persia. In vain old Timur seeks to move his son to pity. In vain little Liù entreats him with all the strength of her love. The Unknown Prince approaches the gong and gives the fatal signal.

In the second act we find ourselves first of all in a pavilion of the Royal Palace, where Ping, Pong and Pang are lamenting that they have been reduced to acting as ministers to the executioner. With the present year, which is the Year of Tiger, thirteen unfortunate cavaliers have already lost their heads for Turandot. When will this slaughter finish? O Tiger, Grand Marshal of the Sky, will that Turandot may finally yield herself, so that there be no longer in China a single woman who repudiates love! But at this point the noise of the multitude is already heard. The moment of the new trial is approaching. In the second part of the act we are shown the open space before the Royal Palace, leading to which is an enormous staircase of marble. The crowd little by little invades the square. The mandarins arrive in their vestments of blue and gold. At the head of the staircase the eight old Wise Men show themselves. Each of them has in his hands three sealed rolls of silk. These are the rolls containing the solutions of the enigmas which Turandot will put forward. The Emperor of China likewise appears at the head of the staircase and takes his seat on the throne. At the foot of the staircase is the Unknown Prince, near to whom, in supplicating attitudes, are Timur and Liù. Turandot moves near the throne, and from on high looks disdainfully at the Unknown Prince. Now she speaks to the crowd. Centuries ago in that same Royal Palace a grandmother of hers, the pure and chaste Princess Lo-u-ling, won by the Tartars, was dragged away by the foreign victor one gloomy night. Turandot takes revenge on her lovers for the outrage to the purity of her grandmother, Lo-u-ling. Never shall any one possess her. Lowering her glance toward the Unknown Prince she warns him not to tempt fortune, saying to him:

"The enigmas are three, death is one."

But the Prince replies passionately:

"The enigmas are three, one is life."

And thus arrives the test. Turandot advances one by one the three enigmas, and the Prince one by one gives their exact solution. Hope is the solution of the first enigma; Blood that of the second; and Turandot that of the third. The trial is won. The crowd breaks out into manifestations of joy. No more the sword of the executioner. Prepare the nuptial bed! But Turandot does not mean to be beaten. She turns to her father and entreats him to save her from the arms of the foreigner. Her father, however, admonishes her that the oath is sacred. Then she speaks to the Unknown Prince and says: Thou canst not have me grim with hate! No, replies the Prince, I wish to have thee burning with love! And generously he releases her from her pledge. Indeed, in his turn, he puts to her a single enigma: that Turandot guess his name: reveal it to the crowd before dawn and he will give up to her his head.

The last act unfolds in the great gardens beneath the apartment of Turandot. It is night. The heralds move through the city intimating that no one may sleep. Under the penalty of death it is necessary to reveal the name of the Unknown Prince. Thus commands Turandot. The ministers, the functionaries, all without exception, men and women, are terrified. Under the penalty of death! The crowd floods into the royal gardens seized by panic. Here they find the Unknown Prince. Everything depends on him. They offer him rich gifts. Threats are made against him that he reveal his name. Unavailingly! But here the guards drag to the front Timur and Liù. These two have already been seen speaking with the Unknown Prince. They know him. Let them tell, then, his name. Turandot also appears. She orders her guards to drag the secret from the old man and the girl. Timur protests that he knows nothing. Liù cries that she alone knows the name of the Prince, but that she will not reveal it. The crowd, at these denials, vents its ire against Liù, whom the Unknown Prince strives in vain to defend. A demand is made that the stubborn girl be tortured, and the executioner is summoned. Liù, terrified lest under the agonies of torture she may involuntarily utter the name, snatches a knife from the belt of a soldier and kills herself.

All rest dismayed and moved to pity before such sacrifice. Timur and the Prince weep over the inanimate body of the poor slave. Turandot herself is troubled: whatever power can have prompted a girl to such heroism? The crowd is filled with superstitious compassion. The Unknown Prince approaches Turandot, who resists still, who remembers her grandmother, who wishes to keep herself pure and chaste; but he who has been victor in all the trials does not allow himself to be moved. It is his right. If the kiss must be for her a punishment, here then is the kiss. And he clasps her in his arms. Turandot then gives way. That embrace has been stronger than her stubborn will. She confesses herself conquered, and confesses, above all, to have been conquered from the first moment when the Unknown Prince appeared before her. Yes! From that moment she had had the fear of being compelled to love him; from that moment she had loved him in secret, and it was for this that she had been so cruel with him and with herself, because she had a foreboding that he, and he alone, could have been able to provoke her surrender. Thus the Prince reveals himself; he is Calaf, son of Timur, the Tartar King. But Turandot, turning to her father, announces that she has finally discovered the true name of the foreigner. It is: Love.

A PORTRAIT OF BACH.

A recovered portrait of John Christian Bach is included in an edition of some of his pianoforte sonatas by Dr. Landshoff recently published at Leipsic by the firm of Peters. The portrait was preserved at the Liceo Musicale of Bologna, but overlooked until reproduced for Dr. Landshoff's publication. It is known that John Christian Bach studied at Bologna with Padre Martini, and the Liceo Musicale contains a series of his letters to Martini covering the years 1757 to 1778. In 1777 Martini wrote to J. C. Bach in London asking for his portrait, and a letter from Burney to Bologna tells Martini that Bach is having his picture painted by one of the best artists in London. That portrait, by Gainsborough, was finished and sent to Bologna in 1778.

Jean Sibelius, Who Will Compose a Work for America.

Metropolitan Season in Review; Six Months and a World Record

By OLIN DOWNES.

TWO features of the season of the Metropolitan Opera Company that closed last night distinguished it from seasons that preceded. The first was the material broadening of the repertory in regard to new works and the notable revivals of some old ones. The second was the adventure, none too successful from the artistic point of view, in the engagement of young and inexperienced American singers to interpret leading rôles. The results of this policy emphasized the fact that being an American does not in itself constitute being a finished artist; and that artists in the making, talented as they may be, are not material for a company of the reputation and prestige of the Metropolitan.

But the furbishing of the repertory was an interesting and encouraging manifestation. Some of the new works were of little value, which is certain to be true of the greater number of compositions that appear in any age or clime. It is nevertheless necessary and desirable that novelties by living composers should be heard, if only as urgently desired relief from the creaking platitudes of three-quarters of the operas that are ordinarily given. Mr. Gatti-Casazza's list of novelties was the most interesting and provocative that he had offered in years. Let us hope that it predicates a more complete exposition of the modern field in the season to come.

The novelties—or the works classed as such in the statistics and announcements of the Metropolitan—were Ravel's "L'Heure Espagnol" and Cornelius's "Barber of Bagdad"; Giordano's "Cena delle Beffe," de Falla's "La Vida Breve" and Stravinsky's "Le Rossignol," Massenet's "Don Quichotte" and John Alden Carpenter's ballet "Skyscrapers." The revivals were listed as Spontini's "La Vestale," Wolf-Ferrari's "Jewels of the Madonna," Smetana's "Bartered Bride" and Puccini's "Gianni Schicchi."

Of all these works the most important was the oldest—"La Vestale." The fact is astonishing, but it is true. The most curious aspect of the matter is the way in which this opera has been ignored by impresarios in America since its early performances in New Orleans in the late 1820s. For "La Vestale" seems not only to have a singular amplitude and nobility of line but all the pomp and circumstance that impresario or audience might desire.

The libretto is one of the best that the nineteenth century provided, a writer of opera in the spectacular style. It stands out amazingly in its contrast to the encrusted artificialities of opera books current in its period. And it fell into good hands. Spontini's weaknesses of technique and invention are not to be concealed. His harmonic writing was weak; he did not escape conventionalities of his time; his melodic ideas were only partly original, and he borrowed freely from other composers, including Mozart and Rossini. But he was a true dramatist; he was profoundly influenced by the styles of Gluck and the composer of "Don Giovanni"; he had an inborn sense of architecture and theatrical effect and he could write in the grand manner for voices and for chorus. "La Vestale" is good theatre and often majestic and impassioned music. It fills a gap between Gluck and Mozart and the great opera composers who followed Spontini that would otherwise yawn wide in musical history. The best proof of all this is furnished not by academic discussion of the opera itself, which first saw the stage in 1807, but by the manner in which, as its revival last Winter bore witness, it stirs a modern audience.

"La Vestale" in its quality and its reception gave every indication of remaining in the Metropolitan repertory. Part of its effect was unquestionably due to its admirable presentation, which constituted one of the best productions of the season.

The other revivals did not place in any new light works that had been performed within recent memory of the present generation of operagoers in New York. Musically speaking, the most valuable of them was undoubtedly "The Bartered Bride," a folk-opera of exceeding simplicity and melodiousness, although a little too naïve, limited in viewpoint and artlessly conventional to make a very strong appeal to this public. "The Jewels of the Madonna" was given as a vehicle for Mme. Jeritza. It is hard to say which is musically the emptier work—this opera or the extremely sterile score of "Gianni Schicchi."

Cornelius's "Barber of Bagdad," not properly a novelty, though listed as such—it had been given in New York some thirty-five years previous—has some amusing moments, but as a whole is passé in its humor and its style. This was the more evident when the work was coupled with that supremely Gallic, ironic, scintillant little masterpiece, "L'Heure Espagnole," certainly one of the most amusing and distinctive of Mr. Gatti's offerings, though doubtless most effective in a small theatre. The other double bill of novelties coupled the sentimental and politely exotic "Vida Breve" with the intense modernity, the flashes of poetry, the mordant harmonies of Stravinsky's opera after the tale of Hans Christian Andersen's Nightingale.

The latter work was given a very picturesque setting. Its effect as an opera is open to question, although it contains some lovely music in Stravinsky's earlier style and some highly ingenious, stylistic writing in his later one. An opera that will live? Probably not. But certainly one that titillates the ear and the understanding. Of the two other novelties, "Cena delle Beffe" and "Don Quichotte," the first had a superficial success because of a superb libretto and in spite of music that was not less an insult to the work of Benelli; the second made an appeal intrinsically hollow, since it began and ended with the impersonation of a great singing actor, Mr. Chaliapin. He was the opera. He created out of whole cloth something that did not exist either in the lines or in Massenet's score.

In the general repertory Italian opera and opera in Italian had the ascendency, although Wagner led in the number of performances given of a single composer's works. Wagner had thirty-one performances of all his scores, from "Tannhäuser" to "Parsifal"—nine operas in all. Verdi followed with five operas and twenty-six performances; after him came Puccini with four operas and twenty-two performances and Giordano with three operas and fourteen performances. Twenty-four operas were given in Italian, including Moussorgsky's "Boris," which would doubtless gain and not lose if its original Russian text could be conserved, and Meyerbeer's "L'Africaine," which has been for seasons presented in this tongue by the Metropolitan. Ten operas were sung in French, one in Spanish, thirteen in German. Eight performances apiece were given of Verdi's "Aïda" and "La Bohème"; seven apiece of "Pagliacci" and "Gioconda"; six apiece of "Traviata," "Falstaff," "Lucia di Lammermoor," "Jewels of the Madonna," "Tannhäuser" and Carpenter's ballet "Skyscrapers." Five performances apiece were given "Rigoletto," "Tosca," "Madame Butterfly," "Cavalleria Rusticana," Andrea Chenier," "La Vestale," "Faust," "La Juive," "L'Heure Espagnole," "Die Meistersinger," "Die Walküre" and "The Bartered Bride."

The total number of performances, including twenty-four Sunday night concerts and the performances scheduled for the tour, will be 249. Seven performances are announced to be given this week in Atlanta, followed by ten performances in Cleveland and two in Rochester. Ten performances have been given in Brooklyn and nineteen in Philadelphia. Forty-eight different operas have been produced at the Metropolitan, and performance of "Samson and Dalila" in Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Cleveland bring the number to forty-nine—an enormous list, an activity that is pursued with a system and efficiency that are among Mr. Gatti-Casazza's most valuable endowments as an opera director.

It was not a year that was conspicuous for discoveries of new voices. Undoubtedly the most valuable addition to the ranks of the Metropolitan in the past season was Lauritz Melchior, the Danish tenor and interpreter of Wagnerian rôles. His first appearance, which occurred under difficult circumstances, put him in the worst possible light before the Metropolitan audience, but Mr. Melchior survived his trial and before the end of the season had gained materially in reputation.

It is a pity that others had not prepared as industriously and intelligently for their débuts as Mr. Melchior. If they had, there might be here a different story to tell of the débuts of Miss Lewis and Miss Talley—Miss Lewis whose voice is not under any circumstances an important one for an operatic career; Miss Talley, with a better vocal equipment, but needing greatly long periods of quiet, concentrated study to eliminate serious vocal difficulties and find herself as an artist. Both young women were given publicity beyond their merits. Both of them went on the Metropolitan stage pursued by reputations manufactured in advance, and neither of them had the technic or artistic maturity to meet the test. When it came it only drew attention to their defects. This has been bad for the singers, the theatre, and, above all, the public. True, these appearances brought audiences in overwhelming numbers to the Metropolitan. We are told that the performances in which Miss Talley took part were enormously profitable. But that should not be the measure of a company such as the Metropolitan, and doubtless was not designed to be. Such considerations are not for "the greatest opera house in the world," lavishly financed, and operating at a profit. And for the young singer there is no royal road to glory.

The record of productions and performances of the twenty-four weeks' season 1925-26 in the Metropolitan Opera House follows:

FRIENDS OF MUSIC.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As a subscriber and a great admirer of the really lovely concerts given by the Society of the Friends of Music, I would like to express my hope that "friends of music will step forward and promptly respond to the appeal made to them. What a loss it would be to music lovers if these beautiful concerts were to cease! Besides, I feel that the public owes it to the one who has sacrificed so much in their behalf that this splendid work continue.

Varied Local Happenings

Alexandre Gavrilov's "Ballet Revue," which Richard Herndon put on at the Princess last Monday for a limited engagement of six weeks, will likely be extended beyond that period, with frequent new numbers in a popular program.

The Opera Players enter their third week at the Grove Street Theatre next Tuesday night, continuing the presentation of Rutland Boughton's "The Immortal Hour," with Sarah Fiske and Ruth McIlvaine added to the original cast.

Charles Hubbard, tenor, in a second concert at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, 66 Fifth Avenue, Wednesday, will sing compositions of Ravel, de Falla, Florent Schmitt, Aubert and twelve other contemporaries.

Next Saturday evening at Mecca Temple the Freiheit Singing Society's choruses from Paterson and Brownsville will produce Jacob Schaeffer's oratorio, "Messiah ben Joseph," with text by the Jewish poet, Ben Steiman.

Dusolina Giannini, Marguerite d'Alvarez and Albert Spalding are to be the Newark Festival stars on May 5. Mary Lewis, Lawrence Tibbett and the Marmeins will appear May 6, and the series will close May 7 with Mendelssohn's "Elijah."

Milton Aborn, who staged the Century's revival of "Pinafore," is preparing a spectacular outdoor production of de Koven's "Robin Hood," in a woodland location on Washington Heights that will seat an audience of 20,000.

Carl Edouarde has just celebrated his twelfth anniversary as conductor at the Mark Strand, where he has served since the theatre was first opened, with a full symphonic orchestra of fifty-four men, two associate leaders, orchestration assistants and librarians.

PLANS OF MUSICIANS.

Mlla Wellerson, who will give her second 'cello recital at Aeolian Hall on April 29, played in the last four years abroad with Mengelberg's orchestra in Amsterdam, the Concerts Colonne in Paris, the Queen's Hall Orchestra in London, the Philharmonic, both of Berlin and Vienna, and the orchestras of Leipsic, Munich, Prague and Budapest, Oslo and Stockholm.

Arthur Shattuck, following a four months' concert tour of America, will sail April 20 on the Columbus for a year and a half overseas. He will give recitals in the cities of Germany, Austria, Italy, France, Scandinavia and Egypt.

Tito Schipa sailed recently for Italy, where the tenor purposes to give an opera season of six weeks at the Politeama Theatre in his native city, Lecce. It was at Lecce that he first sang in the boys' chorus in "Carmen." Any of those boys, now grown up, will be in Schipa's chorus of fifty; the orchestra will number sixty-five and scenes and costumes will be from Milan.

Paul Roes, the Dutch pianist, left on the liner Columbo for Italy, where he will spend the Summer in composing. He plays in Paris, Vienna, Berlin and Amsterdam before returning in November.

Gino A. Baldini has resigned as Treasurer of the Art Concert Service. He will head his own firm, Baldini & Englehardt, with offices in Steinway Hall, directing the tours of Paul Roes, Bruce Benjamin, Nadia Reisenberg and the Goldman Band.

Leo Cherniavsky, violinist of the Cherniavsky Trio, is returning Friday with his bride, formerly Mrs. Gertrude Ewing of Vancouver, to sail for a honeymoon abroad.

Miriam Saint, who made a Naples début last Summer, is returning on the Conte Rosso, due today. She is the daughter of O. R. Saint of Lindley & Co., this city, and Mrs. Saint, a former singer.

OPERA REPERTORY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The season of opera at the Metropolitan just drawing to a close had all the earmarks of Gatti-Casazza's régime, since the retirement of Toscanini. There was a great variety of works given; in fact, far too great a variety for the general good of the performances.

The holding over of such operas as "Pagliacci" and "Butterfly" for twenty successive seasons makes it impossible to produce other, more interesting works. Your readers, I am sure, would have preferred to hear Strauss's "Electra" and "Die Frau ohne Schatten" instead of the operas mentioned above. They would, no doubt, have preferred Mozart's "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail" and Gluck's "Iphigenie in Aulis" to Meyerbeer's "L'Africaine" and Giordano's "Andrea Chenier."

The Metropolitan is trying to do too much, and a great deal of its time is wasted on works which are musically beyond contempt.

Cannot the Juilliard Foundation be called to the rescue? The will of the late A. D. Juilliard expressly provided that, should the Metropolitan ever become so destitute financially or artistically as to need funds for the proper presentation of the great works of operatic art, the Juilliard Foundation would come to the rescue of the stricken organization.

J. L. ROGERS.

New York City, April 14, 1926.

Plans of Orchestras

THE New York Symphony Society has already made its plans for next season. Concerts will begin Oct. 29 and will last until April 10. The New York season will be briefly interrupted in January by a two weeks' tour to the Middle West.

Walter Damrosch will conduct the orchestra during the first half; on Jan. 8 he will hand over the baton to Otto Klemperer, who has been re-engaged as guest conductor for an eight weeks' period. His second visit to this country will last until March 6. The Thursday afternoon and Friday evening concerts at Carnegie Hall will be held in alternate weeks instead of on successive days as heretofore, and the programs of the two series will be entirely different.

Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink will make her only New York orchestral appearance with the New York Symphony in a Wagner program, with Walter Damrosch conducting. Other soloists who have been engaged as assisting artists are Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Albert Spalding, Pablo Casals, Joseph Szigeti, Walter Giesseking, Alfredo Casella and Alfred Cortot.

Several composers have been commissioned to write new works for next season. Jean Sibelius, the distinguished Finnish composer, is already at work on a symphonic poem, "The Wood," which will have its first performance early in the Fall under Mr. Damrosch. Alfredo Casella is also writing a special work for the Symphony Society. It is to be known as "Scarlatiana" and will be based on the themes of Scarlatti. At the première performance Casella himself will be at the piano. Among other new works to be performed will be "Phaedre," by Arthur Honegger, composer of "Pacific 231" and "Le Roi David." The inspiration for this work was derived from d'Annunzio's novel of the same name.

Clarence H. Mackay, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Philharmonic Society, has confirmed the reports that Willem Mengelberg and Wilhelm Furtwaengler have been re-engaged as conductors of the Philharmonic Orchestra for next season and that Arturo Toscanini would return as guest conductor.

"Under the leadership of these three eminent conductors," said Mr. Mackay, "the Philharmonic Society has had the most brilliant season in its history. Mr. Mengelberg will open the coming season at Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening, Oct. 14, and will conduct fifty-five concerts, making his farewell appearance on Sunday, Jan. 9. He will be succeeded by Mr. Toscanini, whose first concert is scheduled for Thursday, Jan. 13. The schedules have been slightly rearranged so that subscribers to every series will have an opportunity of hearing Mr. Toscanini, who will conduct at least fifteen times in the course of his visit. Mr. Furtwaengler will then assume the leadership on Thursday, Feb. 10, and will conduct the thirty-three remaining concerts of the season."

The Philharmonic Orchestra's concerts in the Metropolitan Opera House will be increased to seven next season, five taking place on Sunday afternoons and two on Tuesday evenings. The other series will remain unchanged.

It is announced that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in addition to the four series of concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, next season, will give a special series of performances of Beethoven's works. This festival will be given in the Spring and will commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the master's death (March 26, 1827).

This gala series of Beethoven performances will exceed in scale any Beethoven celebration of the past in Boston. Serge Koussevitzky will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in all nine of the master's symphonies. An event of the festival will be the performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solennis," or mass in D minor, for orchestra, chorus and solo quartet.

In the performance of the "Missa Solennis" the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be assisted by the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. This project is of long duration, although only now announced. Dr. Archibald T. Davison, conductor of the Harvard and Radcliffe choruses, agreed last Autumn, before departing for his sabbatical year in Europe, to collaborate with Mr. Koussevitzky in the performance of the mass. Mr. Koussevitzky has already begun to train the choruses on this score.

The revival of the "Missa Solennis" is regarded as an event of considerable musical significance. It is infrequently performed, owing to its great difficulty, and was last given in Boston by this orchestra at the dedication of Symphony Hall, on Oct. 15, 1900, Wilhelm Gericke conducting.

The mass bears the opus No. 123 and occupied a large part of the master's mature years (1818-1823). Beethoven did not confine himself to the bounds of ritual. It is ranked among his greatest works.

The experiment of charging lower rates for symphony music, instituted by the New York Symphony Society during the past season, has proved a tremendous success, according to reports issued. Last Fall the society took over Mecca Auditorium for its Sunday concerts and announced that because of the large seating capacity the cost of tickets would be reduced to the lowest level in the history of New York concert music. On a subscription basis the rates ranged from 28 cents to $1.20.

Harry Harkness Flagler, President of the New York Symphony Society, now reports that results have far exceeded expectations. Since last October 165,000 people have attended the concerts of the society in Greater New York. Seventy thousand attended the twenty concerts at Mecca Auditorium; 20,000 attended the thirty-five in Carnegie Hall, and 15,000 the six in Brooklyn. Of the success of Mecca Auditorium Mr. Flagler says:

"Sunday after Sunday more people have gathered under one roof to hear music than has ever been the case in any regular series of concerts in New York. The maximum point of the season was reached when on one Sunday every seat and 700 standing-room tickets were sold. Many of those coming had never before attended any series of concerts. The enthusiasm displayed by these newcomers over symphonic music was refreshing in a supposedly overconcertized city."

The directors of the Symphony Society have decided to continue the Sunday concerts at Mecca Auditorium next season, keeping the prices at the same low level.

Artur Brodansky, speaking of the future of the Society of the Friends of Music, said that the chorus might sing in the settlement houses, in the crowded districts, and in the outlying parts of Greater New York. Mr. Bodansky was of the opinion that choral music in New York had declined during the last years, and that only an organization like the Friends of Music, trained year in and year out, could get satisfactory results. In future, the society will devote less time to symphonic music and will increase its choral work, giving seldom heard oratorios.

CONCERNING BRUCKNER.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to add my word in regard to the "Bruckner case." In a season in which we have had a plethora of symphonic concerts—rather close to two hundred, counting the sixty-odd each of our two resident orchestras, with nine or ten unexpectedly excellent programs by the unfortunate State Symphony, a round dozen by the visiting Boston Symphony, about ten from the Philadelphia, and several more from Cincinnati, Cleveland, and some very delightful concerts by the Society of the Friends of Music: I repeat, in such a season, I think the fact that only three of Bruckner's symphonies and only one of Mahler's were given gives the lovers of these misunderstood or unrecognized master-works more of a grievance than Samuel Tilden can possibly have.

Why, in the name of tolerance and fair play, cannot the haters of Bruckner attend those numerous occasions when the thrice-familiar works are given ad nauseam, and permit those of us who care deeply for Bruckner and Mahler to take advantage of the too-rare occasions when we can hear them, without begrudging us our pleasure?

Personally, I think that those music lovers who have never given time to listening attentively to these two composers are to be pitied; they miss so much. But Bruckner and Mahler are men whose music requires more than a facile acquiescence. Fundamental brain-stuff went to the making of their monumental works, which is why they remain so fascinating to scholarly conductors and which perhaps accounts for their lack of ready acceptance.

I join my voice to that of Mr. Sweet in asking for a hearing of the Bruckner Ninth—and I would also be glad to have the privilege of hearing the fifth and seventh, which hold some memorable pages for those whose ears are not closed by impatience and prejudice. I yield to no one in appreciation of Beethoven, Brahms and Tchaikovsky, but I feel that in a city of this size and wide catholicity of tastes we have room for an occasional presentation of man who, if not their superiors, are their peers.

It is time that the myths of the "long-windedness" or "complexity" of Bruckner and Mahler were swept away. Future years will find them undying, though so long neglected, and perhaps the blindness of their critics will seem then as strange and reprehensible as the strictures upon Beethoven and Brahms of older times seem now to us.

My sincere thanks to Mr. Mengelberg, Mr. Furtwaengler and Mr. Klemperer for their devotion, limited as were its manifestations, to the cause of these two giants of the symphony; and my sincere sympathy to those who, in a season overflowing with repetitions of the familiar masters, choose to attend those unfairly few occasions when Bruckner and Mahler receive a small fraction of their just due.

JANE WHITCOMBE IGEL.

Musical Events Overseas

ENGLAND.

DURING the first week of May an important festival will be held at Oxford to celebrate the third centenary of the Heather Professorship of Music, now held by Sir Hugh Allen, remarks The Morning Post. There will be two orchestral concerts, by the Birmingham Corporation Orchestra, under Adrian Boult, and by the Oxford Orchestral Society, under Maurice Besly; two choral concerts by the Bach Choir; three evenings of opera at the Playhouse, and some open-air folk-dancing and folk-music in New College Gardens. The actual commemoration will be held in the Bodley Quadrangle (with the Sheldonian Theatre in reserve in case of bad weather). The professor will deliver his Heather Oration. Elizabethan madrigals will be sung, and there will be a "weekly practice" as instituted three centuries ago by Dr. William Heather.

The most important musical event of the festival will be the first performance of Dr. Vaughan Williams's new choral work, "Sancta Civitas." Other living British composers to be honored are Dr. Ernest Walker, Guy Warrack, M. Strickland-Constable, Maurice Besly and Sir Edward Elgar. The operatic program consists of Vaughan Williams's "The Shepherds of the Delectable Mountains." Bach's "Coffee and Cupid," and a ballet adapted to music of Purcell under the title of "A Pair of Tongs."

The late Roy Paterson founded the Edinburgh Paterson concerts nearly forty years ago. They flourished as long as there were educated audiences to attend them, but the social upheaval in the British Isles has scattered these patrons and "the revolutionaries of the present day," remarked the Scotch Musical Magazine, "have little taste for Brahms or Beethoven." The present promoters of the concerts, Messrs. Paterson & Sons, have found it necessary to ask the public for a guarantee. They point out that in Glasgow the orchestral concerts are under the auspices of the Glasgow Choral and Orchestral Union and that the Reid Symphony concerts in Edinburgh are similarly assisted. Local opera companies in Edinburgh and Glasgow produced grand opera exclusively in the intervals between the visits of the British National Opera Company.

FRANCE.

The Fontainebleau Summer School of Music, especially intended for American artists, teachers and advanced students, was founded by Maurice Fragnaud and Francis Casadesus, under the protection of the French Government. The directors are Charles Marie Widor and Camille Decreus. To its staff of teachers it has now added M. Saligmac as head of the opera class. M. Saligmac for a number of years was one of the leading tenors at the Metropolitan Opera House and has built up for himself a reputation as teacher of opera second to none in France. He has the use of the famous little theatre built by Napoleon III at Fontainebleau and on its stage the American students will be trained according to the best French traditions.

Walter Straram, with the assistance of the orchestra of the Société de Musique Indépendente, introduced two new works by Claude Delincourt at one of his March concerts. The first work was a piano suite called "Bocaceries," played by Beveridge Webster, and the second, selections from a symphonic piece, called "Offrande a Siva." The Revue Musicale said that "although the musical episodes were intended to accompany a stage performance, the suite made a magnificent rhapsody."

Audiences at a recent Pasdeloup Symphony Concert in Paris had the new experience of seeing a woman conduct that celebrated organization Miss Eva Brunelli is the first woman in France to wield a conductor's baton, and she scored a success. The critics described her work as calm, precise, thorough and free from any extravagant gestures. She showed a perfect knowledge of the scores and her conducting of Tchaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony was particularly praised.

A concert of Brazilian works was given by the Colonne Orchestra, under the direction of G. Pirené, in Paris in March. Some excerpts from "Guarany," an opera by Carlos Gomez, a symphony by Henrique Oswald and an orchestral work by Albert Nepomucero constituted the program. Gomez followed the Verdi style in his opera, Oswald the German School of Leipsic and Nepomucano proved the most national composer of the three.

CENTRAL EUROPE.

Leos Janacék, Czechoslovakia's composer, whose opera "Jenufa" was given last year at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, has written a new composition entitled "Concertino" for a small mixed orchestra. The first performance at Bruenn, Janacék's home, was so successful that it had to be repeated as an encore. Janacék's best new opera, "Jeji pastoryné," was presented for the first time at Hamburg and will be heard in the opera houses of Europe.

A rumor has reached London that there is a very grave danger of the collapse of the Salzburg Festival Society owing to the usual lack of financial support. It will be remembered that the society "approved" the alteration in the Festival Theatre which was deemed necessary, and now it cannot find the £60,000 which is the cost of the adaptation. The Austrian Government offered a subscription of about £3,000, and so far nothing else seems to have been forthcoming.

"Dona Nobis Pacem," a music-drama in three acts" by Kurt Stiebitz, was given in Halle Feb. 16. "Stiebitz," remarked the Signale, "is officially considered a pupil of Strauss. From him he learned how to manage a symphonic score but not the art of balancing the voice and the instruments, as Strauss did so masterfully in 'Rosenkavalier' and 'Ariadne.' Stiebitz is at present under the influence of Wagner and has not yet found his own style. His third act is strongly 'Parsifal' in tone. Neither the music nor the libretto of Schnehage is dramatic. Sometimes the episodes are ascetic, sometimes they are erotic, but they never rise to a commanding climax. The voice parts are melodious, but they are hampered by an overweighted instrumentation; they are made to compete with the trumpets to their undoing." Erich Band conducted.

Louise Galloway Active On Stage for 28 Years

TUCKED somewhere in the cups in Louise Galloway's chest in the hamlet of Dorchester, Mass., is her history, a history revealing a woman's activities in the theatre since 1898, with a few notes on the profits of each season.

Al Jolson used to say, in one of his shows, that he was going to make his first entrance on a horse. "If the audience doesn't like me," he would add, "all I'll have to do is to cry 'Giddap!'" With Miss Galloway, in stay in "Weak Sisters" and now "Rainbow Rose." The latter has, it appears, Summer applications; but in case of trouble she follows advice which is a paraphrase of Horace Greeley's and is, in fact, "Go North, trouper, go North."

The revivals of "The Two Orphans" and "Pinafore" bring back recollections to Miss Galloway, for she played Kate in the original production of "Way Down East," which is about due to be brought back. In 1905 William A. Brady tried the piece out for three weeks in New England, and then it went to Chicago, into a house now called the Garrick.

"Way Down East" was a hit from the start in Chicago and interests only the younger generation does not know—cared well at the Manhattan Theatre here on the site now occupied by Gimbel Brothers' store. This fact is expected to prove something about the uptown trend of commerce and its effect on art.

In 1909 Miss Galloway played Dicky in Charles Dillingham's "The Little Princess." Shortly afterward came "Cumberland '61," in which she was associated with W. J. Ferguson, Frank Losee, John Kilgour, Lionel Barrymore and Edgar Davenport. Other pieces which she may be induced to talk about are "The Lottery Man" and "The Night of the Party," both successful, on the outskirts of Broadway production; "Hack and White," as an exception and questions.

Strange to relate, Miss Galloway doesn't seem to mind the passing years. She'll even tell you her age, if you ask it, and further concerning the information that she played grand mothers in "The Climax," four years ago, and in "Weak Sisters," this season. In "Rainbow Rose" she is a mother, having risen dropped a generation since October.

Clark's Four Years' English $1.50

By THOMAS CLARK
Principal, Clark's School

This book will help you to succeed in your College Entrance Examination. It is intended both for the student who needs help in English, and for the teacher who wants a more useful and practical class text.

"Four Years' English" has been prepared to cover the entire four years' High School Course in Composition, Rhetoric, and Literature. It tells how to put life and vigor into essays and compositions, by selecting virile verbs and forceful nouns. Instead of suffocating pupils with stilted rules about simple, compound, and complex sentences, it leads them into the agreeable fields of literature and teaches them to write sentences used by famous authors.

The book closes with a chapter familiarizing the prospective Collegian with the type of question he will meet in his examination and gives him an idea of the kind of an answer that is required. Write or call for a copy of this book.

WEDDINGS OF THE WEEK

Vernal Note Is Sustained in Costumes as Well as in Decorations

IT will be Spring-like inside St. Mary's Church in Tuxedo Park, if not on the outside, on Saturday for the marriage of Miss Louise King, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Thorn King, to Kenneth A. Shaw Safe, son of Mrs. T. Shaw Safe of Newport and Providence, R. I. Quantities of fruit blossoms, cherry and apple, as well as dogwood, are being brought from a distance to decorate the picturesque little Episcopal church near the entrance to Tuxedo Park in the Ramapo Hills.

These blossoms, combined with tall cedars and tree ferns arranged in garden effect, will make an attractive setting for the bridal party, the bride in the conventional white satin and old lace and the bridesmaids in fluffy chiffon frocks of Spring colors. The same scheme of decorating will be carried out at the clubhouse, where the reception will be held.

Miss King will have Miss Alice Muriel Post, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Allison Wright Post, whose marriage to Harris Fahnestock Jr. will take place on June 29 in Bernardsville, N. J., for her maid of honor. The bridesmaids will be Miss Edith Wilmerding, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lucius Wilmerding; Miss Grace D. Wrenn, daughter of the late Robert D. Wrenn of Tuxedo Park, and Miss Helen M. Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Archibald M. Brown, a cousin of Miss King. Another cousin, Abbey Kissel, small daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Thorn Kissel, will be flower girl.

John P. Monks of Boston will be best man for Mr. Safe, whose ushers will be his cousins, William Gammell Jr. and Arthur A. Gammell; Walter K. Phelps and Charles Goodrich King 3d of Providence, W. Ogden McCagg, John P. Duncan, F. Ogden Nash, Cecil T. F. B. Lyon and Herbert Thorn King Jr., brother of the bride-elect, all of New York.

The ceremony will be performed at 3 o'clock by the Right Rev. James De Wolf Perry Jr., Bishop of Rhode Island, assisted by the rector of the church, the Rev. Robert S. W. Wood.

While the guests invited to the ceremony will naturally be limited to relatives and intimate friends, owing to the smallness of the church, more than 2,000 have been asked to the reception. Many will come from Newport and Providence, where the family of Mr. Safe's mother has been prominent for generations. Among the guests will be Mr. Safe's aunt, Lady Herbert, the former Miss Helen Louise Gammell of Providence, widow of Sir Arthur James Herbert, who is coming from London especially for the wedding. Mr. Safe through his mother, who was Miss Harriet Ives Gammell, is descended from the Gammell family of Providence, which was among the first to establish Summer homes in Newport. The Gammells at one time owned acres along the cliffs, where now stand many palatial residences. Members of the family, including Mrs. Safe, still have homes and spend the Summers there. Mr. Safe is a grandson of the late Professor William Gammell of Brown University, Providence.

Miss King is a great-great-granddaughter of Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt, through his fourth child, Emily Vanderbilt, who in 1849 was married to William K. Thorn. Their daughter, Emily, was married in 1869 to Daniel King, grandfather of Miss King. Miss King is a niece of Mrs. Alexander Baring of Santa Barbara, Cal., and of Mrs. Archibald M. Brown, and a grandniece of Mrs. Gustav E. Kissel. Her aunt, Mrs. Edward C. Post, formerly Miss Emilie Thorn King, lives in Lisieux, France.

YELLOW will be the color scheme of decorations at the marriage of Miss Adrienne Margaretta Iselin to Dudley Pierrepont Gilbert on Tuesday, which is also the golden wedding anniversary of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Columbus O'Donnell Iselin. Mrs. Iselin is the former Miss Edith C. Jones, a member of the Mason Jones family.

Quantities of yellow roses, mimosa and other yellow Spring flowers will be combined with ferns and palms. Immediate members of the two families only will witness the ceremony, which will be performed at the home of Miss Iselin's parents, 3 West Fifty-second Street, at 4 o'clock by the Rev. Peter E. Hoey of the Church of St. Paul the Apostle. A large reception will follow.

Miss Janet H. Robb, daughter of Mrs. Nathaniel Thayer Robb, who returned last week from Europe, where she passed the Winter, will be Miss Iselin's only attendant. O'Donnell Iselin, brother of the bride-elect, will be best man for Mr. Gilbert. There will be no ushers.

Mr. Gilbert and his bride will sail in May and will spend the Summer abroad.

Miss Iselin, who is an only daughter, was introduced to society several years ago. She is a member of the Junior League. She is a niece of Adrian, William E., and C. Oliver Iselin, also of Miss Georgine Iselin and Mrs. De Lancey Astor Kane. She is the sister of Lewis Iselin, who married Miss Marie de Neufville, daughter of Mrs. Jules J. de Neufville, who now resides in Paris. Miss Iselin is a cousin of the Countess Colloredo-Mannsfeld, the former Miss Eleanora Iselin, and whose marriage to Count Ferdinand Colloredo-Mannsfeld of Austria was celebrated at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Columbus O'Donnell Iselin.

Mr Gilbert is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Pierrepont H. Gilbert. His father is one of the best known American architects. He is the brother of Mrs. Randolph Santini, the former Miss Vera P. Gilbert.

MISS GEORGIE FANSHAWE POTTS will be one of the several brides of Saturday. Her marriage to George Dwight will take place in the afternoon in the chantry of St. Thomas's Church. The ceremony will be performed by the Right Rev. Ernest M. Stires, Bishop of Long Island, in the presence of immediate relatives and a few close friends. There will be no reception. Miss Potts will be given in marriage by her grandfather, William S. Fanshawe, with whom she makes her home. She will have but one attendant, Miss Lucilla Wylie, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Robert Hawthorne Wylie, whose engagement to Henry Codman Potter, a grandson of the late Bishop Henry Codman Potter, was announced recently.

Mr. Dwight will have his brother James Dwight of Boston for his best man. The ushers will be William S. Fanshawe White, cousin of Miss Potts; Frederick P. Delafield and Francis W. La Farge of New York; Prescott T. Cumner and Richard F. Nichols of Boston.

CHILDREN GIVE REVUE TWICE

Students at Stage School Will Present Novelty April 27 and 30

A REVUE composed of song and dance specialties and skits from popular musical comedies and plays will be given on the afternoons of April 27 and 30 at the Walter Hampden Theatre for the benefit of the Professional Children's School.

The cast will be chosen entirely from the school. Dorothea James will take the part of Marilyn Miller as she appears in "Sunny," and Al Jolson has promised to be on hand at both performances to "make up" his fifteen-year-old double, Bert Gorman. Ned Wayburn is directing and producing the revue.

The Professional Children's School, established in 1914, is not a school to teach the art of drama, but an elementary school to give the children of the stage a chance for a thorough education. The correspondence school follows the children all over the country with their lessons, so that while they are on the road they may keep up with their various classes. The standard of scholarship is high and the school authorities are proud of the fact that the children passed their regents' examinations last year with very high marks.

Mrs. E. Roland Harriman is taking a personal interest in the two performances and has charge of the tickets, which may be obtained at the National City Bank, Park Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street.

Among the patronesses are Mrs. Winthrop Aldrich, Mrs. Ira Barrows, Mrs. James Brown, Mrs. Joseph Burden Jr., Mrs. William A. Burnham, Mrs. William T. Carrington, Mrs. D. Crawford Clark, Miss Bessie Cudahy, Mrs. John A. Davis, Mrs. Charles D. Dickey, Mrs. David Dows, Mrs. Paul A. Degener, Mrs. John Emerson, Mrs. Ernest Fahnestock, Mrs. E. Hayward Ferry, Mrs. James Gleason, Mrs. William A. Greer, Mrs. Walter Hampden, Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Mrs. E. Henry Harriman, Mrs. Burton Holmes and Mrs. Sidney Homer.

Also Mrs. Hermann Irion, Mrs. Otto H. Kahn, Mrs. Edward V. Z. Lane, Mrs. Philip Livermore, Mrs. James Metcalfe, Miss Adelina Moller, Mrs. Kenneth MacGowan, Mrs. Ponsonby Ogle, Mrs. Dallas B. Pratt, Mrs. Allen A. Robbins, Miss Pauline Robinson, Miss Louise Scott, Mrs. Hiram W. Sibley, Miss Fanny A. Smith, Mrs. Walter N. Stillman, Mrs. Joseph R. Swann, Miss Laurette Taylor, Mrs. Carr Van Anda, Mrs. Whitney Warren, Mrs. Channing Wiley and Mrs. David B. Dearborn Jr.

MEET OPENS OUTDOOR SEASON

SOCIETY'S outdoor season, so far as this section is concerned, will be opened with the Spring meet of the United Hunts Association, which will be held Saturday afternoon at Belmont Park Terminal.

As a rule at this time of year the vicinity of Belmont Park is most attractive, with its early Spring verdure, but unless the weather man performs a miracle the meet is not likely to be marked by such hoped-for conditions. It is several years since the meet has been held at the terminal, which is better fitted for races whose riders all are amateurs.

There always has been a certain air of privacy in these gatherings, whose surroundings always have had the appearance of a meet on a great country estate. It is considered a good move on the part of John McE. Bowman, President of the association, that this change has been made from the main track of the park, as it will preserve the amateur ideals that will not conflict with those of professionals on the many race courses of this section.

Meets of the association have been held at Belmont Park since 1917. The officers are John McE. Bowman, President; F. Ambrose Clark, Vice President; S. Bryce Wing, Treasurer, and Henry A. Buck, Secretary.

There will be a second meet on April 26, and in advance of each there will be many luncheon parties at the Turf and Field Club. Boxes have been arranged for Mrs. Payne Whitney, Mrs. S. Bryce Wing, Middleton S. Burrill, Lewis Latham Clarke, Frank Vance Storrs, Gifford A. Cochran, Edward M. Weld, Norrie Sellar, William R. Coe, R. Penn Smith Jr., George D. Pratt, Sumner Ballard, John Sanford, Richard Whitney, Newbold Morris, Frank S. Voss, Bradley Martin, James Cox Brady, Dr. John A. Vietor, Edgar W. Leonard and J. Fred Byers.

OLD DUTCH PLAY AT TOWN HALL

"Wedding of Kloris and Roosje" Will Be Given for Benefit of Flood Sufferers

JHR. DR. DE GRAEFF, the Minister from the Netherlands, is expected to come from Washington to attend the performance of "The Wedding of Kloris and Roosje," which will be part of the entertainment to be given in the Town Hall on Wednesday for the benefit of the flood sufferers in Holland. Fifty persons, either born in Holland or descended from Dutch ancestors, will take part. Among those who will have leading parts are Miss Neke Hildebrand, Robert W. Boissevain, Mrs. Catherine de Vogel, Jan Van Bommel, G. W. Boissevain and Miss Josephine Pomeroy. Mrs. de Vogel is directing the production and Thomas W. Van Oss is the scenic director.

The selection of the play "The Wedding of Kloris and Roosje" to those unfamiliar with the literature of Holland means little, but to the Dutch it is a tradition, as the play dates back to 1650 and for over 200 years it has been performed in all the leading Dutch cities on New Year's Day. It might be called a musical comedy with no plot, as there are many dances and songs woven into the piece. The players will wear costumes that are traditionally correct and the committee in charge has asked that any old Dutch costumes in family collections be lent for the occasion. Costumes from the Provinces of Friesland, Zeeland, Marken, Limburgm Overjael, Drente and Gelderland are particularly desired.

Mrs. Robert Erskine Ely is Chairman of the Executive Committee. An added feature of the entertainment will be motion pictures showing conditions in the flooded districts of Holland.

The boxes in Town Hall for this occasion will be sold to the highest bidders and boxholders as well as patrons will sign their names on the special program that Antoon van Welie, Holland's portrait painter, is designing and which will be presented to Queen Wilhelmina.

A committee from the Junior League will act as ushers during the performance. They will be dressed in Dutch costumes.

Among those interested in the performance are Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, Miss Charlotte Baker, Mrs. Melbert Carey, Robert Erskine Ely, Mrs. Hamlin Garland, Mrs. John Henry Hammond, Mrs. E. R. L. SPANISH ARTIST AIDS HOSPITAL

St. Mary's Will Benefit by Special Engagement of Raquel Meller

ST. MARY'S Free Hospital for Children will benefit substantially by the special performance of Raquel Meller tomorrow night at the Empire Theatre, the sale of boxes and seats for the production having been most satisfactory.

This hospital, established in 1870 for the medical care of sick, maimed and crippled children, under the auspices of the Episcopal Sisters of St. Mary, is at 405 West Thirty-fourth Street. Beginning with the limited accommodations which a private house furnished, there now is a hospital that, fronting on Thirty-fourth Street, extends to Ninth Avenue, and also an irregularly shaped plot that goes to Thirty-fifth Street. This building is inadequate for the needs of the 132 children, the Sisters in charge and the household employes at the hospital, therefore the necessity of gaining more funds.

The Wilkes Dispensary in connection with the hospital provides for treatment of sixty patients daily and contains rooms for the house staff. At St. Mary's Summer Hospital in Norwalk, Conn., there is space for eighty children, who are cared for from June to October each year, and there also is the Noyes Memorial Home for Convalescents in Hillside Avenue, Peekskill, N. Y., which is used for the care and education of children who do not need active hospital treatment. During last year 2,360 children were cared for in the hospital, while in the out patients' department more than 13,000 were treated.

Mrs. George B. Post, owing to the absence in Europe of her daughter, Mrs. R. Thornton Wilson, has assumed the responsibilities of increasing her many friends in the entertainment.

Among the most recent purchasers of seats or boxes, insuring an interesting audience, are Mrs. J. Sergeant Cram, Mrs. Forsyth Wickes, Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt, Mrs. Francis S. Bangs, Mrs. Carll Tucker, Mrs. Nicholas Murray Butler, Mrs. Thomas Ewing, Mrs. Oliver D. Filley, Miss Angelica Gerry, Mrs. Walter B. James, Mrs. Joseph P. Grace, Mrs. John C. Livingston, Mrs. Seth Milliken, Mrs. Henry Morgan Tilford, Mrs. J. Woodward Haven, Mrs. Lewis Gouverneur Morris, Mrs. Kenneth O'Brien, Mrs. William Starr Miller, Mrs. Francis Key Pendleton, Mrs. Charles H. Sherrill, Mrs. William Willis Reese, Mrs. Francis Smyth, Mrs. John S. Rogers and Mrs. Eugene S. Reynal.

COMING SUPPER DANCES

Juniors of Two Chief Political Parties Select Same Date for Events

THE Democratic Junior League of the City of New York, of which Miss Grace Ludlow Kelly is President, will give a supper dance on April 30 in the Italian Garden and ballroom of the Hotel Ambassador in honor of Mrs. John Blair, Miss Laura Cauble, Mrs. James Egan, Mrs. James A. Foley, Mrs. William H. Good, Mrs. Alfred F. Hess, Mrs. Frederick Kernochan, Mrs. J. Ramsay Reese, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Mrs. Alfred E. Smith, Mrs. James J. Walker and Miss Virginia Gildersleeve.

Governor Alfred E. Smith and Mayor James J. Walker are expected to attend. At midnight there will be a program of professional entertainment, which will be headed by Miss Blanche Ring and Charles Winninger.

The proceeds will be used for printing and distributing a pamphlet especially prepared to interest young women who have just become of voting age in the purposes of the Democratic Party. It is the object of the league to reach all such young women and enroll them as Democrats. The program includes such personal services as escorting the novice to the registration booths and to the polls on election day.

Tickets are procurable from Mrs. Evelyn Clay Everett, 596 Riverside Drive, Chairman of the Ticket Committee, or from members of the league or at the Democratic Junior League headquarters, Room 1502, 104 Fifth Avenue.

The officers of the league are the Misses Grace Kelly, President; Alice Kileen, Catherine Sheridan, Dorothy Smith, Rosalie Weill, Vice Presidents; Sara Cordata, Secretary, and Emily Welt, Treasurer.

The Executive Committee, of which Miss Rosalie Weill is Chairman, includes Mrs. Alfred E. Smith Jr., the Misses Emily and Katherine Smith, Mrs. Harry Frazee, Mrs. Evelyn Clay Everett and the Misses Dorothy Ashworth, Ethel Donoghue, Florence MacDonald, Helen de F. BLIND WOMEN WILL GIVE PROGRAM FOR CLUB FUND

AN entertainment for the benefit of the Mutual Aid Fund of the Women's Club of the New York Association for the Blind has been arranged to take place on Friday and Saturday nights in the Lighthouse Little Theatre, 111 East Fifty-ninth Street. The program will include a one-act play, "Evening Dress Indispensable," in which blind players will appear, and the Women's Glee Club and the String Quartet will also assist in the program as well as the Lighthouse Orchestra.

The Mutual Aid organization is composed of blind members of the Women's Club of the New York Association for the Blind. The object of the organization is to bring cheer to blind women who are reported by the visiting teachers of the association, whose needs are cared for by association funds. Small gifts are presented to them of fruits, flowers and candy as well as clothes and frequently small loans of money are made. Easter and Christmas baskets are distributed among these women.

Miss Regina Vath is Chairman of the committee in charge of the benefit, other members of which are Mrs. David Robb and Miss Grace Keator. Officers of the New York Association for the Blind include Dr. John H. Finley, William Howard Taft, Charles Evans Hughes and Miss Helen Keller. Henry W. Goddard is Chairman of the Board of Trustees, other officers of which are Felix M. Warburg, Thomas S. McLane and Mrs. Winifred Holt Mather. The honorary officers include Elihu Root, President, and Robert W. De Forest, Vice President.

OTHER SOCIETY EVENTS

DANCE RECITAL PROCEEDS WILL GO TO HOSPITAL

A RECITAL of dances, under the direction of Miss Claire Holcomb Bloss and Mrs. Helen R. Edgar, will be given on Saturday afternoon in the main ballroom of the Plaza for the benefit of the Cardiac Department of the New York Post Graduate Hospital.

The recital will include two complete ballets, also Syrian, Russian and Greek folk dances specially arranged for the occasion. Among the children who will take part are Eileen Creevey, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. George M. Creevey, who will do a pirate dance; Rita Vredenburgh, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Watson Vredenburgh, who will give several solo dances; Bettina Greenley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Greenley; Bettina Martinelli, daughter of Giovanni Martinelli of the Metropolitan Opera; Charlotte and Roma Niles, daughters of Judge William W. Niles and Mrs. Niles; Betty Morrison, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Cressy Morrison, and Nadia Fortington, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Fortington.

The committee arranging the benefit is headed by Mrs. William T. Barlow and includes Mrs. Russell S. Carter, Mrs. Beaman Douglas, Miss Fanny G. Ely, Mrs. James Wall Finn, Mrs. Robert H. Halsey, Mrs. P. Hanson Hiss, Mrs. Warren A. Mayon, Mrs. Carl A. Mead, Mrs. Godfrey Pisek, Mrs. Walter Rahlte, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Tallant and Miss Anne N. Watrous.

Boxes already have been secured by Mrs. William O. Barclay, Mrs. Israel O. Blake, Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, Mrs. Gale H. Carter, Miss Ethel Du Bois, Mrs. Roger H. Dennett, William Henry Hays, Mrs. Jacob Hays, Mrs. Edward F. Hutton, Mrs. Edwin C. Jameson, Mrs. Gustavus T. Kirby, Mrs. Louis S. Levy, Mrs. Dunlevy Milbank, Mrs. Alfred B. Meacham, Mrs. George G. McCracken, Mrs. Sanford H. Steele, Miss Edith Scoville, Mrs. Allen Wardwell, Mrs. George DeWitt Williamson and Mrs. Frederic N. Wilson.

The children will present the same program at a dress rehearsal for their parents at the Hotel Astor on April 16. Tickets for the benefit may be secured from Mrs. William Tait Barlow, 53 West Fifty-third Street, or Miss Claire H. Bloss, 417 West 120th Street.

TREASURE HUNT IN AID OF NATIONAL NAVY CLUB

A BLACK PIRATE Treasure Hunt will be held on the night of May 7 for the benefit of the National Navy Club of New York.

The hunt will start at the Hotel Sulgrave, 60 East Sixty-seventh Street, at 9 o'clock, and after-dinner coffee will be served there. The first clue to the whereabouts of the treasure will be at the Sulgrave. By a series of clues or hints in the form of verses or limericks or acrostics, the participants will be led nearer and nearer to the Treasure, and the winner will be the person who finds and solves all the clues first. Miss Lois Long will assist in writing the clues. Following the hunt there will be a supper dance at Sherry's.

The plans will not be revealed until the night of the hunt, but now, from time to time, Black Pirates will be seen on odd street corners, and any one of them will give information about the hunt.

An innovation is the formation of a "Transportation Committee" in lieu of a Floor Committee. The duties of this committee will be to enlist as many automobiles for the hunt as possible. Mrs. Adee Bradley and Mrs. Havemeyer Butt are organizing this committee.

Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks are honorary chairmen of the Hunt Committee, which is headed by Mrs. Edward Clarkson Potter and includes Mrs. Duncan G. Harris, Mrs. William H. Hamilton, Douglas L. Elliman, Paul L. Hammond, J. Fred Talcott and Stephen H. P. Pell.

Tickets for the hunt may be obtained from Miss Helen Jenkins, 342 Madison Avenue.

Among the patrons and patronesses are George T. Adee, Miss Augusta de Peyster, Douglas L. Elliman, Mrs. Joel Ellis Fisher Jr., Mrs. William Fahnestock, Mrs. J. Henry Lancashire, Mrs. Frederick Pearson, Nathan T. Pulsifer, James Speyer, J. Frederick Talcott, Mrs. Preble Tucker, Mrs. Warner M. Van Norden and Stewart Waller.

CARD PARTY FOR BENEFIT OF BARAT SETTLEMENT

THE Manhattanville Alumnae Association will give a card party tomorrow afternoon at the Park Lane for the benefit of the Barat Settlement House.

An Honorary Committee has been formed consisting of Mrs. William P. Van Wyck, Mrs. Jose M. Ferrer, Mrs. Edgar J. Treacy, Miss Georgine Iselin, Mrs. Auguste Noel and Miss Margaret Kelly.

Directors of the Alumnae Association who will be in charge of the entertainment include Mrs. Edward Colby, Mrs. George H. Bradford, Mrs. Walter A. Burke, Mrs. Victor F. Ridder and Mrs. Joseph A. Dodin; the Misses Corinne Roche, Jane Charles, Marcella McKeon, Gertrude Kelly, Claire Smith, Adelaide M. Jones, Irene Martin and Mary Brown.

Tickets may be procured from Miss Jane Charles, 593 Riverside Drive.

BIG ADVANCE SEAT SALE FOR HOSPITAL BENEFIT

THERE has been an excellent advance sale of boxes and seats for the special performance of "Pinafore" at the Century Theatre, tomorrow night, in aid of the Hospital for the Relief of Ruptured and Crippled Children, which is at 231 East Forty-second Street.

It is by means of such entertainments that the directors and managers of the hospital obtain funds to carry on the important and necessary work of the hospital, which is ever increasing. Thousands of patients are treated each year. Formerly treatment was confined to children but at the present time adults are admitted.

One of the patrons of the hospital has purchased one hundred seats for tomorrow night, which will be distributed among former patients of the hospital whose income does not permit of such diversions.

Boxes or seats already have been secured for tomorrow night by John S. Melcher, Adrian Iselin, William Church Osborn, Mrs. Thatcher M. Brown, Mrs. Sol M. Stroock, Miss Blanche Potter, Frank H. Simmons, Miss Marie Abbott, Mrs. John B. Mott, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. Grace, Mrs. James Blackstone Taylor, Frederick H. Osborn, Charles Chauncey Stillman, Mrs. Richard Hoe, Mrs. James Remsen Strong, Miss Georgine Iselin, Mrs. Charles H. Tweed, Mrs. Hamilton Fish, Miss Grace Scoville, Howard Willets, William A. Rockefeller, F. Higginson Cabot Jr., Mrs. Stephen C. Clark, Dr. Richmond Stevens, James Churchill, Dr. John B. Walker, Dr. William Sneed, Miss Harriet Devoe, Mrs. Louis de Bebian Moore, Alfred Gregory, Dr. Richmond Stevens, John S. Caswell, Dr. William Sharpe and Dr. Norman Sharpe.

The sale will be continued throughout tomorrow at the box office of the theatre.

COMPLIMENTARY DINNER FOR SERVICE BRANCHES

MRS. FRANCIS ROGERS, President of the Soldiers and Sailors' Club of New York, with other officers of that institution, has arranged a dinner in compliment to the Army and Navy and Marine Corps for Tuesday night to be held in the main ballroom of the Plaza. It is expected that leading men and women of the country will be present. Among the speakers will be Mrs. Rogers and Professor William Starr Myers, whose subject will be "Preparedness for Peace." George W. Wickersham will preside.

This club, at 261 Madison Avenue, organized after the war, is conducted for service men while in the city and although largely self-sustaining through receipts from the canteen and dormitory there is always need of more funds. The club not only supplies good meals at a cost price but recreations and sleeping accommodations, but it is often the case that each chair, lounge or bit of floor space is called into service as a bed. Voluntary contributions aid to a certain degree but it is necessary to devise other means to raise funds. During the past year 83,000 service men have visited the club.

The Board of Directors of the club includes Wellington Crouse, Mrs. Blaine Beale, Edgar Bromberger, Mrs. Charles D. Dickey, Mrs. R. Emmet Digney, Reune Martin, Mrs. Harold C. Mathews, Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt Jr., Mrs. Francis Rogers, Major William C. Rose, Mrs. Myron Schiefer, Mrs. Charles P. Summerall, Mrs. W. Grustav Triest and Miss Martha Root White.

Among those who are expected at the dinner are Mrs. John W. Castles, Mrs. Kurnal R. Babbitt, Miss Eleanor Babbitt, Francis R. Appleton Jr., William M. Chadbourne, Miss Mary Vail Andress, Miss Emily Chauncey, Mr. and Mrs. Jay Coogan, Mrs. Richard F. Babcock, Mr. and Mrs. Francis McNeil Bacon, Mrs. John Corbin, Mrs. George Bacon, Mrs. John Cruikshank, Mr. and Mrs. George Barr Baker, Alfred Curtiss, Mrs. James Barnes, Mrs. Walter Damrosch, Mrs. William Barstow, Mrs. William Harrison Day, Miss Maude W. Bartlett, Mrs. Charles H. Ditson, Miss Agnes W. Bartlett, Mrs. T. Coleman du Pont, Mrs. Edgar N. Dickson, Mrs. Nathaniel Berwin, Colonel and Mrs. Thomas H. Birch, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Higgins, Mr. and Mrs. S. Hinman Bird and Mr. and Mrs. G. Beekman Hoppin.

PUPILS WILL GIVE PLAY FOR SCHOLARSHIP FUND

PUPILS of the Gardner School will present the musical comedy "The Magnolia Lady" on the night of May 7 in the grand ballroom of the Plaza for the benefit of the College Scholarship Fund of the school.

Miss Rosamond Kittle of Indianapolis will play the leading rôle and the other principals will be Miss Jeannette Bleecker, Miss Kathryn Washburn and Miss Loretta Sayer, all of New York. There will also be several specialties by Miss Dorothy McNeill, Miss Teena Piazza and Miss Elaine Fishkne.

The chorus will consist of the Misses Dorothy Barnhill, Arline Bennett, Geraldine Breing, Catherine Cooke, Marjorie Farnsworth, Jean Gifford, Leonia Graham, Helen Graves, Dorothy Jaeckel, Dorothy Monell, Genevieve Somers, Dorothy Wallace, Ruth Walsh, Anne Ward and Charlotte Wilson.

In the pickaninny chorus will be Misses Marie Bade, Barbara Nelson, Dorothy Burtis, Marjorie Clements, Aurora Mauro-Cottene, Gladys Rankin, Thirza Jane Saxton and Louise Shaw.

CARD PARTY SATURDAY TO AID POOR CLARE NUNS

THE annual bridge and euchre party to raise funds for the Franciscan Order of the Poor Clare Nuns has been arranged by the Ladies' Auxiliary of the association to take place at the Waldorf-Astoria on Saturday afternoon. Money raised at the party will be added to the fund for reducing the debt on the monastery at 828 Haven Avenue. The Poor Clare Nuns are a small cloistered order whose resources are small and whose support is gained chiefly through the Ladies' Auxiliary.

Mrs. Hugh Donnelly is President of the auxiliary and the other officers are Mrs. Mary Thorpe, Mrs. John Devanny, Mrs. Thomas F. McAvoy, Mrs. William Abbott and Miss Catherine Kelly. The tickets, which are $1.25, may be secured from Mrs. McAvoy, 430 West 154th Street.

INTRIGUING FASHIONS IN SPORTS TOGS

PARIS MODELS ADOPTED

Outdoor Things Charm Through Use of the Supple and Lustrous Fabrics

NUMEROUS and varied as are the the demands of dress for Spring, there is in the collections of both French and American creators nothing radically new. As one authority on fashions puts it—what they have to offer is a "curious mélange of the past, present and future," in which, however, there is much that is intriguing, much of charm and of practical value as well. It seems to be a rather good sign and an appreciation of important things already done, of ideals already realized, when we in part hold to forms we know, as people of older civilizations do. Women of European countries do not discard a style as we do it if it suits them and they are happy in it, though everywhere this is the time when a wardrobe needs to be freshened and as many new and lovely costumes acquired as may be afforded.

SPORTS and semi-sports clothes are presented by all of the Paris designers in many attractive models. They are built of crêpe, taffeta, bengaline, alpaca and other fabrics of supple texture and lustrous quality, and appeal to one as being made more for style than for utility. This is the variation due to the conception of the French, who, a generation ago, were wholly unsympathetic with the American idea of the tailleur and sports type of dress. These were the reverse of the French woman's feeling with regard to femininity, and now American women of fashion are accepting and adapting Parisian models in sports suits, frocks, coats and accessories. It goes without saying that differences in climate, social life and sports activities create demand for certain modifications in cut, in material and in general treatment. These considerations have been successfully met in many sports costumes from houses that bear significant Paris names.

ALL of the models have one characteristic — simplicity without severity, tailored, yet with a certain femininity that belongs to the bob and the vagabond hat. Because sports clothes become so felicitously the mood of society and the demand of the season, attention is centred for the time being on this type of dress, and many clever variants are being created. The sweater jacket in which American sportswomen found much ease last season is replaced by a straight coat, cut like a man's tuxedo.

Variety is given to this little coat in different collars and different ways of placing the fastenings. In a suit from Jeanne Lanvin, the lapels, collar and one button at the waist follow precisely the lines of the convenional tuxedo, reproduced in another suit with a softer collar having two strap ends hanging in front. The utterly masculine effect is averted in the gilet of white crepe de chine which is made with high, round collar and trimmed with a row of tiny buttons sewn close together down the front. This high neck pattern of blouse is exceedingly popular and some of the late models are made with many small tucks.

Others have a small scarf instead of the collar, to be wound around the throat and tied loosely at one side or directly under the chin. The blouse itself is straight, unbelted and extends well over the hips. In late styles it has long, plain or but slightly full sleeves that fit easily under the straight sleeve of the jacket.

PREMET creates a sports suit of black charmelaine in which the three pieces are handled in a manner both unusual and chic. The coat is cut in the tuxedo style, fastened with one button and drawn in slightly with a cluster of gathers at each side. The gilet is made with a small standing collar that closes with a narrow ribbon bow and has a row of small buttons down the front. The material of the gilet is rose crêpe de chine bound with gros grain ribbon, which shows beneath the bottom of the short jacket and in the cuff bands at the wrist. The skirt is laid in wide side pleats stitched three-quarters of the way down, with the bottom of each pleat cut to form a scallop.

Magdaleine des Hayes does a jolly little smoking suit somewhat after this model in which she makes the jacket of navy blue velvet, with no fastening, the skirt of blue Kasha in wide pleats stitched to within a few inches of the bottom. The gilet is of white mousseline with a wide oval collar in the shape of a man's shirt bosom, inside of which is a frilly jabot and little narrow tie ends at the neck.

AMONG the latest sports suits from Drecoll, the most striking models are made wholly different from the straight jacket. The coat of one suit in gray rep is cut in a blouse, long in the waist and lapping well across the front. It is joined to the flaring skirt by a wide belt, all of the same material, around the hips, fastened with one large button. A tailored blouse of the cloth is slashed down from the neck, and may be drawn together, with a small top collar of white mousseline. This blouse style of suit is quite as good and perhaps in the latest models a bit less usual than the straight coat. In most of the French suits it is separate from the skirt and belted.

The double-breasted blazer is considered very smart and will be worn by fashionable Americans, especially of the younger set, for early sports events and general country activities. Still another, the Oxford student jacket, simplified, is popular with young women. Each of these styles is shown by the best designers, with variations of detail and individual preference in fabric and color. One requisite is simplicity, which is maintained even when the skirt of the suit is pleated in some original style and an original touch is given the gilet or waistcoat. Also the sports suit must avoid as much as possible the commonplace, with such unique treatment as may give expression to the art or the prestige of the author.

SOME among the most conservative are doing delightful seemingly naïve things in informal sports dress. One design from Drecoll is ideal for the younger woman. It has a straight shirt-blouse fastened down the front, Eton collar of white linen and short kilt skirt. Regny makes a little suit of this type, adding a yoke to the blouse and outside pockets that give a coat effect. Jean Patou offers two designs from which to make a selection. One is made of white flannel, with a border of stripes in rose and green. The blouse is a plain slip-on, sweater shape with small revers; the skirt box-pleated, the border being used around the bottom of both sweater and skirt. The other suit is of the semi-sports type, in heavy blue crêpe, introducing the shirt bosom front of white georgette, in the blouse which wrinkles softly over the top of a kilted skirt of the blue. Redfern uses a plain slip-on, close-fitting blouse of figured material with a V neck finished with a bias band and a box-pleated skirt of plain frisca.

Chantal cuts the bottom of a box-pleated skirt of plain crêpe in curves to form the scallops that are so modish at the moment, and adds a shaped band of the material to trim the front and bottom of a simple blouse-bodice with slightly full sleeves. Goupy is showing the straight long tunic blouse, which is given an uncommonly dainty finish with a turnover collar and long jabot of pleated chiffon which is introduced to soften the sleeves at the wrist.

THE cape appears to have created a little storm centre of discussion. Its first appearance on this side had an instant response, for American women like the cape and wear it in many forms and for many different sorts of dress. The endorsement of Paris, as expressed by couturiers of importance, appears to be a matter of proportion.

NEW NOTES IN SPRING WEAR

Gilded or Silvered Kid Is For Belt or Collar— The Vogue of Bags

MANY new ways of using gilded and silvered kid are shown in dress accessories. Collars, belts and motifs for gowns in both the sports and the softer types are cut in fancy shapes out of these leathers, some of which are most artistic. A simple tailored hat in cloth or satin is trimmed effectively with a single ornament in silver or gilt. Slippers of many kinds are ornamented with these as bindings, bands or fancy patterns that trim the vamp of a shoe for evening or a boudoir slipper. Almost every imaginable design is used —crescent, leaf, flower, plume—giving an exotic and exceedingly ornate appearance to footwear.

THE vogue of bags is so well established that the search for novelty presents an almost weekly problem. Just from Paris is a bag made of baby calfskin. These are of silky texture and most lovely in color, those of the Jersey, Alderney and Holstein in their soft pretty markings. These skins are mounted with antique silver, dull gold tortoise shell or metal frames entirely covered with the leather.

WHITE metal that is very light in weight and untarnishable is being used extensively in novelty jewelry for Spring. There are hair bands, for instance, in narrow semi-circle effects, coronet interpretations, and plain flat bands of Indian inspiration. All are set with rhinestones, whether the design be the simple scroll, elaborate antique effects or more conventional themes. These bands come in two types, those that fit the head and those that are adjusted by simply pinning on with or without the aid of a fine silk elastic band.

EARRINGS to match these hair bands are made in deep looped effects in oval and round shapes. Occasionally a fancy motif in the nature of a flower or basket is suspended from the upper edge of the circlet, making a pretty swinging centre for the loop. However, when the loop itself is especially ornamented or elaborate in design, this centre motif is omitted. The trend for ornamentation is carried out even in the minor parts, the fastenings set with finer rhinestones in floral or modern designs, matching the loop sections. Another interesting and useful item in this combination is the bill clasp, which has a variety of fancy tops or ends including animal heads, birds, horse shoes, initials and so forth.

PARIS VOGUE OF PINK AND GREEN

Pastel Shades Rule Color Schemes of Hats, Frocks, Lingerie and Even Formal Gowns

PARIS.

ALL the little shop windows along the Rue St. Honoré are blossoming forth in palest pink and green gowns, hats and lingerie, for faint pinks and greens used together as Lelong introduced them last month are promising to be one of the color successes of the Paris Spring and Summer season.

The credit for realizing the real apple-blossom possibilities must be given to Lucile. Her gown is done in georgette of palest pink with fluttering leaves of pale green attached only at the stems, making a decorative cluster design on skirt, blouse and lower sleeves. With this gown, Lucile has designed one of her very wide hats, pale green in color, turned up sharply in back.

MARQUISETTE, embroidered in an all-over design in silks of pale pink and pale green, is Molyneux's contribution to this color scheme; while Jacquet, the new house on the Champs Elysées, has made a lovely frock in light green georgette with trimmings of tiniest roses of pink ribbon embroidered on in the shape of a collar, down the waist in front and about the waistline. The leaves of these roses are in gold, painted by hand.

Premet's gown, with the wide skirt embroidered heavily in pink and green paillettes, has a large green crêpe handkerchief edged with pink georgette to complete it.

TO give the originator of this color combination his proper due, we must say that few houses have achieved the beauty with these two colors, vert d'eau and rose Matignon, that Lelong himself has achieved in his evening ensembles. These gorgeous compositions, using pale green velvet, jewel embroidery, rich fur and pale pink velvet and georgette, are incomparable. But Lelong has used these two colors almost as successfully in simple gowns of crêpe de chine without the aid of embroidery, velvet or fur. One of these, in a soft green crêpe de chine, had a waist plain except for the open, deep "U" yoke that he favors this season, and has a gathered skirt cut in four panels, swinging loose, but with the hem caught up upon itself as a harem skirt is caught. Under this overdress is a plain slip underdress of pale pink crêpe de chine.

IN another gown for evening he reversed the colors and used pink crêpe de chine over a green underdress. The skirt of this gown was split at either side with the lower edges rounded, the resulting wide front and back panels having the new mosaic embroideries that Lelong has achieved by utilizing tiny squares of colored metals rather than the beads that have been so freely employed.

QUITE different from the amazing splendor of the evening wraps is the appealing charm of the little taffeta and chiffon capes at Drecoll's. One of these in mousseline de soie, unlined but with a fur collar, is in a salmon pink shade. It has no other trimming than the fur collar and the smocking that draws it in to a fitted shoulder line. This cape is worn over a blue and salmon gown, for pale blue with pale pink is almost as popular as pale pink with pale green.

BOUE SOEURS have made a sleeveless jumper in pale blue broadcloth, to be worn over an underdress of pale blue silk alpaca, with a pleated skirt. This jumper has a great deal of cut English embroidery above the waistline, through the interstices of which a pale pink slip gleams. An extra touch to this delicate costume is a row of buttons up the back of the blouse.

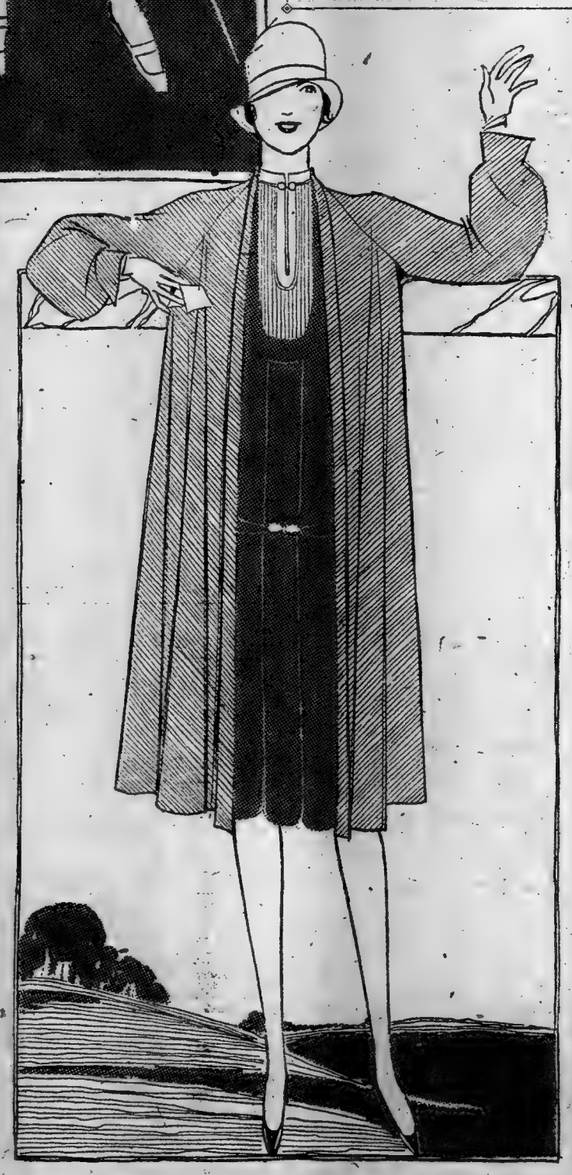
TENNIS belts decidedly French in design have a double buckled front and side sections which connect the narrow strap back part of the belt with the deep gore-like front sections. The ends of the back section have eyelets which permit adjustment to the size desired. These belts, despite the buckles at the side fronts, fasten in the centre by means of three fancy snap clasps. On either side there is a small outside pocket just big enough to hold a handkerchief or an accessory. Suede is the material used in these belts, and they come in all the bright sport colors.



Above—A Semi-Sports Suit of Rose Colored Canton Crepe Designed by Monliere. Illustrates the New Scalloped Line and Separate Vest Effect. The Last Word in Persian Chic Is Expressed in a Smart Sports Suit of Navy Blue Velvet and Cloth, by Magdaleine des Hayes. Interesting Details Are the Lace Trimmed Bouse and Streamer Tie.

Below—An Ensemble of French Authorship for Sports and General Wear Has a Frock of Contrasting Crepe, Which Is Also Used to Line the Coat. Raglan Sleeves and Narrow Rolled-Back Collar Strike a New Note in This Type of Coat.

USE OF FOOTGEAR IN COSTUMES

Part Played by Shoes and Hosiery Takes on New Importance in Ensemble Effects

STYLE predictions for Fall styles in shoes and hosiery were made at the banquet and review of the National Boot and Shoe Manufacturers' Association at the Astor the other evening. The one item stressed by all the speakers was the importance of the awakening of what they termed "shoe consciousness." This is explained by saying that more and more attention is being paid by women and by the better class shops to the style trends in shoes as they relate to the rest of the costume.

SHOES for all occasions were shown. For morning wear or with a rainy day outfit, there were three types of low calf shoes having straps, leather heels and welt soles. The tailleurs were worn with black pumps without straps, or one of the new suede oxfords.

With the afternoon costumes color was given more sway, with the result that many combinations of snakeskin and reptilian leathers were used with plain brown or black kidskin. Evening slippers include satins and metallic brocades.

All of these shoes had spike heels and narrow straps. Many included a combination of both fabric and color. Some of the satin slippers had fancy jeweled ornaments, while the brocaded models depended on color scheme and design.

A new color in satin shoes is honey. This color is not as deep as the blond bois de rose of last season, but if predictions come true, it will be the evening shoe color for next Fall.

STOCKINGS were credited with having a great deal to do with the present fashion trend in shoes, in that they were the one item of a woman's costume that had to fit into the color scheme or ruin a smart effect. French and American-made stockings were shown in a variety of shades to match or harmonize with any outfit. The French stockings were sheer and had fine drop-stitch clocks, while the American hose sponsored the new "V" line heel which is equally appropriate for street or formal wear, color being the deciding factor. An interesting point brought out by the exhibitors was, that when in doubt about a stocking color, one specially suitable to the complexion should be worn.

THE costumes worn by the models were from some of the smartest shops and houses in New York and included many straight-line coats in beaver, tweed mixtures and black cloth. Double fox scarfs were used as collars and worn separately.

NEW THINGS IN THE REALM OF ART

Whitney Studio Shows a Group of Paintings and Sculpture—Life Of the Downtrodden Portrayed in Other Galleries

IT takes the authority of the Whitney Studio Club to convince one that historical scenes of Woods Hole by Franklin L. Gifford are great works of art, but without help one recognizes amusing painting. The paintings are recent, made from early sketches.

Though more sophisticated, Isabel Bishop's interiors are in the same manner. A wicker chair glitters with dots of light emerging from a gloomy room.

The show is in a number of moods. One turns from the serenity of Woods Hole to subway and zoo episodes by Mabel Dwight. In the mind of the painter there seems to be little difference between the two, although she makes rather much of obvious evolution and the silent comment of a Fundamentalist. These are really cartoons that would gain force if they were somewhat more sprightly in the handling. A small boy being taken home in a crowded car all but overdoes his part. He is yawning contageously.

Lloyd Parsons's green forests are delightful. And before one leaves, an alabaster cat by Duncan Ferguson remains to be petted. It is not only a mental attitude that makes it impossible to stroke this cat in the wrong direction; its very contour guides the hand. A group at the Whitney Studio Club—Closes April 24.

The Essentials of Work.

IT may not be justifiable to look with suspicion on portraits done from photographs instead of from life. Still, one feels that, eye to eye with the sitter, the artist would surely find characteristics that the most sensitive lens is too dull to reveal. Hugo Gellert has made drawings of a long list of notables, and for some of these photographs must have sufficed. In many cases he has cleverly reproduced qualities that have become associated in the public mind with the various celebrities represented. The technique is noteworthy. The side of the pencil, with a minimum of strokes, has carved the head.

The painting of New York factory life is much more essential. The spirit is enlarged and not only includes a particular incident but also generalizes protest against slavish labor. The "Sewing Machine Operator" and the "Presser" are really the same persons—even the machines have points in common, symbolizing the force that drives the workers.

The practice of symbolism may become dangerous. The artist in Hugo Gellert is occasionally smothered by the enthusiast trying to tell the whole story. In spite of its stylized form, symbolism is as literary in intention as is the much criticized narrative picture. Hugo Gellert—Neumann's Print Room—Closes April 24.

Light and Heavy Paintings.

PAINTERS are often more seriously artists in their lighter moods. A cheerful note in the landscapes by Joseph Pollet is both emotionally and esthetically happy. The figure paintings are self-conscious and are not innocent of an effort to tell a story—perhaps even to preach a sermon. A certain fashion often seems to run through the week's exhibitions. Just now the downtrodden are being upheld, and the point is made through the medium of a crowded subway train.

The landscapes are another story, simpler and more convincing. Here are houses one might enter, though only a corner shows. Inside, one seems to feel, are space and air. Here are trees one might attempt to climb. Vitality becomes still more intense when the artist leaves the country for the city. "Seventh Avenue and Bleecker Street" is as joyous as a three-ring circus. It takes the Metropolitan Tower to assure one of the locality. Joseph Pollet—The Dudensing Gallery—Closes May 8.

Brilliant Color.

THE water colors by John Whorf are brilliant. It is surprising that he has been able to find pigment sufficiently strong for his purpose. Color is arbitrary. Landscapes are not really so brilliant as this artist makes them; yet color is manipulated so as to create the illusion of fact. Here and there it dances like heat waves rising from sand. After the first excitement is over and one is able to take a sober look around, an insidious doubt enters one's mind. Are these paintings brilliant or are they gaudy? Is the painter fundamentally well informed or only clever?

Abbott Graves has made some even-tempered paintings of American gardens. He apparently knows much about flowers and their way of growing and gives a picture that leads the spectator to respect the interest the artist takes in his subject, but to wonder a little at his lack of enthusiasm.

These two exhibitions will be at the Milch Galleries until April 24.

Architecture.

NEW classification must be continually invented, for the sake of finding reasons for repeated exhibitions. At present Knoedler, with very handsome examples, is giving something of the history of three centuries of etching. He has chosen subjects that deal with architecture. St. James's Hall, etched by Muirhead Bone, is in the process of being demolished, and Joseph Pennell gives a picture of the latest triumph of New York architecture at the moment of its completion. Here is a page from the story of etching and also from the story of building and rebuilding. Etchings of Architecture—The Knoedler Gallery—Closes May 1.

American Designers.

LAST Spring the present writer went to several of the department stores asking for American textiles by American designers. Such a request was looked upon with dismay by the salesmen in charge. How can any one be so stupid as to think there are American designers or so vulgar as to ask for American designs! The salesmen knew the names of all the foreign patterns, however.

The Textile Competition Exhibition at the Art Alliance includes not only the excellent designs contributed this year, but a variety of printed chintzes and silks designed and executed by Americans—Hazel Burnam Slaughter for Cheney's, Marjorie King for Shumacher and Henrietta Reiss for Mallinson's, to mention only three. The department stores may now be wiser than they were a year ago.

"Gates Down," by Charles Burchfield
In Exhibition at the Montross Gallery.

Too much praise cannot be accorded the work of this year's competition. The requirements called for three colors. The color is forthright, juxtaposed so as to give variety within the limitation. The edges are clean, with that decision that marks contemporary art. With much humor, motives have been chosen from the life about one, instead of copied from museums—although there is every indication that the designers are well informed.

Prize winners are Emma P. Garrison, Theodora Van Wagenan, Zilpha L. Bentley, Elsa Tennhardt, Martha Davis, Patricia L. Young, Leslie Hershkowitz, Réne Clarke and Nettie Burton. There is a long list of those honorably mentioned.—Textile Competition—Art Alliance of America—Closes April 30.

Water-Colors.

MODERNS, in an effort to simplify, tend to starve their compositions. Not so Frank London. His "Twin Cherry Trees" grow in a fertile composition in the front garden of a house surrounded by hills. In Mr. Herring's two water-colors there is, however, legitimate starvation. It is interesting to compare them with Paul Rohland's "Merry-Go-Round" and "Roadside Café," where the actual human want may be as great, but where the artist is portraying people who fill their lives with endless gay paraphernalia and can overlook its rickety character.

Flower studies by Varnum Poor are done with a fine ink line and a mere indication of color. They have both the fragile texture of flowers and the health and strength to grow. Lily-of-the-valley leaves, curled into a spiral, seem to expand before your eyes.

Charles Burchfield has called his rushing train "Gates Down." The spectator is grateful for the title, with the assurance it carries of keeping him out of danger. The train itself is a cylinder of speed headed by a light. No conventional steam comes from the engine, but a near-by factory is belching quantities of lazy smoke. Water Colors by American Artists — Montross Gallery — Closes April 24.

Somerset House.

THE National Arts Club is holding an exhibition of architecture, sculpture and decorative painting, made up of familiar work—work that has been seen not only hanging on walls but also in life, round and about the city; on ceilings of office buildings and in parks. Here is an opportunity to test one's own powers of observation—identifying the various buildings from the photographs and attempting put them on their proper street corners.

The Royal Institute of Architects has sent reproductions of drawings by Indigo Jones and Sir William Chambers. Indigo Jones is represented by a triumphal arch that may or may not have been executed; Sir William by the easily identified façade for the rebuilding of Somerset House. Indigo Jones died in Somerset House in 1652, and toward the end of the eighteenth century Sir William Chambers was employed to restore the structure.—Photographs of Recent Buildings, &c. —The National Arts Club.

Other Exhibitions

A MEMORIAL exhibition of the work of the late Albert Humphreys is being held at the Lowenbein Galleries. The artist seems personally to have responded more to sculpture than to painting. His work shows a special fondness for animals. A pair of book ends shows dancing bears, pressing back as bears seem to do in the course of their funny antics. —Albert Humphreys—The Lowenbeim Galleries—Closes April 2.

Arthur C. Banfield is by profession a photographer of portraits. One of the members of the Camera Club studied with him a few years ago in England and was so enthusiastic about the bromoil landscapes he does as a pastime that he induced Mr. Banfield to hold a New York exhibition of all his work. It is held at the Camera Club and will continue until May 31.

John S. Wittrup has painted in old Mexico, New York and Canada, as well as around the Great Lakes and at Cape Ann. The present paintings are of New England. The blue and orange color and the busy little compositions are so characteristic of the way many painters see the sunny coast in Summer that this particular manner might be called the school of the New England Coast painters. The exhibition, at the Babcock Galleries, will close April 24.

A group of conservative American portraits at the City Club gives the impression that artists belonging to this school paint men with more certainty than woman. A foreigner in the group emphasizes the reserved attitude of the native. The impetuous Nicolai Fechin achieves something more assured and more feminine. Men by Americans are done with an accurate observation of the facts, however, and with an air of authority.

A memorial exhibition arranged by the students of the late Clarence H. White will be open at the Art Centre until April 30. It covers the work of Mr. White from the beginning of his career, includes the first prints ever sent by him to public exhibitions, and will be supplemented in an adjoining gallery by portraits of Mr. White made by celebrated photographers.

TRADE CARDS TELL OF THE PAST

Collection of Eighteenth-Century Advertising Bought at Leverhulme Sale Reveals Customs Long Outlived

WHEN the Leverhulme sale was under way recently, the attention paid to paintings, books, tapestries and furniture threw into the background an item of engrossing interest to the collector and the student.

A collection of 1,200 English tradesmen's cards of the eighteenth century sold for $1,800. Thus, there was brought to the front one of those quaint byways down which the collector's wanderings often lead.

Early English and American trade cards, bits of paper rather than pasteboard, elaborately decorated with engraving and lettering, proclaimed the wares and activities of every one from the butcher and the baker to the professional prizefighter, the lunatic keeper and the gentlewoman conducting a select academy for young ladies.

These first examples of direct advertising (for that is what they really amount to when we view them according to present-day standards) reveal in naïve and delightful fashion many quaint customs and idiosyncrasies of the times, modes and manners that receive scant mention from the historians, but supply alluring intimacies of background for the more imposing chronicles of political intrigue and revolution.

Modesty Safeguarded.

If, for example, you would learn of the extreme delicacy with which the feminine ankle and limb were once regarded, consult the early trade cards brought out by shoe shops extolling the inherent honor of their salesmen. One circumspect New York shoe dealer of the early '80s pictures on his card a device to be used in fitting shoes. It is a large shield with a hole in the centre. The lady's foot slipped through the hole and the shield effectively concealed her limb from the glances of ogling rakes who might be passing.

On the other hand, as far back as the eighteenth century women had invaded fields hitherto regarded as sacred to men. Thus we have the highly decorated announcement of Mrs. Holts of London, who had so far departed from feminine traditions as to become an importer, the head of a flourishing trade between England and Italy. Fine "sattins, padefois, velvets and damasks" from across the seas were on display at her warehouse, besides Italian wines, olives, anchovies and Parmesan cheese.

Still more contemptuous of the economic barrier between the sexes was Jeanne Tempell, who stood ready "at the sign of the woman chimbley sweeper" to battle the soft coal menace of her day.

Elizabeth Barton Stent had a bit more regard for the conventions. Although she advertised herself as selling backgammon tables, dice boxes and other instruments of the devil's pastime, she also counted genteel ivory thimbles and needlecases among her wares.

Attractive from a pictorial standpoint are the trade cards of women conducting frock, hat and silk shops. These reveal, in the fashions pictured, the rise and fall of the hoop, the invasion of the bustle, the vogue of the eighteen-inch pompadour and the indignities of simplicity brought in by the French Revolution.

Famous Artists Employed.

Much of the pictorial art of these trade cards is extremely good, for the roll of the early artists and engravers who catered to the demands of the tradesmen contained such illustrious names as William Hogarth, John Baker, one of the original R. A.'s, and Smirke, Academician also and famous marine painter.

Speaking of Hogarth calls to mind the fact that even in the days before the Marquis of Queensberry, Jack Kearns and the New York State Boxing Commission came into existence prize fighters commanded the best. Hogarth was employed to engrave the trade card of the notorious James Figg, first heavyweight champion of the world. Figg advertised himself as "master of ye noble art of self defense. Teaches gentlemen ye use of ye small backsword and quarterstaff."

Related to the gymnasium were the cupping establishments. From their trade cards one gathers that these were somewhat akin to the modern Turkish bath, and that the cupper was a slight variation of the energetic rubber. Thus, on an ornate card decorated with many intricate flower designs, twining themselves about an elaborate frame of scrollwork, John Rigg calls attention to his establishment, "where gentlemen only may be always accommodated (if not full) in the best and neatest manner with Lodging, Sweating, Bathing or Cupping, and with the utmost Decorum as has always been kept and preserved for near an Hundred Years."

Nor were these early advertisement writers without their poetic moments. Like the gentlemen who are now framing publicity on Florida real estate, they frequently lapsed into hyperbole. Witness this perfumer's card:

"Now the gentle gales, Fanning their Odoriferous Wings, Dispense Native Perfumes; & whisper whence they stole those balmy spoils."

George III lent himself to the blandishments of a quack doctor, on whose trade card appears a picture of the sovereign, with the doctor kneeling at the royal feet. The caption reads: "His Majesty on the Esplanade at Weymouth graciously accepting a Box of Chings Patent Worm Lozenges which was presented to him as a Patent Medicine."

The privilege of writing "purveyors to His Majesty the King" has ever been coveted by tradesmen; but it is difficult to conceive of a modern London shopkeeper who would dare the frankness of a certain Eleanor Brainiff, who boldly displayed on her card: "Bugg Destroyer to His Majesty."

Kings are not, however, the only persons of eminence who decorate these cards. The tradesman believed in suiting his adornment to the nature of the goods sold. Thus, at "Sir Isaac Newton's Head" were sold "Mathematical, Philosophical and Optical Instruments." Booksellers headed their cards with portraits of Ben Jonson, Chaucer, Erasmus, Shakespeare and Virgil. "The Hogarth Head" was a printshop.

The progress of higher learning is set forth in the following manner by one of the polite academies for the instruction of the youthful mind: "Young gentlemen are instructed in the various branches of English and French, including washing, bookkeeping, mathematics and the use of the globes, £30 per annum. N. B.—Young gentlemen wearing light trousers, &c., the washing will be 10 shillings per year extra."

Improved Coffins.

A gruesome light is cast on the state of experimental medicine by the undertakers' cards, featuring "improved coffins, fastening on such a principle as to render it impracticable for grave robbers to open them. This security must afford great consolation at an era when it is a well authenticated fact that nearly 1,000 bodies are annually appropriated for the purpose of dissection."

Among the English cards printed in the eighteenth century we find listed such strange vocations as those of "balladmonger," the gentleman who furnished lovesick but unpoetical youths with odes celebrating the charms of their fair ones; "calculator," an expert at figuring on chances in lotteries; "purveyor of asses' milk"; "spatterdash (spat) maker"; "corn cutter and nail operator," the eighteenth century chiropodist and the manicurist; "dealers in elephants' teeth," probably an ivory merchant; "shampooing surgeon."

Advertising, whether it be of the eighteenth or of the twentieth century, is a history book in itself.

ALLIANCE FRANÇAISE CONDUCTING A "BETTER FRENCH" CAMPAIGN

THOUGH pessimists maintain that France is retrogressing as to population, the French language appears to be holding its own, if not making gains, according to a recent report of the Alliance Française, an organization devoted to the improvement of the tongue and to its extension in the colonies and in foreign countries.

Paul Labbé, Secretary of the society, gave figures showing that in the year 1925 the work of the alliance had surpassed its expectations. The number of students attending the school of practical French maintained by the alliance, which was 1,592 in 1924, rose to 2,604 the following year.

Many new branches of the alliance have been formed in the Provinces, particularly in the North, and have organized lectures and other social events to arouse interest in better French and to add to the funds of the society. In Paris the alliance arranges weekly lectures where distinguished literary men discuss Taine, Rostand, Lemaitre, Debussy, Daudet and other writers.

"The Alliance Française will have accomplished its purpose," said M. Labbé, "if the French people who have not yet taken part in its work, upon visiting the schools where the children are taught the old French songs, or when meeting in their travels persons speaking excellent French, are impressed and find that these are consequences of the activities of the alliance."

A Correction.
